Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 228) to amend the United States homestead law in its application to Alaska, and for other purposes, which has passed the Senate with an amendment, covering a slight modification of the bill as it passed the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 228) to amend the United States homestead law in its application to Alaska, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16460, the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] will take the chair. He not being present temporarily, the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] will take the chair until he arrives.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, with Mr. RAKER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subsistence of the Army: Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue as rations to troops, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, nurses, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, general prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made), Indians employed with the Army as guides and scouts, and general prisoners at posts; for subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army transport service; hot coffee for troops traveling when supplied with cooked or travel rations; meals for recruiting parties and applicants for enlistment while under observation; for sales to officers and enlisted men of the Army: Provided, That the sum of $12,000 is authorized to be expended for supplying meals or furnishing commutation of rations to enlisted men of the Regular Army and the National Guard who may be competitors in the national rifle match: Provided further, That no competitor shall be entitled to commutation of rations in excess of $1.50 per day, and when meals are furnished no greater expense than that sum per man per day for the period the contest is in progress shall be incurred. For payments: Of commutation of rations to the cadets of the United States Military Academy in lieu of the regular established ration, at the rate of 40 cents per ration; of the regulation allowances of commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men on furlough, enlisted men and male and female nurses when stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, and when traveling on detached duty where it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind, enlisted men selected to contest for places or prizes in departments and Army rifle competitions while traveling to and from places of contest, male and female nurses on leaves of absence, applicants for enlistment, and general prisoners while traveling under orders; of commutation of rations in lieu of the regular established ration for members of the Nurse Corps (female) while on duty in hospital, at 40 cents per ration, and for enlisted men, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, and general prisoners sick therein, at the rate of 30 cents per ration (except that at the general hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., 40 cents per ration and at other general hospitals 40 cents per ration are authorized for enlisted patients therein), to be paid to the surgeon in charge; advertising; for providing prizes to be established by the Secretary of War for enlisted men of the Army who graduate from the Army schools for bakers and cooks, the total amount of such prizes at the various schools not to exceed $900 per annum; for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, testing, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army: Provided further, That the officers and enlisted men of the Navy and the Marine Corps shall be permitted to purchase subsistence supplies at the same price as is charged the officers and the enlisted men of the Army; and the officers and the enlisted men of the Army shall be permitted to purchase subsistence supplies from the Navy and Marine Corps at the same price as is charged the officers and the enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, $13,000,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, on line 1, of page 20, I move to strike out "40" and insert "50."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Amend, on page 20, line 1, by striking out the figures "40" and inserting "50."

Mr. MANN. I was just going to ask the gentleman about that.

Mr. HAY. That was a typographical error. It was always 50 cents at Fort Bayard, where they have tuberculous patients.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember at this moment whether or not the same thing occurs in other parts of the bill. At the bottom of page 18 and at the top of page 19 you provide authorization for meals or commutation of rations for enlisted men in the Regular Army and in the National Guard who may be competitors in the national rifle match. What is the status of the men in the National Guard who are drafted now into the Army? They are no longer in the National Guard.

Mr. HAY. They have not yet been drafted.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but they are not yet in the Regular Army.

Mr. HAY. They would no longer be in the National Guard.

Mr. MANN. Yes; they would no longer be in the National Guard, and they would not be in the Regular Army.

Mr. HAY. No.

Mr. MANN. They would not be described as "enlisted men of the Regular Army or the National Guard."

Mr. HAY. No; they would not.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether in this particular case it makes any difference, but it might. I think there ought to be some description, some short term fixed, by which we could name that branch of the service. Is there any now that the gentleman knows of? When we speak of the Regular Army we know what that is. When we speak of the National Guard, we know what that is. We speak of the volunteer forces, and we know what that is. But what is the title of the men who have been drafted from the National Guard into the Army service?

Mr. HAY. I think it is "drafted forces of the United States."

Mr. MANN. I think there ought to be some title besides the title of "drafted forces"——

Mr. HAY. From the National Guard. I do not know exactly what name is given.

Mr. MANN. The first section of the Army reorganization act provides:

The Army of the United States shall consist of the Regular Army, the Volunteer Army, the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, the National Guard while in the service of the United States, and such other land forces as are now or may hereafter be authorized by law.

But these men are those "other land forces authorized by law." You ought to find some way of describing them, and I would not use the term "drafted" in the description if I had my way about it.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will try to think up some title, I will be glad.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman would not suggest changing the language of this section at this time, would he?

Mr. MANN. I would not, because I do not know what the change ought to be. But if they are to have rifle matches during the next year, and the National Guard is drafted into the service, and is in the regular service, I know of no reason why they should not have the same chance to compete as anyone else.

Mr. McKENZIE. But if my colleague will permit, this emergency, which is likely to be a war, may be over, and the National Guard may be mustered back or discharged from the service.

Mr. MANN. I am not suggesting striking out the term "National Guard," but I was suggesting the possibility of inserting another term which would include them while they are in the national service.

Mr. McKENZIE. Of course this section is written for peace times; in other words, to cover the Army and the National Guard in time of peace, and I think it would be unwise to make a change in this section.

Mr. MANN. Does not my colleague think that when the National Guard are drafted into the service of the United States they should have the same rights that anybody else in the service has?

Mr. McKENZIE. They will probably get all the rifle practice they want.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they will or not. I hope they will not.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not mean killing people.

Mr. MANN. But if they went into rifle matches along with the Regular Army, the Regular Army men would have their subsistence and the others would not.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I move to strike out the last two words. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois, and others who may be interested, to the fact that section 101 of the Army reorganization act of June 3, 1916, refers to a situation such as he suggests in this language:

The National Guard, when called as such into the service of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but they have not been called as such into the service of the United States.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They are assembling——

Mr. MANN. They were first called as such, but we passed a resolution here which when it passes the Senate will authorize the President to draft them. They are not then called as the National Guard. It expressly provides that they are discharged from the National Guard.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman think they will lose their identity as National Guardsmen after being drafted?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. That is what the law provides.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think they will.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides that they do lose their identity as National Guardsmen, and the resolution that we passed the other day provides the same thing during their service in the Regular Army. All I want to do is to cover them by some description.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster Corps, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States disciplinary barracks; also ranges, stoves, coffee roasters, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts, in the field, and when traveling, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; and the necessary power for the operation of moving-picture machines; authorized issues of candles and matches; for furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men; contract surgeons when stationed at and occupying public quarters at military posts; for officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools, and for recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, offices, the buildings erected at private cost, in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902; for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries, including bake ovens and apparatus pertaining thereto, and the repair thereof; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; ice for issue to organizations of enlisted men and officers at such places as the Secretary of War may determine, and for preservation of stores; for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its island possessions; for the authorized issues of laundry materials for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and for applicants for enlistment while held under observation; authorized issues of soap; for hire of employees; for the necessary furniture, textbooks, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries; for the purchase and issue of instruments, office furniture, stationery, and other authorized articles for the use of officers' schools at the several military posts, commercial newspapers, market reports, etc.; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchen and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage, salt, and vinegar for the horses, mules, oxen, and other draft and riding animals of the Quartermaster Corps at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of Cavalry and batteries of Artillery and such companies of Infantry and Scouts as may be mounted; for remounts and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; for seeds and implements required for the raising of forage at remount depots and on military reservations in the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands and for labor and expenses incident thereto, including, when specifically authorized by the Secretary of War, the cost of irrigation: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to remove any suspensions or disallowances in the accounts of Capt. Sam Van Leer, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, for expenditures made in connection with the establishment of an irrigation system at the Fort Keogh Remount Depot, Montana; for straw for soldiers' bedding, stationery, typewriters and exchange of same, including blank books and blank forms for the Quartermaster Corps, certificates for discharged soldiers, and for printing department orders and reports, $8,700,000: Provided, That no part of the appropriations for the Quartermaster Corps shall be expended on printing unless the same shall be done at the Government Printing Office, or by contract after due notice and competition, except in such cases as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice of competition, and in cases where it is impracticable to have the necessary printing done by contract the same may be done, with the approval of the Secretary of War, by the purchase of material and hire of the necessary labor for the purpose. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, whenever the ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants shall not come in competition with private enterprise for sale to the public, and in the opinion of the Secretary of War it becomes necessary to the economical use and administration of such ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants as have been or may hereafter be established in pursuance of law, surplus ice may be disposed of, laundry work may be done for other branches of the Government, and surplus electric light and power may be sold on such terms and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the funds received from such sales and in payment for such laundry work shall be used to defray the cost of operation of said ice, laundry, and electric plants, and the sales and expenditures herein provided for shall be accounted for in accordance with the methods prescribed by law, and any sums remaining after such cost of maintenance and operation have been defrayed shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation from which the cost of operation of such plant is paid: Provided further, That not exceeding $4,590 of the amount appropriated herein may be expended to reimburse the Apache prisoners of war for approximately 51 miles of reservation fencing constructed by them on the military reservation of Fort Sill, Okla.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BORLAND. I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). Two gentlemen reserve points of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BORLAND. I make three points of order on that paragraph. The first one is to the words on line 19, page 22:

Including, when specifically authorized by the Secretary of War, the cost of irrigation.

Second, to the words, beginning in line 21, page 22:

Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to remove any suspensions or disallowances in the accounts of Capt. Sam Van Leer, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, for expenditures made in connection with the establishment of an irrigation system at the Fort Keogh Remount Depot, Montana.

Third, to the language, beginning on page 24, line 10:

Provided further, That not exceeding $4,590 of the amount appropriated herein may be expended to reimburse the Apache prisoners of war for approximately 51 miles of reservation fencing constructed by them on the military reservation of Fort Sill, Okla.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman want to make a point of order without any explanation? Of course, they are all subject to the point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. To the language on page 22, unless the gentleman wants to make an explanation, I will make the point of order.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman is going to make the point of order, no matter what explanation I make, I do not care to take the time to make the explanation. I can say to the gentleman, however, that what was done last year at that particular reservation saved the Government $25,000. Of course, if the gentleman wants to make a point of order, it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. We have a method of providing irrigation, and whether in a specific instance it saves money or loses money is a question of considerable doubt, of course, on the evidence. In some cases it may, and in others it may not.

Mr. HAY. This is on a military reservation. It has nothing to do with the general subject of irrigation elsewhere. The irrigation was done on this reservation for the purpose of raising hay and forage at this remount station, to feed the horses there. In order to get the forage and the hay it was necessary that the land on that reservation should be irrigated. It was done, and the result of it was that the Government saved, in the purchase of forage and hay, $25,000 last year.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, there is no means of telling how far this proposition might go, if the Secretary of War had the power to authorize irrigation plants.

Mr. HAY. But this is only in one particular place.

Mr. BORLAND. There might be an instance in which it saved $25,000. The result, however, in the long run, is that the Government does not make money by raising its own hay.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I insist on my point of order on those two paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, I will reserve the point of order on the $4,590 to pay the Apache prisoners of war for building a fence. I want to ask the chairman of the committee when the work of building that fence was done?

Mr. HAY. That was done some years ago.

Mr. BORLAND. I supposed it was. Has any effort been made to pay them for it since?

Mr. HAY. Yes; there was an appropriation in the bill last year, and somebody made a point of order on it and it went out. They built 51 miles of reservation fencing on this military reservation, and this is a request for the authority of law for the payment of the money which has really been appropriated, but which has been held out of the appropriation because under the law as it was drawn there could not be a disbursement of the money.

Mr. BORLAND. Is not that a pretty good thing for prisoners of war to do—to build fencing? Is it necessary to pay them?

Mr. FERRIS. They were removed to New Mexico—259 of them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is the fence within which is inclosed the best buffalo herd in the United States. This land is utilized for the preservation of this remaining herd. It is in the Wichita Mountains just west of the fort and is a part of the military reserve.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs how long ago has it been since we had these Apache prisoners of war?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They were removed, I think, three years ago——

Mr. HAY. Removed by law?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; to the Mescalero Reservation in New Mexico.

Mr. HAY. And they had to leave the fence behind them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly, and we have had that condition of affairs for some time. I think the Congress was wise in moving them back to the old reservation.

Mr. BORLAND. Is there any hardship in making prisoners of war build fences?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It furnished work for the Indians while they were prisoners of war.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. HAY. The fact that they want pay for the work already done when they lived on the reservation when the work was done and now is being used by the Government, it seems to me constitutes a good reason why we should pay an honest claim.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order?

Mr. BORLAND. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE. In my judgment, the items are both just items and ought to be paid. However, I would be willing to agree with the gentleman from Missouri that the language on page 22, in lines 19 and 20, "including, when specifically authorized by the Secretary of War, the cost of irrigation"; I think that language ought to be stricken from the bill, and if that language is stricken out of the bill, leaving the responsibility where it belongs, on Congress, to authorize any of these projects, I think we ought to pay these two bills. I believe it is a matter of justice, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. I think it had better go out at this time. It is possible that the claim of Capt. Van Leer ought to be paid, but it ought to go before the Claims Committee. I think the gentleman is right about the general authority to establish irrigation work. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 10, in place of language stricken out insert:
"Hereafter all contracts for supplies for the Army shall specify delivery either at the place where the supplies are to be used or at the nearest convenient point on a land-grant railroad for shipment to the place of consumption."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 10, insert in place of the language stricken out:
"Provided further, That no money shall be expended out of the appropriations in this bill for supplies for the Army except under contracts which specify delivery either at the place where the supplies are to be used or at some convenient point on a land-grant railroad for shipment to the place of consumption at the option of the contractor."

Mr. HAY. I make a point of order on that.

Mr. BORLAND. It is not subject to a point of order; it is a limitation on the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri on the point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this is a limitation on the appropriations carried in this bill. I do not think it is subject to a point of order. It specifies that the appropriations in this bill shall not be used except under contracts specifying the method of delivery. There are a number of instances where such limitations are put on appropriation bills.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is in the form of a limitation, but in substance it is a requirement on the department which is a change of existing law. You can put into an amendment any kind of a limitation you please that something shall not be done, unless—and it is a positive change of law. But although you may offer an amendment in the form of a limitation, it is not in fact a limitation when it changes substantive, positive law. Here is a requirement in the form of a limitation that a contract shall be of a particular form, changing the existing law on that subject. I do not think, under the guise of a limitation, merely because you commence "no money appropriation under this act shall be expended," that of itself is a mere limitation, because you might commence any legislative proposition under the sun with the provision that no money shall be expended under this act and then follow it up with positive legislation, as this does. Therefore I think the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. HAY. I will add to that that the law in regard to contracts entered into by the War Department, or by officers of the War Department authorized to enter into contracts, are of many and various kinds. There is a law, for example, that all contracts where the sum is under $500 shall not be entered into in writing at all, and the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri would repeal all of that law. I do not think that by inserting language which sounds like a limitation you can repeal and upset all the laws in regard to the contracts which now exist.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, we do not repeal the law in regard to contracts that now exist. We simply provide that a certain provision shall appear in the contract, namely, that the supply shall be delivered at the place of consumption or some convenient point of shipment on a land-grant railroad at the option of the contractor. If it is not good as a limitation, it is good under the Holman Act, for it constitutes a retrenchment, for it is manifest that it does save expense to the Government.

Mr. HAY. I will take issue with the gentleman on that.

Mr. BORLAND. I will explain to the gentleman why it does.

Mr. HAY. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he provides that all of these supplies contracted for shall be at some place near a land-grant railroad.

Mr. BORLAND. At a land-grant railroad.

Mr. HAY. Or at a land-grant railroad. That would mean that all supplies contracted for, whether in the East or in the West, should be sent to a land-grant railroad.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is making too broad a statement about that.

Mr. HAY. That is what the language of the amendment is.

Mr. BORLAND. It simply provides that when the bids are offered and the contract is made the contractor can specify whether he will deliver it at the point of consumption or at some convenient point on a land-grant railroad. It is a matter of law, a matter of common knowledge of the chairman and of the Members of this House, that the land-grant railroads are under obligation to give the Government a specified rate upon its shipments, which rate is lower than the rate fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission for commercial freight shipments. The result of that is that the Government is the only person in this country that can demand and receive a rebate from a railroad, and then only from a land-grant railroad. If the Government takes its supplies at a point on a land-grant railroad for shipment to a post, the supplies belong to the Government when they are delivered to the point of shipment on the land-grant railroad, and, belonging to the Government, they can be shipped by the land-grant rate; but if they are shipped entirely to the post or place of consumption by the contractor, the rate charged upon them must be the commercial rate.

I investigated that matter carefully in regard to the shipments of supplies to the Government along the Mexican border, and I found that freight rates from El Paso to Fort Huachuca are almost the highest freight rates in the United States, and yet hay and oats are going to that post by way of El Paso at the commercial rates because they are not accepted by the Government until they reach the point of consumption. If they had been accepted by the Government at El Paso, or at Memphis, or Kansas City, or at Omaha or Minneapolis, or any place where there are great hay and grain markets, in this country, and had belonged to the Government, they would have gone forward as Government shipments at land-grant rates, and would have reached most of the western posts by means of land-grant railroads. I took that matter up with the Secretary of War and pointed that out to him. He said that in the case of that post at least he was going to issue orders in the future that the inspection should not be at Fort Huachuca, but should be at the point where the contractor was shipping the stuff. The Government maintains inspection offices at Omaha, Minneapolis, Kansas City, and the supplies can be inspected every day by the Government and received by the Government in large quantities, and when they go forward for distribution to the western posts, they could go forward over land-grant railroads as Government property. There is no reason why this power to compel the railroads to give the Government special rates should not be enforced, why we should continue to buy supplies at the point of consumption, thus compelling the contractor to bid on the basis of commercial rates. All that is needed in order to change that situation is a change in the specifications of the contract providing that the contractor may bid for shipment for delivery at a point on a land-grant railroad.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; but before the gentleman interrupts me I want to remind him that we took that same question up in respect to the shipment of upland prairie hay from Missouri and Kansas to the Philippines.

Mr. ANTHONY. And the department complied by letting the contract to ship over the land-grant railroads. I want to remind the gentleman what the Secretary of War told him when he pointed this out to him the other day. Is it not a matter of regulation on the part of the department?

Mr. BORLAND. I will read from a letter which was written by the Secretary of War:

> The department commander, southern department, has been instructed to consider deliveries at points other than the post of Fort Huachuca, Ariz., when future advertisements for supplies are issued, in order that the Government may take advantage of any land-grant deductions.
> Very respectfully, LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
> Secretary of War.

Mr. Chairman, I think the Government has discretion to do it, and I think that Congress authorizing that power to be put into the contract is not changing existing law in any respect, but we are simply making a regulation entirely in harmony and consistent with existing law. The case about which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] speaks was this: The hay for the troops in the Philippines was formerly bought from the Pacific Coast States, because that was the cheapest point of delivery for the contractors. It was formerly impossible for them to buy hay in the interior of the country because the contractor must ship it at commercial rates to the Pacific coast. The gentleman from Kansas and myself took that up, and, after demonstrating that the hay in the interior of the country was as good as the Pacific coast hay in nutritive value, we were then met with the question that the specifications required the delivery on the Pacific coast. We succeeded in having those specifications changed so that when a contract was called for for hay for the Philippines it was to be bid on, at the option of the bidder, either for delivery on the Missouri River or on the Pacific coast. The result in one case was a saving to the Government on a contract for hay of $30,000, to my certain knowledge, and the upland Missouri and Kansas prairie hay went forward to the Philippines, and has been going forward and is going forward to-day, whenever there is a crop in that part of the country. So that no point of order lies against this as a change of existing law, and no point of order lies against it as not being a valid limitation; and, in addition to that, it is a retrenchment upon Government expenditures.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Admitting the possibility that such a provision might in ordinary times be of some benefit or saving to the Government, would the gentleman suggest that in the present emergency it is well to tie the hands of the Quartermaster's Department in any way whatever?

Mr. BORLAND. Why, yes; I think that we are not tying his hands; but we are enlarging our opportunities to get supplies promptly and cheaply. If we say the contractor can bid for delivery either at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., or Kansas City, you will find ten contractors will bid where only one bid before. That is the fact about the matter. It is a clean business proposition.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman, of course, understands that in a time like this the easiest way and the quickest way to get supplies to men who are out in the field, and no supplies available perhaps, is by the safest and most prudent way, regardless of expense?

Mr. BORLAND. But if the gentleman was a hay shipper, would he take the chance of shipping hay to Fort Huachuca, Ariz., and take the chance of having it rejected, or would he prefer to take the chances of having it rejected at the central markets, like Minneapolis, Omaha, or Kansas City, where it could be disposed of? The gentleman would take that into consideration in making his bid and make the Government a better proposition, if he had the hay at a central point, where, if it was rejected by the Government, he could get it on the market without loss.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If I were assembling troops in the field under emergency circumstances, I would take any opportunity to get supplies for men and forage for animals regardless of red tape.

Mr. BORLAND. That is it, exactly. This will bring ten bids to one under the present rule.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would leave it to the discretion of those who were purchasing these supplies and give them the chance to collect the character of supplies needed at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. BORLAND. Let us cut the red tape, then, and adopt this amendment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman's suggestion means that they must be taken to a certain point.

Mr. BORLAND. No; an option is given and then if the bid is not accepted the option amounts to nothing. If he is not the lowest and best bidder he does not get the contract. If he had a bid specifying delivery to a land-grant railroad——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It may be that in normal times some such an arrangement might have merit, but I am speaking of the stress of the present situation in which there ought to be as little red tape as possible in order to give the quickest use of this material needed.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no red tape connected with the proposition. It cuts a good deal of the red tape off that now exists.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). The amendment submitted by the gentleman from Missouri is as follows:

> Provided further, That no money shall be expended out of the appropriation in this bill, for supplies for the Army, except under contracts which specify delivery either at the place where the supplies are to be used, or at some convenient point on a land-grant railroad for shipment to the place of consumption, at the option of the contractor.

The point of order is made that this amendment is not a limitation, but a provision making new law.

A limitation to be sustained must be upon the appropriation, and not an affirmative limitation of official functions.

A long line of decisions on the subject of limitations holds that the limitation, to be in order must be in effect simply a negative bar pressing upon the appropriation of the money, and that any amendment which, directly or indirectly, imposes upon any officer a duty in the expenditure of the money is obnoxious to a point of order. (4 Hinds', p. 655.)

Rulings upon the subject of limitations have not been consistent by any means; they have gone through something like an evolution. The decisions have tended however to establish and make clear that where the proposition submitted as a limitation might be construed by the executive or administrative officer as a modification of statute, a change of existing law, or new law, it can not be sustained as a limitation.

A few precedents in this connection may be appropriately cited.

On March 24, 1904, the following amendment was offered to the Post Office bill:

> Provided further, That no money hereby appropriated shall be expended in the payment of salaries to rural delivery carriers, at a less sum for their services, than $720 per annum.

A point of order to this amendment was sustained. (4 Hinds, p. 667.)

On January 23, 1906, the following amendment was offered to the urgent deficiency bill:

> Provided, That no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be used for the payment of transportation charges upon American vessels where said charges are more than 20 per cent in excess of similar transportation charges upon foreign vessels.

A point of order to this amendment was sustained. (4 Hinds, p. 669.)

In December, 1906, the following amendment was offered to the legislative appropriation bill:

Provided, That no part of the compensation provided by this act shall be paid to the Public Printer unless he shall, in printing documents authorized by law, or ordered by Congress, or either branch thereof, conform in the spelling thereof to the rules of orthography recognized and used by accepted dictionaries of the English language.

A point of order was sustained. (4 Hinds, p. 673.)

The following amendment was made to the Agricultural bill in February, 1896:

Provided, That no part of the $8,000, for compensation of the Secretary of Agriculture provided for by this bill, shall be available, or payable until the said Secretary shall have expended for seeds the amount appropriated in said act approved March 1895, and shall have purchased, and distributed the seeds provided for in said act.

A point of order was sustained. (4 Hinds, p. 675.)

In February, 1907, the following amendment was offered to the Post Office appropriation bill:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in payment for transportation of the mails by railroad routes where the average weight of mails per day has been computed by the use of a divisor less than the whole number of days such mails have been weighed.

A point of order was sustained. (4 Hinds, p. 672.)

The following amendment was offered to the Post Office appropriation bill, on April 13, 1906:

Provided, That not to exceed $4,200,000 of said sum so appropriated shall be expended for horse hire and wagon equipment for rural mail service.

A point of order was sustained. (4 Hinds, p. 653.)

The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Virginia one question. This amendment provides that no payment shall be made out of the appropriations for supplies except under contracts of a certain indicated character. Are there any such contracts as that to-day in the Army?

Mr. HAY. No.

The CHAIRMAN. No such contracts in respect to the terms provided for by this amendment?

Mr. HAY. I am not able to say; I do not know whether there are or not. I believe that the Quartermaster's Department, which is very ably conducted, will take advantage of everything they can in order to save the Government any extra expense. There may be such contracts. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. But so far as the gentleman is advised he is not advised that there are?

Mr. HAY. I am not.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, if there are no such present contracts, and existing law does not require them, then it is perfectly clear that no supplies for the Army could be purchased by the appropriations provided by this bill until all the contracts relating to the same were conformed to the Borland amendment. In other words the substantial effect of the Borland amendment is to provide in this respect a form of contract for the purchase of supplies out of the present appropriation. There is certainly more of affirmative requirement, than of limitation in this amendment.

The Chair therefore, is of opinion that the amendment is subject to the point of order, and sustains the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies: For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including transportation of the troops when moving either by land or water, and of their baggage, including the cost of packing and crating; for transportation of recruits and recruiting parties; of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; for travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge; of persons on their discharge from the United States disciplinary barracks or from any place in which they have been held under a sentence of dishonorable discharge and confinement for more than six months, or from the Government Hospital for the Insane after transfer thereto from such barracks or place, to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect), provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment; of supplies furnished to the militia for the permanent equipment thereof; of the necessary agents and other employees, including per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4 for those authorized to receive the per diem allowance; of clothing and equipage and other quartermaster stores from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipment; of ordnance and ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; for payment of wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; for transportation of funds of the Army; for the hire of employees; for the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of invoice be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States, and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on condition that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulation as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provision only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: And provided further, That nothing in the preceding provisos shall be construed to prevent the accounting officers of the Government from making full payment to land-grant railroads for transportation of property or persons where the courts of the United States have held that such property or persons do not come within the scope of the deductions provided for in the land-grant acts; for the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals in such numbers as are actually required for the service, including reasonable provision for replacing unserviceable animals; for the purchase, hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of such harness, wagons, carts, drays, other vehicles, and motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, as are required for the transportation of troops and supplies, and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several depots; for the hire of teamsters and other employees; for the purchase and repair of ships, boats, and other vessels required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for expenses of sailing public transports and other vessels on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, $12,000,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I would at this time offer an amendment increasing this appropriation, but the War Department has not been able to give me the figures upon which I could do that, but I am informed by the War Department that they will ask Congress in the near future to give them an inincreased appropriation for transportation when they are able to furnish the figures and the estimates, so that Congress will be properly advised when it makes the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I take it that, owing to the situation at present in reference to the Army, there will be an increased expense in the estimates over probably every branch of the service beyond that contemplated when this bill was made up?

Mr. HAY. That is true.

Mr. MANN. No one, probably, is yet able to formulate exactly what should be done?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman any idea whether they will have the information so the Senate can increase the items in this bill, or whether they intend to ask Congress to pass a further bill, or a lump-sum appropriation, or to include the items in a deficiency bill for the next year?

Mr. HAY. Well, my information is that they expect to include the items in a deficiency bill and be able to give the Committee on Appropriations various estimates under each item, so that Congress will know just for what we are appropriating.

Mr. MANN. Well, I take it that we will pass the deficiency bill very early, probably for this fiscal year, which of course ends this week.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And there will have to be increased appropriations over what are carried now in this bill for the next fiscal year?

Mr. HAY. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HAY. But they will first send up items to be put in the general deficiency bill to cover deficiencies created before the 1st of July. After that they will send up estimates, if Congress should remain in session—which, I take it, it will do—for the purpose of providing, as far as possible, for any expenses which may be incurred, so far as they can foresee them, during the next fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the items in this bill would probably cover all the expenditures until the next session of Congress. They certainly would cover them for quite a while.

Mr. HAY. Not all the items. For instance, take the item of transportation.

Mr. MANN. The item of transportation, of $12,000,000, would cover all the transportation for some little time, but not until the end of the next fiscal year.

Mr. HAY. No.

Mr. MANN. I take it that they will have plenty of time in which to prepare their estimates.

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly. There are some items, however, in this bill to which, when we reach them, I propose to offer increases.

Mr. MANN. That is where the gentleman can see what the necessities will be?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice the language on page 28, line 19:

And provided further, That nothing in the preceding provisos shall be construed to prevent the accounting officers of the Government from making full payment to land-grant railroads for transportation of property or persons where the courts of the United States have held that such property or persons do not come within the scope of the deductions provided for in the land-grant acts.

That seems to be new language.

Mr. HAY. That is the result of the decision of the Court of Claims, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. Just exactly what does that mean? If the railroads or the transportation does not come within the terms of the land-grant act, we can not take advantage of any special rates, anyway, can we?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman it is put in there by the War Department, and it was explained by Gen. Sharpe in the hearings. I believe we were told it was the result of the decision of the Comptroller.

Mr. BORLAND. It says "the courts of the United States have held. The decision of the comptroller would not be sufficient in that kind of a case.

Mr. HAY. As I say, the Court of Claims.

Mr. BORLAND. I call the chairman's attention to the fact that, on page 27, lines 18 and 19, it says:

But in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid.

Is this new language a limitation on the 50 per cent? I thought the chairman would perhaps be familiar with it.

Mr. HAY. I am not very familiar with it, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I thought possibly the chairman of the committee had given some investigation to that and would be able to give us exactly the status of this legal decision. It is apparent that at a time like this, when we must spend a large amount of money anyway for our military service, the Government ought to take advantage of its land-grant rates in every possible case. I am surprised and astonished to find that the Quartermaster's Department has not done so. It does not seem to me that any exceptions should be made that would permit him to fail to do so in the future, except in the sole case where the courts of the United States have decided that our land-grant rates do not apply to that particular kind of shipment. That seems to be the force of this language. If that is the force of it, I do not see that it is necessary in the bill, but probably it does not do any harm. But in all other cases where it is possible for the Government to take advantage of the land-grant rates on these roads that were constructed by gifts of land and Government bonds the Government ought to do so. If there ever was a time when the Government needed that advantage it needs it to-day. I am very much surprised to find that that provision, giving the privilege of the Government to reduce the cost of its Quartermaster's Department, has not been universally taken advantage of. Only when their attention is specifically called to it by some Member of Congress who points out a concrete case where they are violating the privileges that they have under the law do they then change their methods and take the land-grant rates.

I have had three or four cases where I have specifically called their attention to it, and in nearly every case they would accept the land-grant rates. But it seems to me it takes a special act of Congress to do it. We ought to require the Quartermaster's Department to take advantage of the land-grant rates in every possible case. If they have to ship hay or oats to these Government posts, or any other kind of supplies, they ought to take them from the nearest points on the land-grant railroad in place of any other railroad, and their bids ought to be made along that line. If they can take it from a central point in the center of the United States, where they have a depot quartermaster, they ought to take it from there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That hereafter when, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, the vessels of the Army transport service can be so used without interfering with their availability for military service, or when cargo space on such vessels is available without displacing military supplies, transportation thereon may be provided for merchandise of American production consigned to residents and mercantile firms of the noncontiguous territory of the United States, and the products of such noncontiguous territory may be similarly transported to the United States. Rates and regulations for such transportation shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and funds received shall be credited to the appropriate appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year in which received.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] desires to discuss it, I will make the point of order.

Mr. HAY. I do not desire to discuss it if the gentleman has made up his mind to make the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this interferes with the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee to a certain extent, and also of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, in the report of the committee are the reasons given for this item. I will read to the gentleman a communication from the Secretary of War, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 19, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. HAY: I beg to quote, for your information, the following cablegram received this day from the governor of Porto Rico:

"Serious and alarming crisis seems to confront pineapple shippers owing to lack of space on boats, beginning April 19. Could War Department possibly send down Government transport for two or three trips by that date? Steamship companies would join in request, for they seem helpless."

This emphasizes a situation to which the attention of this department has been called heretofore by merchants and others in Porto Rico.

A similar condition has existed for some time in the Philippine Islands and to the extent possible within existing law effort has been made by this department to meet it and at present vacant space on transports returning from the Philippine Islands is assigned to the Philippine government, which is using it to transport the products of that country to the United States to the extent possible under the circumstances. This has resulted in no complaint of private shipping, such shippers appreciating the fact that the transport service is simply doing what they are, under the unfortunate existing conditions, unable to do. There is no effort whatever to compete with private shipping firms and no complaint has been made that such was being done.

The emergency in both of these cases, and I am informed in other cases, is such that I believe the slight assistance which the Army Transport Service could furnish without interfering with its performing its customery functions would be greatly appreciated, both by the shipping companies and those having products to ship.

I hope that it will be possible to have this relief granted promptly.

I inclose a draft of the proposition suggested, setting forth in concrete form what the department believes it is possible to do.

Very sincerely,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Hon. JAMES HAY,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the statement made by the Secretary of War, as narrated by the chairman of the committee, but the emergency here seems to pertain only to the shipment of pineapples from one of our neighboring islands. There was ample shipping service up to the time when the ships could make more money elsewhere, and to put Army transports in competition with ships of commerce under such conditions seems to me to establish a precedent that would be dangerous.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield before he makes his point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to make a point of order only to the last sentence there, namely—

And funds received shall be credited to the appropriate appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year in which received.

That makes a permanent, indefinite appropriation that is contrary to the policy of Congress. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order as to the use of the transports. Incidentally we have the transports, and they might be used when they can be used conveniently.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, on the excuse of bringing pineapples in from Porto Rico this proviso gives the Secretary of War general power to use the transports of the Army of the United States for commercial purposes, and that is what I object to. This is undoubtedly new legislation, Mr. Chairman, putting the Government into the common-carrying and rate-fixing business. It ought not to be done in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That hereafter the proceeds derived from the sale of surplus cuttings of material for clothing manufactured by the Quartermaster Corps of the Army shall be deposited to the credit of that appropriation out of which the material was purchased and shall remain available throughout the fiscal year following that in which the sale was effected: Provided further, That hereafter sewing machines and other labor-saving machinery used in the manufacture of clothing and equipage, motor trucks and passenger-carrying vehicles, and band instruments may be exchanged in part payment for new machines, vehicles, and instruments used for the same purpose as those proposed to be exchanged: Provided further, That hereafter the accounting for quartermaster supplies or property and the fixing of responsibility therefor shall be according to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That hereafter, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, officers of the Quartermaster Corps accountable for public moneys may intrust such moneys to other officers for the purpose of having them make disbursements as their agents, and the officers to whom the moneys are intrusted shall be held pecuniarily responsible therefor to the United States.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. HAY. It is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAY. No; it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to point out the specific language to which I make the point of order, because I do not think it all ought to go out. On page 31, line 24, I cite the words "and shall remain available throughout the fiscal year following that in which the sale was effected." That is a permanent indefinite annual appropriation, contrary to the Constitution of the United States. On page 32, line 6, are the words "Provided further, That hereafter the accounting for quartermaster supplies or property and the fixing of responsibility therefor shall be according to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War." That changes existing law.

Mr. HAY. There is no question about the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BORLAND. But I am pointing out the particular language to which I make the point of order. There is some language in the paragraph to which I do not make a point of order.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman can not make a point of order to a particular part of the paragraph. If he makes it, it must be to all the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to make a point of order on certain portions of the paragraph, he can do so, but the Chair can not distinguish the portions.

Mr. BORLAND. The Chair can not insist upon my making the point of order to the entire paragraph; neither can the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was just making that statement.

Mr. HAY. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST H. SNOWDEN MARSHALL.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

House resolution 278.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House is hereby authorized to employ legal counsel in the matter of the proceedings against H. Snowden Marshall, United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, for contempt, the expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the Sergeant at Arms of the House, in the discharge of his duty, has gone to New York and has served the necessary papers on H. Snowden Marshall in the contempt proceedings, which Mr. Marshall has resented by instituting a proceeding in the nature of a writ of habeas corpus. The proceeding comes up early this afternoon, and it is necessary for the Sergeant at Arms to have counsel present in order that he may be properly defended, and the purpose of this is to authorize the Sergeant at Arms to employ the necessary counsel and further make the House responsible for the payment of the necessary expenses.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16460, the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16460, the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose I was presenting a point of order to the language on page 32.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that unless the gentleman points out the particular parts of the paragraph to which he makes the point of order the Chair can not distinguish. If the point of order is directed to the whole paragraph it is sustained as to the whole paragraph. If the gentleman desires to cite certain sentences in the paragraph and directs the point of order to those, it is competent for him to do so. That is what the Chair understands the gentleman desires to do.

Mr. BORLAND. The Chair is correct. I desire to direct my point of order to certain sentences in the paragraph, and I was proceeding to point out to the Chair those particular sentences.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad if the gentleman will indicate them.

Mr. BORLAND. On page 31, line 24, beginning with the word "and," I call attention to the language, "and shall remain available throughout the fiscal year following that in which the sale was effected." I make a point of order against that. On page 32, line 6, I make a point of order against the language:

Provided further, That hereafter the accounting for quartermaster supplies or property and the fixing of responsibility therefor shall be according to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

And the following language, immediately following that:

Provided further, That hereafter, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, officers of the Quartermaster Corps accountable for public moneys may intrust such moneys to other officers for the purpose of having them make disbursements as their agents, and the officers to whom the moneys are intrusted shall be held pecuniarily responsible therefor to the United States.

I make a point of order against those.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Horses for Cavalry, Artillery, Engineers, etc.: For the purchase of horses of ages, sex, and size as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War for remounts, for officers entitled to public mounts for the Cavalry, Artillery, Signal Corps, and Engineers, the United States Military Academy, service schools, and staff colleges, and for the Indian scouts, and for such Infantry and members of the Hospital Corps in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, and for the hire of employees: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number now on hand, shall be limited to the actual needs of the mounted service, including reasonable provisions for remounts, and, unless otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War, no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster Corps and an inspection under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War. When practicable, horses shall be purchased in open market at all military posts or stations, when needed, at a maximum price to be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any horse below the standard set by Army Regulations for Cavalry and Artillery horses, except when purchased as remounts or for instruction of cadets at the United States Military Academy: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for polo ponies except for West Point Military Academy, and such ponies shall not be used at any other place, $800,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, of course this appropriation will have to be increased. I understand that the department has a bid out for 68,000 horses, which bid will be opened to-day, so that those horses will be provided for in the general deficiency bill.

I now move to increase this item by $3,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Clerk will kindly report the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 34, line 3, strike out "$800,000" and insert "$3,800,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Barracks and quarters: For barracks, quarters, stables, storehouses, magazines, administration and office buildings, sheds, shops, and other buildings necessary for the shelter of troops, public animals, and stores, and for administration purposes, except those pertaining to the Coast Artillery; for repairing public buildings at military posts; for hire of employees; for rental of the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and acting dental surgeons on duty with the troops at posts and stations where no public quarters are available; of barracks or authorized allowance of quarters for noncommissioned officers and enlisted men on duty where public quarters are not available; of grounds for cantonments, camp sites, and other military purposes, and of buildings or portions of buildings for occupation by troops, for use as stables, storehouses, and offices, and for other military purposes; for the hire of recruiting stations and lodgings for recruits; for such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes and for officers' quarters at military posts as may be approved by the Secretary of War; for wall lockers in permanent barracks, and refrigerators in barracks and quarters; for screen doors, window screens, storm doors and sash, and window shades for barracks, offices, and quarters, and for flooring and framing for tents, $2,750,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Virginia tell us why the Coast Artillery quarters are excepted from this provision?

Mr. HAY. Because they are provided for in the fortification bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In another place?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One other question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to continue under the same motion. Provision is made here for screen doors, window screens, storm doors, sash, and so forth, for the barracks. That would include mosquito screens, I assume?

Mr. HAY. Yes; I suppose so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the gentleman from Virginia, while it may not be pertinent to this paragraph, the complaints are constantly coming from the soldiers' homes, in which old Civil War veterans are spending their last days of repose, that they are greatly annoyed by mosquitoes.

Mr. HAY. The soldiers' homes are cared for in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand that. So I wanted to know whether in this bill we provide that the active young soldiers shall be protected against mosquitoes, whereas we do not provide in the sundry civil bill for protecting the old soldiers against mosquitoes.

Mr. HAY. I do not know. I suppose when they provide homes for soldiers they provide for screens against mosquitoes as well as other insects.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should hope they would, but they do not seem to do so.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will take this matter up with the members of the Committee on Appropriations, no doubt they will provide for screens to protect the old soldiers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be; but I want to compliment the gentleman from Virginia and his committee for taking better care of the active young soldiers than the Committee on Appropriations has thus far taken care of the old veterans, because at Hampton, just below here, the old soldiers are being annoyed every night now by mosquitoes because they have no screens. I compliment the gentleman from Virginia for having the foresight and the humanitarian insight to take care of the young soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to delay the passage of the bill with matter that is clearly extraneous, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has just done; but I wish to say that this matter is fully taken care of in the sundry civil appropriation bill. The amount allowed for the homes is all that the board of managers asks, because we desire that the old soldiers shall be properly cared for; and if the gentleman will call attention to it, I have no doubt that screens will be provided, if they have not been provided already.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have a communication from the board of managers saying they have not sufficient money; that they have asked for it, but can not get it. I do not want to reflect on the Committee on Appropriations. Every time this question of mosquitoes is raised here a laugh goes up, as though it was something very funny; but it seems to me that it is no laughing matter that these old men, who are so rapidly passing away, are having their lives made miserable on these summer nights because of the attacks of the mosquitoes that come in at the open windows.

Mr. BORLAND. It is very difficult for the committee to tell exactly what item the board of managers are going to economize upon. If the committee gives them the money in a lump sum for the upkeep of these homes, it is very difficult for the committee to tell that they are going to economize by failing to provide window screens.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I again compliment the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] and the Committee on Military Affairs, which provides protection for the young men, while the Committee on Appropriations does not provide protection for these poor old men, against the attack of mosquitoes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. If the swamps in the vicinity of soldiers' homes and of the post at Fort Myer and of the camp at Radio were in Panama or the Philippines, I have no doubt the War Department would be supplied with money to rid them of mosquitoes, and thereby protect the people near those places by orders of the Government. The swamps near Washington on both sides of the river are breeding places for mosquitoes, and it is from these places that the mosquitoes come which get to the Soldiers' Home, to the post at Fort Myer, and to the camp at Radio, where our boys are now in camp. There is no such breeding place for mosquitoes anywhere in the Tropics as there is right here within a stone's throw of the Capitol and close to where our soldiers are camped and the old veterans provided with a home. A small amount of money would clean up these swamps and destroy the mosquito larvæ on both sides of the river, and money should be provided and used for that purpose. Such precautions here are as important as at Panama.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas withdraws the pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That not to exceed $30,000 thereof shall be expended in the Presidio of San Francisco, Cal., for the construction of a road connecting Fort Winfield Scott with the road constructed by the city and county of San Francisco leading to Fort Miley, in said city and county.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if this particular road is owned by the Government or whether it is a city road?

Mr. HAY. My information is that it is owned by the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. Do the hearings say anything on that subject?

Mr. HAY. Yes; and they show that the road is to be constructed on the reservation at the Presidio of San Francisco.

Mr. BORLAND. No portion of it is off the reservation?

Mr. HAY. It is not, so far as I am informed.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order if the road is a Government road. There is nothing to show that it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] stated a moment ago that they have no screens in the windows at the soldiers' home at Hampton, and he said there ought to be, and unquestionably there ought to be. No one will doubt that. Last year we appropriated $44,000, which was available for that purpose. Evidently the managers of the soldiers' home down there like mosquitoes or they would have used a small part of the appropriation of $44,000 in providing window screens. They have the carpenters to do the work. We pay the carpenters. They have the windows. It does not take very much skill to make a mosquito screen and it does not take much money. It does seem to me that there is some one at fault with the home down there if they do not have screens but do have mosquitoes and flies. They have the money. What they lack is the enterprise.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have a communication from the managers of the home, indicating that they have not the money. I have sent for the letters and will ask to put them in the RECORD at the proper time. I have brought up the question several times, and the answer comes back each time that they could do this work if they had the money.

Mr. MANN. We appropriated $44,000 last year for that home for these purposes.

For pay of chief engineer, builder, blacksmiths, carpenters, painters, gas fitters, electrical workers, plumbers, tinsmiths, steam fitters, stone and brick masons, and laborers, and for all appliances and materials used under this head, repairs of roads and other improvements of a permanent character.

Forty-four thousand dollars for the home. Forty-four thousand dollars after all is a good tidy bunch of money, and if they need the screens I think they ought to have put the screens in. As far as I am concerned, I had much rather have my room in a building that was screened, if there were mosquitoes around, than to have an extra coat of paint put upon the outside.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the trouble at the Hampton Home is the same as similar little troubles that exist at the soldiers homes—the details are not looked after. The reason is because there is a divided responsibility. You have seven men composing the board of managers looking after the business of the home, when there should be but one man held responsible, and the thing for the gentleman from Illinois to do is to advocate the remedy that I proposed some years ago, placing the homes under the administration of the War Department, wipe out the board of managers, which have proved incompetent from a business standpoint, and you will get competent and responsible business administration of these homes.

Personally I know Gen. Smith, governor of the Hampton Home. He is a kindly, sympathetic, and considerate man, and I am sure it is not his fault.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Where is the general board located?

Mr. ANTHONY. In the new bill before the House it is supposed to have headquarters at Dayton, Ohio. It is because of the divided responsibility that this condition occurs, and if the War Department had the responsibility the work would be well done, as every task that we give the War Department is well done.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to indorse what the gentleman says about Gen. Smith, who has charge of the home here; he is a kindly sympathetic man. I have been driven from post to post to get information. These old men complain, but my letters have to go somewhere out West.

Mr. MANN. Kansas City.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been wondering whether a board at Kansas City is thoroughly competent all the year to manage the homes scattered as they are throughout the country.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is a case of divided legislative responsibility as well. The Military Committee of the House is responsible for naming the board of managers and is supposed to have control of the general legislation, but appropriations are made by another committee, and if the matter of which the gentleman complains was in charge of the committee of which the gentleman from Virginia is chairman, I believe he would secure relief.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repair and maintenance, military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Alaska: Repair and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Territory of Alaska, $500,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph. The language of the law is "Construction, repair, and maintenance." This language is "Repair and maintenance." It seems to me that $500,000 is a good deal of money to appropriate without any construction involved.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say that I overlooked the fact that I wanted to change that by inserting the word "Construction." It was inadvertently left out.

Mr. BORLAND. I thought so.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting before the word "Repair," in line 6, and before the word "Repair," in line 7, the word "Construction."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, line 6, before the word "Repair," insert the word "Construction," and in line 7, before the word "Repair," insert the word "Construction."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall, the appropriation in the last bill was $165,000. What is the necessity of trebling the appropriation?

Mr. HAY. I can only say to the gentleman that the War Department sent down a supplementary estimate asking the committee to appropriate, I believe, $550,000 for the construction and repair of these roads. The reason given was that it was a feeder for the proposed railroad, and a further reason that they could with this appropriation complete some if not all the roads and trails.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not a beginning of a wholesale project for the construction of roads in Alaska where the military necessity is very far-fetched.

Mr. HAY. As I understood from the officer who has charge of the road construction, this amount would about complete the roads and military trails. The Territory itself contributes largely to these funds through taxation, I forget how much, but I think perhaps one-half.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman really have any doubt that they will ask the same amount next year?

Mr. HAY. I do not know; I can only tell the gentleman what they say. They say they will not. I do not like to question the word of these gentlemen.

Mr. MANN. I was just wondering whether the War Department was not taking advantage of the general situation to increase the appropriation from $165,000 to half a million.

Mr. HAY. No; I think not. The War Department has for several years been asking for larger appropriations than we have given. This is not the first time. We have been appropriating some money for, I think, about 10 years on this bill for this purpose. Sometimes we have appropriated $100,000, sometimes $150,000, and sometimes a little more, but the appropriation has been continuing.

Mr. MANN. Of course, they are not military trails.

Mr. HAY. No; they are for the purpose of aiding in the development of that Territory, in my judgment.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Barracks and quarters, Philippine Islands: Continuing the work of providing for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including repairs and payment of rents, the acquisition of title to building sites, and such additions to existing military reservations as may be necessary, and including also shelter for the animals and supplies, and all other buildings necessary for post administration purposes, $400,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph pertains to proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men in the barracks in the Philippines. In view of what has been said of the protection of men in the soldiers' homes, I wish to amplify the discussion by introducing several letters bearing upon the subject. The old soldiers themselves at Hampton complain that some of them have been obliged to stay up all night because of the mosquito nuisance. I took it up with the president and the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and on February 18 I received the letter which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 18, 1916.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have your letter of February 15 in relation to the screening of barracks of the Southern Branch at Hampton, Va.

The hospital at that branch is being screened at an expenditure of about $3,000. The question of screening the barracks at the Southern and other branches will be given consideration by the board of managers at the March meeting, and the action of the board will necessarily have to be influenced by the amount of funds available for this purpose.

Very respectfully, yours,

FRED J. CLOSE,
President Board of Managers,
National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That pertains to the Southern Branch of the National Soldiers' Home. On May 29, after the receipt of that letter, I received this from one of the old soldiers:

I refer to the matter of screening the barracks at this home. A number of officers of this home called on Col. George H. Wood, representing the board of managers, on his recent visit here; all the satisfaction we could get was that we would have to apply to Congress for help, and it is this which prompts us to ask your aid, etc.

I took the matter up again with the officers of the home, and on June 14 received the letter which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
June 14, 1916.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE, M. C.,
Third District of Pennsylvania, Washington, D. C.

Subject: Screening barracks, southern branch.

DEAR SIR: Your communication of May 31, 1916, received, but in the moving of headquarters office answer was delayed. We have not sufficient funds in our general appropriation to screen the barracks at the southern branch at Hampton, Va. From estimates made about a year ago it appeared that $11,000 would be required, but it is possible now with the greatly increased prices in all metals that it might run to $15,000. I would not want to be bound by these figures, but simply give them to you as a rough estimate.

Very respectfully, yours,

GEO. H. WOOD,
President Board of Managers,
National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Meanwhile the old soldiers are being bitten in the same old way because the screens are missing. I think it is proper that this matter should be called to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Why did not the gentleman bring this up when the proper bill was before the House?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have submitted it time and again on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rent of buildings, Quartermaster Corps: For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia for military purposes, during the fiscal year 1916, as follows:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Was an amendment offered in line 7? If not I move to amend by striking out the word "sixteen" and inserting the word "seventeen."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 38, line 7, by striking out the word "sixteen" and inserting the word "seventeen."

Mr. MANN. I suppose that is correct?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I may be in error, but it looks to me as though here in the beginning of line 23, page 37, for the maintenance of the Army War College, for supplying necessary fuel, and so forth, there is no provision made for paying for the fuel. I do not see any amount appropriated at all.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct about that, and I ask unanimous consent to return to line 3, page 38, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to return to that portion of the bill indicated for the reason stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, at the end of line 3, page 38, by inserting the figures "$10,700." That was overlooked.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to make another observation before that vote is taken? It seems to me that that should be inserted after the word "grounds."

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that I am simply providing what was provided last year.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Ten thousand seven hundred dollars covers all of the item?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Claims for damages to and loss of private property: For payment of claims for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, and operations of the Army that have accrued, or may hereafter accrue, from time to time, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That settlement of such claims shall be made by the Auditor for the War Department, upon the approval and recommendation of the Secretary of War, where the amount of damages has been ascertained by the War Department, and payment thereof will be accepted by the owners of the property in full satisfaction of such damages, $5,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against a portion of that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer the point of order to the proviso?

Mr. BORLAND. I make the point of order against the portion of the paragraph which I will indicate, beginning on page 38, line 21, with the word "incident" and extending from there to and including the word "damages," on line 5, page 39, so as to make the paragraph read:

For payment of claims for damages to and loss of private property, $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. HAY. I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the law now provides how the damages shall be paid. There is an existing statute upon the subject that was passed on August 24, 1912. That provides that these claims shall be audited by the Auditor of the War Department and then reported to Congress and paid in an appropriation bill by Congress. This attempts to change existing law by providing that they shall be paid by the Secretary of War on the recommendation of the Auditor of the War Department without any report of the claims at all to Congress. That is a very definite change of existing law.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the purpose of this is not for the payment of all private claims, but for the payment of claims which arise where there has been target practice or some operation of the Army and where small claims have accrued by reason of breakage of windows or the breaking down of fences or something of that sort. It has been carried in the bill, I think, for three years. It does not apply to all private claims that may arise, but is specifically intended for that purpose, and by reason of the promptness with which the War Department is able to handle these claims under the provision of this law private owners of property have been very much relieved and a much better feeling has existed where target practice has been carried on and where the Army has maneuvered. That is the reason.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course in deciding the point of order, it will depend upon what existing law is. Is there any existing authority in law for this?

Mr. HAY. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Medical and Hospital Department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including motor ambulances, and motorcycles for medical service, their maintenance, repair, and operation, and disinfectants, and the exchange of typewriting machines, for military posts, camps, hospitals, hospital ships and transports, and supplies required for mosquito destruction in and about the military posts in the Canal Zone: Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, select types and makes of motor ambulances for the Army and authorize their purchase without regard to the laws prescribing advertisement for proposals for supplies and material for the Army: Provided further, That hereafter, whenever contracts which are not to be performed within 60 days are made on behalf of the Government by the Surgeon General or by officers of the Medical Department authorized to make them, and are in excess of $500 in amount, such contracts shall be reduced to writing and signed by the contracting parties, but in all other cases contracts shall be prepared under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Surgeon General; for expenses of medical supply depots; for medical care and treatment not otherwise provided for, including care and subsistence in private hospitals, of officers, enlisted men and civilian employees of the Army, of applicants for enlistment, and of prisoners of war and other persons in military custody or confinment, when entitled thereto by law, regulation, or contract: Provided, That this shall not apply to officers and enlisted men who are treated in private hospitals or by civilian physicians while on furlough; for the proper care and treatment of epidemic and contagious diseases in the Army or at military posts or stations, including measures to prevent the spread thereof, and the payment of reasonable damages not otherwise provided for, for bedding and clothing injured or destroy in such prevention; for the pay of male and female nurses, not including the Nurse Corps (female), and of cooks and other civilians employed for the proper care of sick officers and soldiers, under such regulations fixing their number, qualifications, assignment, pay, and allowances as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the pay of civilian physicians employed to examine physically applicants for enlistment and enlisted men, and to render other professional services from time to time under proper authority; for the pay of other employees of the Medical Department; for the payment of express companies and local transfers employed directly by the Medical Department for the transportation of medical and hospital supplies, including bidders' samples and water for analysis; for supplies for use in teaching the art of cooking to the Hospital Corps; for the supply of the Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; for advertising, printing, binding, laundry, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $1,000,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against a portion of the language in that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will indicate the portion to which his point of order is directed.

Mr. BORLAND. On page 39, line 12, the words "and supplies required for mosquito destruction in and about the military posts in the Canal Zone."

That is covered in the sanitation of the Panama Canal Zone in the sundry civil bill.

On page 41, line 5, the words "printing and binding."

Printing and binding also are provided for the War Department, including all its branches, in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the words "printing and binding" are subject to the point of order. They have been carried in the bill for a very long period, and they are not provided for in the sundry civil bill or any other bill of which I know.

Mr. BORLAND. Well, we can dispose of these one at a time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order as to the mosquito paragraph? I would like to hear from the gentleman from Virginia on the merits of that proposition.

Mr. HAY. The merits are very plain.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no doubt about the merits of the question, but——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is an item for supplies required for mosquito destruction in and about the military posts in the Canal Zone.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no use duplicating appropriations in three or four bills for the same purpose.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman point out where it is cared for?

Mr. BORLAND. There is no doubt about the merits.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is familiar with the Canal Zone?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been over it.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman knows a good deal of the sanitation there consists of the destruction of mosquitoes by the use of oil on the stagnant water. Most of the money has been spent that way.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman from Missouri point out where this is taken care of in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I can do so in a moment's time.

Mr. HAY. While the gentleman is doing that—and we are not in any way interfering with his right to make the point of order—I move to amend the bill by increasing the appropriation to $2,000,000, so it will read "$2,000,000" instead of "$1,000,000."

Mr. BORLAND. Just a minute. What is the proposition?

Mr. HAY. The purpose is, we will have just twice as many people to take care of out of this appropriation as we provided for, and it is for the purpose of getting the necessary medical supplies and all the other sanitary things that are necessary for the Army.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the item for the sanitation of the Panama Canal is found on page 184 of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman withhold his point for a moment? The Army is taking care of the mosquito. Here is a provision for the destruction of the mosquito in and around the military posts of the Canal Zone. It provides for the purchase of supplies. Now, whether the point of order is good or bad, it would be helpful to the country not in military service if the gentleman from Virginia would say just what the supplies are that are used on the Canal Zone for the destruction of mosquitoes. I think I know, but I would like to have the gentleman from Virginia state it.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman knows the gentleman had better tell it, because he can do it better than I can.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it is very largely oil spread in waste places. There are some other supplies that the gentleman from Virginia might tell us about.

Mr. HAY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is subject to the point of order. I think it is the province of the Committee on Military Affairs, which has charge of the Military Establishment, to provide for the sanitation of the Army and the posts which the Army occupies. Now, the Army occupies—or a part of them—three or four posts on the Panama Canal Zone, and it is proposed out of this appropriation to protect the soldiers of those posts from diseases which may be carried by mosquitoes, and I think it is in order to provide for it.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman a question in that connection. Of course it is purely a question of what is existing law. It is perfectly competent to provide by statute that one department of the Government shall sanitate Army posts, or provide that the Military Department shall have authority to sanitate. Of course the decision of the Chair depends upon what the actual existing law is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Before the Chair rules I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer an amendment which affects the text of the sentence which the gentleman from Missouri proposes to strike out by the point of order. Would it be in order to offer that amendment now?

I desire to move to strike out the words after the word "destruction" in line 13, "in and about the military posts in the Canal Zone," so that the paragraph will read, "and supplies required for mosquito destruction." The Army is not going to be confined to the limits of the Canal Zone.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that if the point of order is not sustained it is perfectly competent for the gentleman to offer the amendment——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would be?

The CHAIRMAN. Because the point of order strikes out all of that sentence. That brings the Chair back to what is the existing law in respect to sanitation about military posts.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that there is any specific law anywhere about the sanitation of military posts, but this provision has been carried in the Army appropriation bill for some time, and I do not understand that the same thing is provided for in the sundry civil bill.

That is the reason, I understand, the gentleman makes the point of order. The sundry civil bill provides for sanitation and protection of the Canal Zone, but it does not provide for the sanitation of the Army posts on the Canal Zone. They are entirely separate and distinct. The Army posts are one thing. The Canal Zone, a strip of land extending from ocean to ocean, is another thing, and this is to provide for the sanitation and protection of these Army posts against these mosquitoes. It does seem to me it is in order on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman a statute there? There might be a statute so comprehensive relating to sanitation on the Canal Zone that it would include everything on the zone, and that would include the Army posts, of course.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, that is exactly the law. The organic act for the building of the Panama Canal and the recent Adamson Act for the operation of the Panama Canal are both based upon construction, operation, protection, and sanitation of the Canal Zone.

Now, by practical construction of that one sanitation item—I was going to say almost all of it, but a very large percentage of it—it has been used for disinfecting the Canal Zone. The principal part of the disinfecting of the Canal Zone is the destruction of these disease-carrying mosquitoes, and every Member of Congress who has been there is well aware that has been a big part of that work. That is in the sundry civil bill, and that bill this year carries the same appropriation it has always carried for that purpose, which includes all of the zone.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that cover and provide for this particular mosquito destruction?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes. It is used for that purpose and has been used for that purpose for 14 years. It chances that for the first time in the history of the zone some military posts are located there, but that does not cut down the power to sanitate the entire zone; and if the entire zone is sanitated under this appropriation, it is a segregation of that appropriation to sanitate the posts that happen to be in the zone and make a special appropriation for them.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman that this fund for military posts occurs in the bill for the first time. I had not had my attention called to that. It is new language in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If the statute, as said a moment ago, includes all the sanitation of the zone, it would include the destruction of the mosquitoes around the posts. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HAY. It would come at the end of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 41, at the end of line 7, insert: "That so much of the act of June 3, 1916, as relates to the age limit for eligibility to appointment of first lieutenants in the Medical Department of the Army be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. HAY. The reason for that is, Mr. Chairman, that heretofore the age limit of first lieutenants to be appointed in the Medical Corps of the Army has been by regulation in the War Department. By some inadvertence, when we passed the organization act we fixed the age limit for the appointment of young men in the Medical Corps of the Army at from 21 to 30 years. We are now informed by the Surgeon General that, owing to the long course which men have to take before they can go into the Army, if the age limit is put as low as 30 years they will lose a great deal of valuable material. A man has to go to a college and graduate in academics. Then he has to go four years to a school and graduate there in his profession, and then he has to go from the school to a hospital.

Mr. MANN. Then, he is an interne for a couple of years there?

Mr. HAY. Yes; an interne. And the result is that the Surgeon General and the War Department think that if this law is not changed it will work not only a hardship, but it will work against the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to be changed, but why does the gentleman propose to entirely repeal it?

Mr. HAY. Only as to that part of it which applies to the eligibility as to age.

Mr. MANN. Why do you propose to admit a man at 60 as lieutenant in the Army?

Mr. HAY. Because under the law, before the act of June 3, the age limit was fixed by regulation of the War Department. There was no law in regard to it, and they could have admitted a man 60 years old there if they had wanted to do so. As a matter of fact, they never did it; but I am only proposing to restore the law to what it was before the passage of that act. That is all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Do you understand that this also includes dental surgeons?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. You say in the bill itself it referred to dental surgeons at 27 and in the Medical Corps at 30 years.

Mr. HAY. First lieutenants in the Medical Corps service and first lieutenants in the Dental Corps.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me there ought to be a limit on it.

Mr. HAY. What limit does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN. It would be a wild guess for me. I would not let a man in from 35 to 40 years, it seems to me.

Mr. HAY. Suppose we make it 35 years, then. I do not think they have ever been in the habit of permitting a man to enter who was over 35 years. That is my understanding as to what they have been doing heretofore. Of course, a man ought not to be in at an age where he would not give good service and then be permitted to go on the retired list. That is what we ought to avoid. But I think the limitation of 35 years would work out satisfactorily.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why not make it 40 years?

Mr. HAY. That would be too much.

Mr. ANTHONY. The idea is that there are a certain number of medical officers who have served as contract surgeons and who have served in the Medical Reserve Corps. If you make the year limit too low, you will exclude those men who have given a long period of service to the Government.

Mr. HAY. I do not think there are many of that sort.

Mr. ANTHONY. There are some.

Mr. HAY. They are few, but they have not reached the age of 40 years as yet.

Mr. ANTHONY. One I have in mind is 36 years of age, and he has given seven or eight years of service.

Mr. HAY. There is no age limit now as to officers of the Reserve Corps, especially. It was done particularly for the reason that we did not want any age limit placed on physicians or surgeons who might be men of 55 with very large experience, and who in a war would render very essential service. But I do not think we ought to fix the age limit as high as 40 years for a member of the corps.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps it would be just as well to leave it to the regulations. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAY. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has another point of order that was not passed upon. The Chair will ask the same question in connection with that as he did in the other case. What is the law in relation to this printing and binding?

Mr. BORLAND. The law in relation to this printing and binding is that the printing and binding in the executive departments is carried in the sundry civil bill. There is only one exception to that in the War Department, and that was that last year they got a provision inserted on the river and harbor bill to the effect that a certain amount of printing and binding should be carried on the river and harbor bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] take issue on that statement of fact?

Mr. HAY. I certainly do. I will say that the sundry civil bill does not appropriate for the printing and binding of all the departments; certainly not for the bureaus of the War Department. These things have been carried in this bill for years and years. This is the first time I have ever heard of any point of order being made against it.

Mr. BORLAND. I thought it was new. I have it marked here as new.

This printing and binding in this particular item is for the medical department, just one branch of the War Department. I want to call attention to the fact that another branch of the War Department, to wit, the Corps of Engineers, secured a special appropriation on the river and harbor bill, and this year's sundry civil bill, which on Saturday passed this House, repealed that provision of law on page 178 of the sundry civil bill. That was the only exception, as shown by the hearings, which I can send to the desk. That was the only exception in the War Department where any department had any appropriation outside of the general appropriation for printing and binding carried in the sundry civil bill. When we come to compute the amount that the War Department had altogether, we find that——

Mr. HAY. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I noticed in the morning paper yesterday morning the statement by wire that they were delayed in mustering in the National Guard at Chicago because they had no muster-in rolls; in other words, because the War Department could not print muster-in rolls and have them on hand, and the matter was put through the red tape of sending it to the Government Printing Office in Washington and waiting until they got good and ready to print them. The National Guard, that had been called out at great expense to the Government, was lying by, doing nothing, because somebody had prevented the War Department from printing the muster-in rolls. Fifteen minutes of expense to the Government would have printed ten times as many muster-in rolls as were needed; but sometimes some wise gentleman concludes—it may be myself, though I do not claim to be wise—that this printing must all be done by the Public Printer. It would not do to let the War Department order by wire that the printing be done at Chicago, a very simple thing, at no expense, practically. Even if they were willing to do it for nothing, the Government could not accept these muster-in rolls presented to the War Department. No, no; they must make a requisition on the Public Printer and have the money expended out of the sundry civil appropriation in order to have these muster-in rolls printed.

We are a great country; we are a wise people; we are a wonderfully intelligent Congress; but sometimes I wonder whether the janitor would ever be able to clean up the establishment if he did not know more than we do. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the law that the gentleman speaks of has been on the statute books since January 12, 1905. I do not know how many Members of this House participated in the passage of that original law, which required this printing to be done in the Government Printing Office. I assume that in the main it is a good thing to do so, and it is a good thing to confine the printing to the Government Printing Office, where it is done at the cheapest possible rate to the Government, and not permit these departments to seek private printing in special cities, like Chicago, or elsewhere. Nor do I see how this question of the printing of muster rolls has the slightest thing to do with this item in here about medical printing. It is totally divorced from it. Nor do I see any excuse why the muster rolls should not be promptly printed. The Government Printing Office prints the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and other documents for Congress and delivers them by daylight here on the day after they are sent to them, and I can see no reason why, in view of the fact that the muster in was anticipated and provided by law and order, it was not just as easy to get the muster rolls there as it was to get the men to inspect the troops or the men who will constitute the troops. It is a small matter to get the muster rolls. But it shows how some justification might be advanced for making an expenditure of Government money here and there or anywhere by permitting the printing by an executive officer in his discretion. Congress seems to have forbidden that, and I think it was wise in doing that. Until that law is repealed, Congress will make its appropriations in accordance therewith.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to strike out the last three words.

Mr. HILL. I do that just to make a suggestion. It pleases me very much. I have listened here in quiet to the charge on the part of a great many people that trouble and war were coming to us at the instigation of the munition makers of the Atlantic States.

I never thought there was anything in it. I am still less of that opinion this morning; but I commend to the gentlemen who have made those charges during the last few months the fact that outside of the States on the Mexican border, the troops from New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and Connecticut are the first troops ordered to the Mexican border, and the ammunition makers of those States are going down there to deliver their goods in person.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman quite accurate in the statement of the facts as to the first troops ordered to the border?

Mr. HILL. Outside of the States bordering on the Mexican frontier.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman is in error. Is it not a fact that Oklahoma, Kansas, and Wisconsin were ahead of the New England States?

Mr. HILL. I have not heard of it, and the paper this morning says that the troops from New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and Connecticut are the first four States except, as I have stated, those on the Mexican border.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is in error in that, because the troops of Oklahoma, Kansas, and Wisconsin are far ahead of those from New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and Connecticut.

Mr. HILL. I would ask the gentleman if he presumes for one moment to put his own suggestion against the unequaled accuracy of the public press?

Mr. STAFFORD. I would not attempt to do that against the gentlemen of the press gallery. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield for a suggestion?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. I want to suggest to the gentleman, for his information in connection with his statement as to the first troops ordered to the border, that no doubt the gentleman got his information from the statement which I saw in the eastern papers, and that referred to the troops in the Department of the East. The gentleman is in error. There have been troops from other States ordered to the border.

Mr. HILL. I have seen nothing of the kind.

Mr. WINGO. The reason for that is that the press report that the gentleman saw was that covering only the Department of the East. In other words, the gentleman has listened to a provincial press and has not gotten his information straight from the War Department. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 29, line 12, after the word "transport," insert the words "and supplies required for mosquito destruction."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will withhold his point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. I withhold the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understood the gentleman to make his point of order against the original text of the bill because it carries the language with respect to the Panama Canal Zone that is carried in the sundry civil bill. That was the burden of his objection, was it not?

Mr. BORLAND. My objection to this is something totally different. The Public Health Department has charge of the subject that the gentleman is trying to introduce into this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not very extensively, if the gentleman will permit me to say.

Mr. BORLAND. It has all the charge there is. This does not belong in the Army appropriation bill, and I make the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman to reserve it a moment.

Mr. BORLAND. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move to strike out the last four words. It seems to me that in this oppressive heat the mosquito is making a very active attack on the brain of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Mosquitoes have been a very favorite subject with him, as we can all testify. Those who are personally and intimately acquainted with him know the reason. We know how he suffers from the New Jersey mosquito when he chances to go down to his summer home near Brigantine Beach, and we do not wonder that he wants the National Government to come to his protection and to the protection of all others who suffer from this troublesome insect. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not justified in throwing aspersions upon the Appropriations Committee because the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers have failed in their duty to provide screens for the southern home. Since the discussion this morning, in which he made that charge, I have taken occasion to examine the estimates for repairs made by the board of managers for the southern home, and find that their estimate totaled $45,000. The Committee on Appropriations reported, and the bill which has just passed the House on Saturday, carried an item of $44,000 for that purpose. The fault has not been with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What were these items for?

Mr. STAFFORD. For the purpose of repairs and screening, and the like, to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that is so, that is all news to the House, and this agitation has done some good.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has already called attention to the fact that the appropriation was for that purpose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that is what he stated, the gentleman from Wisconsin is simply repeating the words of his chief.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I am repeating the words of my chief, I am very glad to think that I have convinced some one who needed conversion to the truth.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no need for the conversion of anyone except those who oppose putting these screens up. What we want is not heated oratory, but screens to save these old soldiers from the annoyance of being bitten all night and every night.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Committee on Appropriations have provided funds, and if the screens are not placed there it is the fault of the board of managers in neglecting to do what they should do in providing ample protection to the old soldiers at these branch homes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment has already been offered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I move to strike out the word preceding that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the summer heat has somewhat affected "the gentleman from Pennsylvania." He has been under the weather for two days. But even so, it does not interfere with his standing up for those things that he believes to be right, even though they may be questioned by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. If the gentleman from Wisconsin has no heart even when he is well, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has a heart even when he is sick. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has some regard for the men who fight for their country, and if the gentleman from Wisconsin fails to have any regard for them he can account to them when he goes home to ask their support for reelection to the House. The gentleman knows the value of the old soldier. He knows what the old soldier has done for the country. He knows why we erected these homes to take care of the soldier in his old age. And he also knows as well as any man in the House that the Wisconsin mosquito is about as large, if it is not larger, than any other animal of its kind found anywhere, either along the Atlantic seaboard or on the Pacific coast, but he is persistent in ignoring that fact. Any man who has gone along the lakes of which the gentleman boasts knows that the mosquito which comes from a relatively cold climate is larger, more vigorous, with a greater velocity of flight, and a sharper bill than the mosquito which comes from a warm climate.

Mr. GORDON. Has not the gentleman got the mosquito mixed with the June bug? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be, from the standpoint of the gentleman. We are all a little boastful. "We have got something bigger up in our country than anything you have got in your country." I suppose if some one should put a plain, ordinary American bedbug in between the sheets of a bed in the country of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] he would claim that it was a diamond-back terrapin. Of course the Wisconsin mosquito is more voracious than the mosquito down at Hampton Roads, but this home down here ought to be screened for the protection of the old veterans who now spend restless lives because we do not appropriate enough money to supply material and labor to put in the screens at these homes. The gentleman may find fault with me for calling attention to it; he may make objection to the desire of these old men to be made comfortable in their declining years; but I intend to let the country know how they suffer from mosquitoes as we suffer at times from the eloquence of the gentleman from Wisconsin. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Engineer School, Washington, D. C.: Equipment and maintenance of the Engineer School at Washington Barracks, D. C., including purchase and repair of instruments, machinery, implements, models, and materials for the use of the school and for instruction of engineer troops in their special duties as sappers and miners; for land mining, pontoniering, and signaling; for purchase and binding of professional works and periodicals of recent date treating on military and civil engineering and kindred scientific subjects for the library of the United States Engineer School; for incidental expenses of the school, including chemicals, stationery, hardware, machinery, and boats; for pay of civilian clerks, draftsmen, electricians, mechanics, and laborers; compensation of civilian lecturers and payment of tuition fees of student officers at civil technical institutions; for unforeseen expenses; for travel expenses of officers on journeys approved by the Secretary of War and made for the purpose of instruction: Provided, That the traveling expenses herein provided for shall be in lieu of mileage and other allowances; and to provide means for the theoretical and practical instruction at the Engineer School by the purchase of textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, and for other absolutely necessary expenses, $25,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 43, after line 23, insert: "For one power lithographic press for the Engineer School, $6,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that until the gentleman from Virginia makes some explanation.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will read from a memorandum furnished by the Chief of Engineers:

The necessity for military maps of the United States, especially along our frontiers, was presented to the House of Representatives Military Committee in my hearing before the committee. The confidential nature of the information contained in the maps was appreciated by the committee. The necessity for a means of reproducing such maps quickly and economically and in such quantity as may be required is evident. I know of no means of accomplishing the ends sought other than by the use of a power lithographic press controlled and operated by the War Department in close proximity to the War College, which is the place of deposit of all general confidential military information. It is earnestly recommended that an item appropriating $6,000 for the purchase of this press be inserted in the Army appropriation bill after the item for "Engineer School, Washington, D. C."

Mr. STAFFORD. These maps are of a confidential character, that could not with safety and security be printed in the Government Printing Office or any outside agency?

Mr. HAY. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Engineer equipment of troops: For pontoon material, tools, instruments, supplies, and appliances required for use in the engineer equipment of troops, for military surveys, and for engineer operations in the field, including the purchase and preparation of engineer manuals and procurement of special paper for same, and for a reserve supply of above equipment, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, $500,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. HAY. I would like to have the point of order disposed of first.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, my point of order is to line 5, page 44, against the words "and remain available until expended." The law is that the appropriation shall not be longer than two years.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman must understand that this equipment is of a nature that can not all be obtained in one year. This is frequently done. They have to buy pontoon bridges, and it takes some time to make them. If the gentleman is going to insist on a point of order against this language wherever it appears for the making of the reserve supplies, it will be very detrimental to getting such a reserve.

Mr. BORLAND. It is not necessarily so; we frequently have to reappropriate unexpended balances.

Mr. HAY. But you have to wait until the next fiscal year to reappropriate.

Mr. BORLAND. The law is that no appropriations for the Army shall be made for more than two years.

Mr. HAY. I know it is subject to a point of order, but I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that by insisting on the point of order he is interfering with the proper discharge of the duties of these officers and of the most economical way of spending this money.

Mr. BORLAND. I insist that that is not the case, and is not the question before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to increase the appropriation by striking out "$500,000" and inserting "$1,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the figures "$500,000" and insert the figures "$1,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Ordnance service: For the current expenses of the Ordnance Department in connection with purchasing, receiving, storing, and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, comprising police and office duties, rents, tolls, fuel, light, water, and advertising, stationery, typewriters, and adding machines, including their exchange, and office furniture, tools, and instruments of service; for incidental expenses of the Ordnance service and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small arms, and other ordnance stores; for publications for libraries of the Ordnance Department, including the Ordnance Office; subscriptions to periodicals, which may be paid for in advance; for membership dues of arsenals, designated by the Secretary of War in scientific and technical societies and associations; and payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance; and for purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, $375,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia that the particular portion of the paragraph to which I expect to make the point of order is on lines 15, 16, and 17, which provides for the payment of membership dues in scientific and technical societies and associations. I raised the question for the reason that in a number of departments of the Government there is always an estimate for the payment of dues of Government officials in technical and scientific societies. In the Department of Commerce there was a request for a provision to pay such dues of officials in the Census Office and the Bureau of Standards. Similar requests are made in the Department of Labor and in Botanic Gardens, and I am not sure but in one or two other departments outside of the two named.

Personally I do not believe this Government ought to pay membership dues of Government officials in scientific and technical societies and associations. Certainly I think it would be most unfair and would be a discrimination to permit officials in one department to have their dues paid and not in others.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not dispute the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance stores, ammunition: Manufacture of ammunition for small arms and for hand use for reserve supply, ammunition for burials at the National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., ammunition for firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and soldiers' and sailors' State homes, $2,500,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, page 46, strike out the figures $2,500,000 and insert $4,500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That $250,000 of this appropriation may be used to procure gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, including specifications and detailed drawings necessary for the manufacture by the Government and by private manufacturers of ammunition necessary for the use of the land forces of the United States in time of war.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph, and I might say that a similar paragraph occurs on page 47 and another one on page 50. The three items altogether aggregate $650,000, all for gauges, dies, jigs, and so forth.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

The act approved June 3, 1916, provides:

SEC. 123. Procurement of gauges, dies, jigs, etc., necessary for manufacture of arms, etc.: The Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to prepare or cause to be prepared, to purchase or otherwise procure, such gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, including specifications and detailed drawings, as may be necessary for the immediate manufacture, by the Government and by private manufacturers, of arms, ammunition, and special equipment necessary to arm and equip the land forces likely to be required by the United States in time of war: Provided, That in the expenditure of any sums appropriated to carry out the purposes of this section the existing laws prescribing competition in the procurement of supplies by purchase shall not govern, whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of War such action will be for the best interest of the public service.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the law authorized this appropriation for this kind of material, but it does not authorize it as coming from the Military Affairs Committee, which is charged with the duty of providing for the mobile army. The fortifications appropriation bill, which passed this House a short time ago, contains this very provision on page 11:

For the procurement of such gauges, dies, jigs, tools, and fixtures and other special aids and appliances, including such plans, specifications, and detail drawings as may be necessary for the immediate manufacture of arms, ammunitions, and other materials necessary for the defense of the country; for plans for the installation of such material in private plants of the United States, under such contracts and agreements as are made by the Secretary of War.

That is the appropriation carried in the fortifications appropriation bill to comply with that clause of the law which the gentleman has just read, and the amount appropriated is $1,000,000. This military bill provides only for the mobile army. The manufacturing arsenals and everything connected with the manufacture of munitions of war are carried in the fortifications appropriation bill. This bill from the Military Affairs Committee provides for supplies for the mobile army, and this particular item, although authorized by law, is not within the scope of this particular bill.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is entirely mistaken in thinking that the only jurisdiction that the Committee on Military Affairs has is to provide for the mobile army. The rule distinctly says that all matters pertaining to the Military Establishment shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The procurement of arms and ammunition or the procurement of jigs, dies, tools, and fixtures for the purpose of manufacturing them is certainly a part of the Military Establishment, and it is an absurd proposition that the Committee on Appropriations shall have jurisdiction of fortifications which is a part of the Military Establishment of the country and should have the power to appropriate for field artillery and field artillery ammunition for the Regular Army, while the Committee on Military Affairs is given jurisdiction to appropriate for field artillery and field artillery ammunition for the National Guard. It is an absurd kind of ruling which was made a good many years ago when these committees were first separated, and if this were the proper time to do it I would ask the Chair to make a ruling now which would give to the Committee on Military Affairs authority to take care of the entire Military Establishment of the country, but in this particular case I do not think there can be any question that the Committee on Military Affairs has the right under the law and has the jurisdiction under the law to appropriate for these things. If by reason of this dual jurisdiction the Committee on Appropriations has already appropriated $1,000,000 for this purpose, if the Chair overrules the point of order, I shall move to strike out this appropriation from this bill. It is because of the fact that both committees undertake to assume jurisdiction of these things that these duplications occur. I did not know and the Committee on Military Affairs did not know that the committee on fortifications or the subcommittee on fortifications of the Appropriations Committee had made this appropriation.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, there was no protest made by the Committee on Appropriations when the Committee on Military Affairs originated the very law under which the appropriations are now made?

Mr. HAY. Of course not. They could not do that.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize in great measure with the views advanced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]. I do not know that any of us is responsible for the original division of this authority. It might be that the authority over coast defense and manufacture of munitions of war ought to have gone to the Committee on Military Affairs, but it did not, and it is simply a question here of one committee having undoubted jurisdiction—that is, the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, having charge of fortifications and coast defense, which does provide for the manufacturing arsenals and manufacture of munitions of war as against the doubtful claim of right upon the part of the Committee on Military Affairs, a right which I am convinced is not well founded. The Chair has only one course to take in that case. The House having already acted on this matter by passing an appropriation on the fortifications appropriation bill, without any point having been raised by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] as to its power, there is no need for duplicate appropriation in this bill. I think the Chair ought to decide the question. I do not care whether it goes out by motion or by decision of the Chair.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the law provides that this equipment, and so forth, shall be necessary to arm and equip the land forces likely to be required by the United States in time of war, and forces that are likely to be equipped in time of war are all under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, and it has never been claimed that the National Guard or the Volunteer Army, a part of the land forces, can be under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman a question. Is not that just as true as to knapsacks and artillery harness and other things manufactured in the Government arsenals provided for in the fortifications appropriation bill? There is no difference between this class of goods and tools, dies, and other things.

Mr. HAY. This bill carries an appropriation for the manufacture of harness for the Field Artillery and the National Guard, and it carries an appropriation for other equipment for the troops, both the Army and the National Guard, and unquestionably we have the right, the Committee on Military Affairs has the jurisdiction, under this law, to provide for these tools and fixtures for the use of the land forces of the United States. If it is true that by some ruling heretofore made the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over field artillery ammunition and field artillery guns for the Regular Army, that ruling ought not to be extended so as to take from the Committee on Military Affairs, which has more information about these things and deals more generally with the Army, its jurisdiction over the matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, we all know that originally down to somewhere about 1885 the Committee on Appropriations had full and plenary power of appropriations for all the various establishments of the Government. At that time some jurisdiction was taken away from the Committee on Appropriations and lodged with other appropriating committees. To warrant authority for appropriations for one of these branch committees authorization for it must be found explicitly in the rules creating these subordinate committees, else I respectfully contend the authority is still lodged in the Committee on Appropriations. Under the authority vested in the Committee on Military Affairs we find the following in the rules:

For the Military Establishment, the militia, and the public defense, including the appropriations for their support and for that of the Military Academy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

In the note under that heading we find the following:

To this committee belongs the jurisdiction of legislative propositions relating to the War Department; but it does not report appropriations for the salaries therein. It also reports legislation for national soldiers' homes, military parks, and battle fields and national cemeteries; but appropriations therefor are reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

So in the notes referring to the Appropriations Committee we have numerous precedents where the Committee on Appropriations has authority to vote the necessary appropriations for arsenals and for the implements and equipment of those arsenals. Now, this item is on all fours with the rule that has been acknowledged by innumerable precedents that the Appropriations Committee is the appropriating authority after once the Committee on Military Affairs creates the legislation, and that as in the case of arsenals, although the Committee on Military Affairs has authority to provide for the personnel of those arsenals, yet for the establishment of them, the original authorization for them, and all that pertains to their equipment, that authority is lodged in the Committee on Appropriations. So if the Chair is going to follow the precedents that have been adhered to always, as I respectfully contend, along similar lines to that under consideration, the Chair will have to hold this appropriation naturally and properly belongs to the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair in passing on this matter will confine its decision to the question of authority. The propriety of striking out the appropriation under consideration (conceding this committee has jurisdiction), on the ground that another committee has made a like appropriation, is a matter that will be left to the discretion of the Committee of the Whole. The rule is very clear, that proposed legislation relating to the Military Establishment and the public defense, including appropriations for their support, shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. This committee is certainly an appropriating committee. On the question of jurisdiction between the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Committee on Appropriations, the following citation is made from the elaborate ruling of Mr. Speaker Henderson:

Looking at these two sections together, and without considering any other matters, it would seem clear to the Chair that all matters pertaining to the Military Establishment, and the public defense, excepting for fortifications and coast defenses, and excepting deficiencies for the Military Establishment and the public defense, should be considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. In other words, that the Committee on Appropriations should be limited in its consideration of appropriations to fortifications and coast defenses and to deficiencies growing out of these, and also to deficiencies growing out of appropriations for the Military Establishment and the public defense.

That is a very clear statement of principle, but the Chair is frank to say that there are other modifying decisions that reduce its apparent sweeping effect. It seems to me, however, that the principle announced is one that the Chair ought to follow. The general jurisdiction of the Military Committee ought to be maintained so far as it can be done under the precedents, for to it appropriately belong all appropriations relating to matters connected with the Military Establishment. The paragraph under consideration would seem to naturally fall under that head.

There is nothing in this paragraph that necessarily relates to arsenals. It appropriates to provide certain tools and appliances to be utilized by the Government and by private manufacturers in making ammunition. This is undoubtedly related to the Military Establishment. It seems to the Chair, on principle, that this appropriation, under the general statement made by Mr. Speaker Henderson, should be made by the Committee on Military Affairs. This provision is intended to provide tools to make ammunition for our armed forces. Undoubtedly the making of ammunition is vitally related to, and required by our Military Establishment. Is there anything in the precedents which would give the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction to make this appropriation? The Speaker concludes the basic ruling above cited as follows: "The Chair therefore holds that the appropriations for machinery, tools, and fixtures for manufacturing small arms belong to the Committee on Appropriations." The paragraph under consideration provides an appropriation for tools and fixtures for manufacturing ammunition, not arms. There is no express precedent that gives jurisdiction to make this appropriation to the Committee on Appropriations. Under the general principle announced by Speaker Henderson, and cited supra, this jurisdiction appropriately belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Chair so holds. To hold otherwise, would be in derogation of the manifest jurisdiction of this committee. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the amendment then, because I understand the chairman of the committee to say that the million dollars that has already gone through the House will cover each one of these three items and a little more. He said he did not know there was any such appropriation in the fortifications bill.

Mr. HAY. I do not propose, if I can help it, to have this stricken out, because I do not know whether the Senate is going——

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The amendment of the gentleman has not been reported and I would like to know what it is.

Mr. BORLAND. It is to strike out lines 10 to 16, page 46.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 46, strike out all of lines 10 to 16, inclusive.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, the ruling of the Chair governs the admissibility of this item in the bill, but it is perfectly clear it was put in there by the committee without knowledge that it was a duplication of an item in the fortification bill. I am free to say that if the question were a new one and it was up for the decision for the first time as to which committee should have charge of these manufacturing arsenals of the Government, there would not be much doubt in my own mind. But the appropriation in the fortification bill does carry all the items for the manufacturing arsenals which make this material of various kinds, such as rifles, gun sights, knapsacks, harness, artillery, carriages, and canteens. And almost everything that is used in the Army of that general manufactured nature is made at these arsenals, and all of it is provided for in the fortification bill and none of it is provided for in the military bill. Now, of course, the effect of this proposition is to take a small part out, but a very integral part, that is, the dies, the jigs, and tools and fixtures, of the general appropriation for arsenals, and put them under a separate committee. Now, as a practical proposition it is a bad one. Now, no matter what the original legal mistake was, as a practical proposition, to allow a committee to furnish the tools, dies, and fixtures, and let another committee provide for the pay and machinery and housing and supplying the materials, is bad business, and I think the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will recognize that. It happens by this ruling that a small proportion of this arsenal work is now under the jurisdiction of this Committee on Military Affairs. That is not of any value to it at all. I am free to say that, and I know the gentleman from Virginia will admit it. But on the question of striking out the appropriation, it is simply here, the Fortifications Committee reported, and this House passed upon and approved an appropriation for $1,000,000 for these very items.

The Military Affairs Committee appropriate $650,000 in three items for what they thought was the same purpose. They did not know, they say, that there was any appropriation in the fortifications bill. They put that amount at $650,000, and the fortifications committee put it at $1,000,000. But, by every possible rule of common sense and arithmetic, this does not mean that it should be $1,650,000.

I do not want the gentleman from Virginia, because in pursuance of a very general duty here I have made this point of order, to feel that that is any question of conflict between the two committees. I would just as soon see the committee of the gentleman from Virginia appropriate the money as any other committee that I know of. But the mere question that has arisen of conflict between the two committees does not justify both of the committees rushing in and making an appropriation.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I hope the motion of the gentleman from Missouri will not prevail. The fact that the Committee on Appropriations assumed jurisdiction of the appropriation for this purpose and did appropriate $1,000,000 is no reason why this item should be stricken from this bill.

I shall not waste any time in discussing the question of jurisdiction of these two committees, but I do want to say that the only objection I have to this item is the fact that it does not appropriate more money. The evidence submitted to us in the hearings before our committee shows that it would cost millions and millions of dollars to make the necessary provision for these jigs and dies and forms, and so forth, to put our country into a condition of real preparedness. And I want to say this in passing, that of all the items in the program of preparedness in which we have engaged during this session of Congress this, to my mind, is the most important, for it makes provision for the things that in case of war we can turn over to the private manufacturers of the country and they can make the ammunition and the shells and the guns that are necessary for our Government in time of war. I am one of those who believe in having large reserves of this character. I believe until we have this law enacted we ought to have a larger supply of ammunition and guns and field artillery. However, under this legislation, when an emergency would arise all we would need to do would be to turn these reserve articles over to the manufacturers, and they could immediately go to work and manufacture the things necessary for our national defense.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. What would be the use of piling up a lot of jigs and patterns for years to come, when dies and tools and jigs change and we might not need them at all in a few years?

Mr. McKENZIE. The Army officers, and especially Gen. Crozier, stated to our committee that there was little chance for any particular changes to be made either in our field-artillery guns or in our service rifles.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word on this matter, because there is an assumption that the appropriations in the fortification bill for dies, jigs, and gauges is for the same purpose as this. It is not. The fortifications committee appropriate only for the guns that are put in fortifications and for part of our field artillery; that is, the field artillery for the Army; and for making these guns and their ammunition they appropriate $1,000,000 for making dies and jigs, and so forth. The Committee on Military Affairs have to appropriate for all rifles and rifle ammunition, and they likewise appropriate for field artillery and its ammunition for the militia or National Guard. These are different purposes than those in the fortifications appropriation bill, and it is right to have these separate appropriations in this bill. As to the necessity of this item, does not everybody know that even if there were a conflict of jurisdiction we would recognize that things are different from what they were 10 days ago, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] will certainly recognize that. But outside of that the amount is only too small. I was about to bring here a paper I had cut from the Scientific American Supplement the other day, explaining that in order to put factories in operation to manufacture the shells that are now being used in the field by one of the belligerents—the paper gave the number of thousands of men and the number of factories—it would take 800 men five years to provide the dies and jigs and gauges that would make that quantity of shells. Eight hundred men for five years would be required. We ought to put 4,000 men on the work and do it in one year. We need that machinery in order to be able to supply the people of these United States and to put them in the field in time of war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee about the proviso on page 46 in lines 8 and 9. We have a proviso in there which reads as follows:

Provided, That not more than $10,000 of this appropriation may be used in the purchase of ammunition.

Now, I was very much in favor of that when it was written into the bill, but we have increased that appropriation now to $4,000,000, and under existing circumstances it seems to me that it might be a dangerous limitation to leave it in the bill. I would like to know what the chairman's opinion is about the matter.

Mr. HAY. I think, Mr. Chairman, that limitation ought to be left in there, because we can make all this ammunition at our arsenals.

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand that, Mr. Chairman. We could do that if we had time. But it requires time to do it.

Mr. HAY. It does require some time.

Mr. McKENZIE. But suppose we were called upon to use a large amount of ammunition in a short time. Would not that limitation be very embarrassing?

Mr. HAY. Well, I will suggest this to the gentleman, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$2,000,000," so that that would provide for an expenditure of $2,000,000 outside, if they wanted to do it.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be better to strike out the proviso entirely and put in "for the manufacture or purchase"? We do not want to encourage the purchase.

Mr. HAY. We do not want to encourage the purchase; no.

Mr. MANN. But you provide for the construction of gauges, dies, and so forth; and, of course, if you have to use those in the hands of private manufacturers you will purchase them.

Mr. HAY. But the $2,500,000 worth can be very readily made in the Government arsenals.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. HAY. And providing that not more than $2,000,000 of this appropriation can be used in that way, we having added $2,000,000 to it, so that it is now $2,500,000, that would leave the Government $2,000,000 to purchase ammunition outside.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think that is all right.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 8, page 46, by striking out "$10,000" and inserting "$2,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Manufacture of arms: For manufacturing, repairing, procuring, and issuing arms at the national armories, $2,000,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$5,000,000."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$5,000,000" and inserting "$20,000,000," and I would like to say a word on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment to the amendment, which the CLERK will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Strike out "$5,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$20,000,000."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, we all agree on the purpose which is stated in this bill. Three lines further on we find the statement that we wish to have the manufacture by the Government and by private manufacturers of tools and appliances necessary "to arm the land forces likely to be required by the United States in time of war." Those land forces at the present time are estimated at 20,000,000 able-bodied men, who will be put in training, even if they are not called into the field. The experience of the present war in Europe is that in trench fighting four rifles are required to every man in the trenches. One gets out of order and has to be repaired. Another lies by the soldier, and has to be picked up in case of accident or difficulty of one kind and another, and four altogether are required. But we at least ought to have a rifle for every man, and there are to be 20,000,000 men.

The appropriation of $1,700,000 out of $2,000,000 provided for in this bill provided for only 100,000 rifles per year, and I ask how many years at the rate of 100,000 rifles a year it would take to make 20,000,000 rifles? I ask that question, and will let you try to figure it out yourself, because it is very singular how people fail to understand what homeopathic supplies we are giving to the Army under this bill.

One hundred thousand rifles a year in 10 years will make 1,000,000 rifles. To make 10,000,000 rifles would require 100 years, and it would take 200 years to give the 20,000,000 rifles that you must provide. This bill as introduced gave rifles for only one-half of 1 per cent of our population, and that population is increasing by at least 3 per cent every year. If we are to provide arms for our people let us do it within a reasonable time—in 10 or in 20 years, not in 200 years.

The chairman of the committee now proposes an amendment to increase the appropriation to $5,000,000. Five million dollars a year will provide for manufacturing somewhere near 300,000 rifles a year if we devote all the money to rifles. It will probably be nearer 250,000 a year, which will give us 20,000,000 rifles in 80 years. If we need to arm the people and to have rifles for the people we want them in a shorter time than that. Our Government factories, running night and day, are able to supply 500,000 a year if they run in three shifts. The United States ought to have more factories. Private factories ought to be put to work. But when we know that we may be asked within a few years to call out 5,000,000 or 10,000,000 men we ought to provide for having the arms for those five or ten million men within 5 or 10 years, and not deceive ourselves by making one-half of 1 per cent a year or 1½ per cent a year, so as not to be ready for a century.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. I suppose the gentleman understands that we have a million rifles now?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I understand we have only 700,000 rifles of the best pattern. We have 300,000 extra Krag rifles.

Mr. GORDON. But they are pretty good ones, are they not?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; they are pretty good, but they are not the best.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman thinks we ought to have three rifles for each man?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No; only one.

Mr. GORDON. How soon would you have those 20,000,000 men ready to call out?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If you have the arms you can educate the men all at once; but you have got to have the men and the arms all together, and it takes time to do that. You must have the arms first or you can not call out your people effectively.

Mr. GORDON. Does not the gentleman understand that this European war has created a demand for small arms in this country that has multiplied by many hundred per cent the facilities for their manufacture?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; it has.

Mr. GORDON. Then, what is the use of wasting all this money at this particular time?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Those rifles that we made for other countries are of a different pattern, that we can not use.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, they are!

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Certainly. There is not one of them that will use our ammunition. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not ask any more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey) there were—ayes 22, noes 41.

Accordingly the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, a large part of this money is to be spent in my district. I appreciate that that makes me a poor judge of the wisdom of the appropriation. I can not pretend that I am disinterested because of that fact, but at the same time I want to state that I am glad the chairman of the committee has recognized that in the exigencies which now exist the provision of $250,000 last year was ridiculously small and that even the $1,750,000, which was the amount we appropriated annually until 1909, is inadequate. This five million ought to run our arsenals at double shifts and produce about 200,000 rifles a year. I think this, too, is a good time to impress upon Members voting for this amendment that it is of great importance that we should keep in these arsenals, where the Government does its manufacturing, the skilled mechanics, who can not be secured at any moment during a war. In fact, it will be very difficult now, I think, in the pressure that there is for mechanics all over the country, to obtain sufficient at once.

Certainly they will have to be educated before this amount can be expended. Being interested, I simply wish to express my approval of the amendment which the gentleman has suggested, being assured that it will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That $1,700,000 of this appropriation be used exclusively for the manufacture of rifles.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out this paragraph, because it is no longer necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the proviso in lines 11 and 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That $200,000 of this appropriation may be used to secure gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids, and appliances, including specifications and detailed drawings, necessary for the manufacture by the Government and by private manufactures, of arms necessary to arm the land forces likely to be required by the United States in time of war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that proviso; and with all deference to the ruling recently made by the Chairman, perhaps there is a distinction which will justify sustaining this point of order. There is a difference in the phraseology of the two provisos. This pertains to the manufacture by the Government, or rather the procuring by the Government, of gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, including specifications and detailed drawings necessary for the manufacture by the Government and by private manufacturers of ammunition necessary for the use of the land forces of the United States in time of war.

The other provision, to which the Chair overruled the point of order, which is found on page 46, relates to the manufacture of ammunition for the use of the land forces. In the decision cited by the Chair for his warrant in overruling the point of order I direct the attention of the chairman to the matter that was in issue, following that part of the decision which the Chair read to the committee, found on page 710:

Manufacture of arms. Manufacture, repairing, procuring, and issuing arms at the national armory, including machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture.

The part in dispute in the first item is in these words:

Including machinery, tools, and fixtures for their manufacture at the arsenals.

I now direct the attention of the Chair to the res decidendi of the decision, which is found in the closing paragraph, which, I believe, differentiates the jurisdiction of the two committees, and with which I believe the Chair is already conversant:

The Chair therefore holds that the appropriations for the manufacture of small arms and equipment for the Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery at the armories and arsenals are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, and that the appropriations for buildings, installation of plant, machinery, tools, fixtures for manufacturing—

Here is the language I wish specially to emphasize—fixtures for manufacturing small arms and equipment belong to the Committee on Appropriations; and accordingly the Chair refers the four items in controversy to that committee, subject to the approval of the House.

In the item under consideration the things intended to be provided for are fixtures in the nature of permanent implements. I think the Chair, as well as the House, should take judicial cognizance of the explanation of this item when the bill originally providing for it passed the House was to provide implements and attachments in the nature of permanent implements to be utilized in case of emergency for the manufacture of arms. The phraseology of the proviso under consideration extends to all arms manufactured by the Government or by private manufacturers necessary for the land forces of the United States. It is not limited to the Infantry, not limited to the Cavalry, or to the Artillery, but to the land forces, which would include the Coast Artillery of the Government. It goes without saying that all equipment necessary for the manufacture of small arms for the Coast Artillery of the Government would be within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, which has jurisdiction of the appropriations for fortifications; and even if this phraseology should have the narrower construction of applying only to the Artillery, Infantry, and Cavalry, nevertheless, as it partakes of that character which involves permanent investment, implements, and fixtures, to be utilized in case of necessity, therefore under the decision which the chairman has cited as a basis for his decision I wish to submit to the Chair that this item is subject to the point of order as being one for the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is upon a paragraph different in its content of facts, from the paragraph to which the point of order of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] was directed. The former paragraph afforded an appropriation to provide jigs, dies, and so forth, for the manufacture by the Government and by private manufacturers of ammunition necessary for the use of the land forces of the United States in time of war. The paragraph under present consideration provides an appropriation for jigs, dies, and so forth, for the manufacture by the Government, and private manufacturers of arms necessary to arm the land forces likely to be required by the United States in time of war. In the one case provision is made to acquire fixtures for the manufacture of ammunition in the other for acquiring like fixtures for the manufacture of arms.

The Chair stated in its former ruling that it would follow the precedents when those precedents clearly delimited the jurisdiction respectively of the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Military Affairs, having in mind to go no further in reducing the jurisdiction of the latter committee in matters relating to the Military Establishment, and the public defense, than it was compelled to go by the force of these precedents. The basic decision in this matter of jurisdiction was made in February 1900, by Mr. Speaker Henderson. The Speaker concluded his elaborate ruling as follows:

The Chair therefore holds that appropriations for fixtures, tools, and machinery for manufacturing small arms, belong to the Committee on Appropriations. (Hinds, Vol. IV, p. 712.)

The paragraph under consideration is as follows:

Provided further, That $200,000 of this appropriation may be used to procure gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, including specifications and detailed drawings, necessary for the manufacture by the Government and by private manufacturers, of arms necessary to arm the land forces likely to be required by the United States in time of war.

It is very clear that this paragraph provides for tools, fixtures and machinery, for manufacturing small arms. Hence it is within the express terms of Mr. Speaker Henderson's ruling, and the point of order of the gentleman from Wisconsin is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Will the Chair hear me a word on the point of order? Did the Chair take into consideration the fact that this provides for the instruments necessary for the manufacture by the Government? Would the point of order, if the Chair is willing to indicate, go to the extent of ruling out a provision for the procurement of gauges, dies, and so forth, for the use by private manufacturers? In other words, does the authority to appropriate for small arms include the authority to provide gauges, dies, jigs, tools, and so forth, to be used by private manufacturers under contract of sale to the Government?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not take into consideration the matter suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair followed a precedent, which appears to be clearly in point, not undertaking to say whether it is a good, or a bad precedent. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance stores and supplies: For overhauling, cleaning, repairing, and preserving ordnance and ordnance stores in the hands of troops and at the arsenals, posts, and depots; for purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores to fill requisitions of troops; for Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery equipments, including horse equipments for Cavalry and Artillery, $3,000,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$3,000,000" and insert the figures "$6,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was considered and agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do it for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee whether it would be in order to reinsert the provision just stricken out on the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], if he inserted in the amendment that the tools, dies, jigs, and so forth, were for the purpose of manufacturing small arms for the National Guard?

Mr. HAY. I think that would be in order; yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Would the gentleman approve of such an amendment?

Mr. HAY. Yes. I will offer the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 47, line 11, and I move to amend the bill by inserting the following:

Provided further, That $200,000 of this appropriation may be used to procure gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, including specifications and detailed drawings, necessary for the manufacture by the Government and by private manufacturers, of small arms necessary to arm the National Guard which is likely to be required by the United States in time of war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order on the amendment. When I pressed the point of order a few moments ago I was relying on a statement of the gentleman from Missouri that a similar provision was carried in the fortification bill. Since then I have been advised that the fortification bill does not make provision for this character of work. Under the exigent circumstances, I am not willing, although I believe the decision of the Chair is correct, to hamper in any way provisions for equipping the Government for defense, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order to the original proviso.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order for the present, to see if we can not clear up the situation. As I understand the jurisdiction of the two committees, it is this, and I think it is perfectly plain: That touching the machinery for the Government arsenal which would include dies, jigs, and so forth, for the Government, the Committee on Appropriations has exclusive jurisdiction. Touching the appropriation for heavy ordnance, with the exception of that which is intended for the militia, the Committee on Appropriations has exclusive jurisdiction. Touching the small-arms appropriations, whether for the militia or for the Regular Army, the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction.

Now, it would be clearly in order, in my judgment, for the Committee on Military Affairs to carry in the Army appropriation bill a provision for the supplying of jigs, tools, and fixtures to private manufacturers for the manufacture of small arms, or for the manufacture of field artillery for the militia. It would not be in order for them to provide for these jigs and fixtures for the manufacture by the Government, because when it comes to equipping the arsenals it is a matter for the Committee on Appropriations in the sundry civil bill. That is the true distinction, I think, which ought to be maintained as to jurisdiction. The amendment just suggested by the gentleman from Virginia is for the manufacture by the Government or private individuals. In the first place, I do not understand that anybody wants to create a lot of jigs and fixtures for use in manufacture by the Government. The very purpose is to create an equipment for use by private factories. I suggest that if the gentleman strikes out the words "by the Government and" his amendment now would be in order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, of course the item in the bill provided for the manufacture by the Government, and when the Chair ruled upon that, as I thought properly, I asked the Chair whether he had taken into consideration this other thing, which, of course, he was not required to rule upon, and he stated, as I understood, that he had not ruled on that question.

Mr. SHERLEY. My idea is that the jurisdiction is as I have indicated.

Mr. MANN. I think so, and I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not desire in any way to trespass upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I then will modify the amendment by leaving out the words "by the Government and."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, when a point of order is made and the Chairman sustains the point of order and the item goes out of the bill, what is the process for getting it back?

The CHAIRMAN. It is supposed to be gotten back by unanimous consent or by amendment.

Mr. FESS. That is, a vacation of the ruling of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will do all he can, of course, to aid the committee to do what it desires. The gentleman from Virginia has asked unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, may I have the amendment repeated?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want to offer his amendment now in the language that was in the bill, simply leaving out the part with respect to the manufacture by the Government?

Mr. HAY. Yes. As I understood the gentleman from Kentucky to contend, and the Chair to rule, the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over small arms for the Regular Army, but not over small arms for the National Guard.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think there is a distinction even there. The Committee on Appropriations has exclusive jurisdiction over all machinery for the manufacture of small arms or any other kind of arms either for the militia or Regular Army, but when you are providing money for small arms—not for the machinery, but simply small arms—or when you are providing for jigs and tools for private manufacture of small arms, then I think the gentleman's committee has jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to return to offer an amendment, and I understand he desires to offer now the same item that was in the bill, leaving out the words "by the Government and."

The CHAIRMAN. That is the amendment at the desk, and the Clerk will report it with that language left out.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, before that is done I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] a question. Is it the sundry civil appropriation bill that has jurisdiction of the equipment of arsenals?

Mr. SHERLEY. The sundry civil appropriation bill carries the items in regard to the equipment of arsenals, except to this extent, that where provision is made for the manufacture of various munitions or equipment in the fortifications appropriation bill, moneys out of that can be expended for things that are incident to their manufacture, but you do not now in the fortifications appropriation bill provide for the enlargement of an arsenal or for any large machine that would be bought irrespective of the making of a particular quantity of something that is authorized, but if a new lathe were necessary in the making of field artillery, money could be taken out of a provision in the fortifications appropriation bill for that purpose.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to look on page 46, line 13. Would a point of order have laid against the words "manufactured by the Government and," on that paragraph?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is subject to the point of order.

Mr. HAY. The Chair has already ruled upon that.

Mr. GARDNER. I quite understand, but I wanted to get at the question, because it is really worth while that the House should understand the different jurisdictions as between the sundry civil appropriation bill, the fortifications appropriation bill, and the appropriations bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. I confess the discussion has been very enlightening to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

Page 47, following line 10, insert the following:

"Provided, That $200,000 of this appropriation may be used to procure gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, including specifications and detailed drawings necessary for the manufacture by private manufacturers of arms necessary to arm the land forces likely to be required by the United States in time of war."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to return to this portion of the bill in order to offer the amendment just reported in lieu of the language that was stricken out under the point of order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. We will return to that section of the bill, accordingly, and the question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That not more than $100,000 of this appropriation may be used for the purchase of ordnance stores.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the figures "$100,000," in line 3, page 47, and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, while the House is considering the provisions of this bill relating to contracts with private companies to supply munitions of one kind and another, it may be interested to know what some companies have done and have shown their ability and willingness to do, and I wish to take time to tell of a contract between the Government of the United States and one of the motor car companies of Michigan. Several weeks ago, when the situation on the Mexican border was more acute than it had been for some time, officials of the War Department wished to secure a number of armored motor trucks, if they could be obtained to be sent to the border and put into service at once. An official of the War Department learned that the Packard Motor Car Co., of Detroit, had been making armored motor trucks practically after the design wished by the Government, so he called the office of the Packard Co. by long-distance phone. He inquired if the company was equipped to make these trucks, and learned that it was, and then asked if the company was willing to accept a contract from the Government to supply 27 of these trucks, to take up the work immediately, and supply them without delay. The official of the company with whom the department official talked said the company was equipped and was willing to do the work. The order for the trucks was given and the facilities of the Packard Co. were at once, so to speak, placed at the disposal of the War Department. In addition to the 27 motor trucks the Packard Co.

was asked to supply an expert driver and an expert mechanician for each car and promised to do so. The contract was made, the work was begun, the experts were engaged and made ready, a train of freight cars was placed upon the sidetrack in the yards of the Packard Co., Pullman cars were supplied for the sleeping and care of the men, a dining car was attached to the train, the trucks were made, loaded, and completely equipped, the experts were supplied, as I have stated, and the train left the yards of the Packard Co. in exactly 22 hours after the telephone receiver was hung up at the Detroit end of the line. [Applause.] The train was given the right of way over railroad tracks, the most available route to the Mexican border, and it reached its destination just 51 hours after it pulled out of the Packard Co.'s yards. [Applause.]

About the same time the Ford Motor Co. was asked if it was equipped and would be willing to supply to the War Department a large number of the kind of truck that company had been making and which the War Department wished. The official of the company with whom the War Department official talked replied that the company was equipped to make that car and would make the cars by contract with the War Department——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it true Mr. Ford has also given notice to all of his employees that any of them who go into the service of the Army or the militia can not again obtain a job with him?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. In aswer to the question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] I will say that I am not authorized to quote Mr. Ford. I have had no communication with him, nor have I read what he has said in reply to these newspaper reports; but I am informed by men who know what Mr. Ford has said that he positively denies the statement attributed to him as referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky; that he denies having said that men employed by him or by the Ford Co. who enlist for military service will not be permitted to return to their work. On the contrary, he is reported to have said, and I believe I may state it as a fact, that he has said he is willing his men shall enlist and that at the conclusion of their service they will be permitted to return to the places they left for the patriotic purpose of answering the call of their country. I repeat that I have no authority to speak for Mr. Ford; he is abundantly able to speak for himself; but evidently the statement first attributed to him has, very unfortunately, gained wider publicity than has the statement of his real sentiments. I am, therefore, pleased to be able to make these remarks so the House and the country may know the truth. Mr. Speaker, as I was saying when interrupted, the Ford Co. replied that it was fully equipped, and if so desired by the War Department, would undertake the construction of trucks. And when asked how long it would take them to make and have ready for shipment 1,000 of these trucks, the Ford Co. replied that they would have to have a little notice; that if they were notified at 4 o'clock in the afternoon of one day, the cars would be completed and ready for shipment at the close of the next day. [Applause.] I speak of these things, Mr. Chairman, as showing the ability and facility with which some of our manufacturers can meet the requirements of the Government, and the willingness with which they respond to the wishes of the Government promptly and efficiently to do all in their power to supply the needs of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment which is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Automatic machine rifles: For the purchase, manufacture, and test of automatic machine rifles, including their sights and equipments, to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, $1,400,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to increase the appropriation so as to provide $2,000,000, in line 23. Then I will say after that is agreed to I propose to offer a further amendment providing for $2,000,000 for automatic machine guns for the National Guard.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the first amendment I would like to offer.

Mr. HAY. I would like to have the first amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend on page 48, line 23, by striking out "$1,400,000" and inserting "$2,000,000."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the "$2,000,000" of the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, and insert "$3,360,000," and then I shall follow that up with another amendment for the National Guard in excess of the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia. I understand the second amendment has not been offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been offered; that is a separate amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER. The second amendment of the gentleman has not been reported from the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands it, but the Chair understands the gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to the first amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GARDNER. I say that has not been reported.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been reported. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Amend the Hay amendment by striking out "$2,000,000," and insert "$3,360,000."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts to my amendment will not be agreed to. The amount I propose for these automatic machine guns will furnish about 1,400 of those guns in addition to what we already have, and that will furnish a sufficient amount to be used for the troops we have at present. Now, if there is any necessity for any more, why, we are perfectly willing to give more if they are needed. As a matter of fact the War Department has not asked to add anything to this item. They did ask $1,670,000 for machine guns for the National Guard. I am proposing to appropriate $2,000,000 for that purpose, so there will be $4,000,000 appropriated for the machine guns which can be used either by the Regular Army, the National Guard, or Volunteers, and if any more is necessary or asked for by the War Department so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to give it to them, but in view of the fact that these machine guns which they now propose to purchase cost $3,000 and they have been trying out a gun which only costs $1,200, I do not think we ought to go to the extreme in making appropriations for these machine guns.

Mr. GARDNER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not true the gentleman has had a communication from the War Department since the estimate was made of $1,400,000 for machine guns for the Regular Army without reference to this crisis, but for an accumulation against the outbreak of war, and is it not a fact that instead of five machine guns to a regiment the War Department decided we ought to have 12?

Mr. HAY. I have had no such communication.

Mr. GARDNER. I printed one, at all events——

Mr. HAY. The gentleman may have had it, but I have not.

Mr. GARDNER. Is the gentleman sure none has been sent to his committee?

Mr. HAY. I am very sure. At least, if it has, it never came to me.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, my amendment has nothing to do with the present crisis. It is based on the statement made by Gen. Crozier when he appeared before the gentleman's committee that we needed $1,400,000 for the Regular Army for machine guns and one million six hundred thousand and odd dollars for the National Guard. The gentleman in his bill did not put in a cent for the National Guard machine guns. Now, then, since Gen. Crozier asked for those amounts he has written a letter, which I have put in the RECORD, showing that those estimates were based on the old plan of having five machine guns to each regiment. But the War Department has now accepted a new plan of 12 guns to each regiment. It is on that basis that I have offered an amendment to increase the appropriation of $1,400,000 to $3,360,000.

Now, in regard to the gentleman's statement that we are going to get new machine guns—how much did he say that these guns were going to cost?

Mr. HAY. Three thousand dollars.

Mr. GARDNER. And they will be made by the Vickers Co.?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARDNER. Now, Mr. Chairman, the fact is this: The Vickers Co., when they are able to turn out machine guns, will be able to turn them out in vast quantities. They are always on the point of being able to turn them out. Gen. Crozier said in April that $1,400,000 was necessary for the Regular Army on the old basis of five machine guns to a regiment and $1,600,000 additional for the National Guard on the same basis. Since then that allowance has become obsolete in the War Department.

Mr. HAY. Now, if the gentleman will permit, the amount of money that I have suggested, if appropriated, would, on the basis he says the War Department has decided upon—12 machine guns to every regiment—provide machine guns for 100 regiments if they provided 12 for each one.

Mr. GARDNER. And that allows nothing for wastage.

Mr. HAY. That is very true. Now, the gentleman goes on further and says the Vickers Co., from whom we have to buy these guns, is not ready to turn them out in large quantities.

Mr. GARDNER. So I am informed.

Mr. HAY. What is the use of appropriating the amount of money, then——

Mr. GARDNER. So that when we do want them we can have them instantaneously.

Mr. HAY. And they can create a deficiency and buy as many of them as——

Mr. GARDNER. Just as if you had had a large amount last year you would not be short of Cavalry horses now.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is mistaken. The War Department has the right, in time of war particularly, to purchase as many of these machine guns as they want. They have not sent me any estimates. I do not know how many they want. I am not advised that they want 12 guns to each one of these regiments, except from what the gentleman from Massachusetts says he has been advised.

Mr. GARDNER. May I call the gentleman's attention to Gen. Crozier's testimony on page 770, at the bottom, as follows:

The European experience, the tendency of thought, I believe, in the Army, and my own views are to the effect that that is not nearly a large enough number, and there ought to be at least 12 per regiment instead of 5, and I have the figures that would correspond to that number.

And since that time the War Department has officially adopted that number.

Mr. HAY. If they have, they have not advised me of it. As I say, we are providing now by the appropriation of the money. I have suggested money enough to provide for 100 regiments. We have on hand about 700 of these guns, so that we will have enough; and if there is any trouble about it, if there is wastage or anything of that sort, the Government has the right to go on and buy them. Now, as the gentleman very well knows, the Congress will appropriate money to pay for them.

Mr. GARDNER. As a matter of fact, we have 952 completed. Out of those only 175 are assigned to the National Guard.

Mr. HAY. But the gentleman knows very well that the others can be assigned to the troops who are drafted into the service of the United States.

Mr. GARDNER. All of these things can be gotten in time.

Mr. HAY. If that is the case, we are appropriating too much. I am proposing to appropriate much more than was asked for by the department.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, taking the figures of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that 12 machine guns are required for each regiment, take the number of machine guns in existence, already authorized, and in process of construction, which is 1,077, with the 1,400 that will be provided by the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, it will make a total of 2,477 machine guns. Now, it is proposed, as I understand, by the War Department, to organize separate machine-gun companies with each regiment of the mobile army, companies of about 60 men each, which will handle about 12 machine guns. So far we have not perfected that organization. When that organization is perfected there will be about 60 machine-gun companies for the Infantry and about 25 for the Cavalry, and, estimating 100 regiments for the existing organizations of the National Guard, will mean 100 machine-gun companies for the National Guard, a total of 185 machine-gun companies for the entire regimental organizations. At 12 guns to the company, it would make a total of 2,220 guns, less than the total number of guns already in existence, building, and authorized by this appropriation; so that I think, in consideration of the fact that unquestionably there will be plenty of factories turning out vast quantities of machine guns in this country in the very near future, that ample allowance has been made.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Has the gentleman read the order of the War Department changing it from 5 to 12?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have stated to the gentleman that our committee was aware of the proposed new requirements in machine guns by the War Department.

Mr. GARDNER. It says 50 per cent of wastage must be provided for. You must appropriate 50 per cent extra for the 12.

This has nothing to do with Mexico. Mexico has come up since the bill was started under consideration. This bill is devised for accumulating ammunition and ordnance against a possible real war.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Can the gentleman tell the House how many factories are engaged in providing field guns?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; but I know that an English company has made an arrangement with one of the big factories in New England to undertake the production of an immense number of these Vickers automatic machine guns for foreign Governments, and it is from this big factory, which is almost now on the point of turning out an immense number of these guns, that our Government can obtain what Gen. Crozier says will be a sufficient number of these guns. In addition to the Vickers factory, the Savage factory, a big factory in New York, is turning out the Lewis gun, which is highly thought of by the War Department now, which we can get in considerable quantities.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman has no concern about our ability to produce them?

Mr. ANTHONY. No. I take Gen. Crozier's word for it, and I have great confidence in his judgment.

Mr. GARDNER. Does the gentleman say that he is taking the judgment of Gen. Crozier on this subject?

Mr. ANTHONY. Gen. Crozier said there would be abundant opportunity for obtaining machine guns.

Mr. GARDNER. Has not Gen. Crozier asked $1,600,000 for the National Guard, which you are refusing to give him?

Mr. ANTHONY. We are giving it now.

Mr. GARDNER. But not since he modified his figures.

Mr. HAY. What difference does it make?

Mr. GARDNER. It makes a great deal of difference, because since he asked for that $1,600,000 the basis has been changed. If the gentleman will take the trouble to look it up, I think he will find the committee has been informed by the department.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I think I can give the House a little information about machine guns which are built by the Driggs-Seabury Co. in the city of Utica. They have at the present time about 250 guns that can be purchased by the War Department if the War Department wanted them. That is the only gun that is available from that concern for some time to come.

Mr. HAY. What is the character of that gun, I desire to ask the gentleman?

Mr. SNYDER. That is the Lewis gun.

Mr. HAY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the War Department has made a test of the Lewis gun and has turned it down and refused to use it?

Mr. SNYDER. That may be absolutely a fact, but nevertheless it is being shipped out of this country in large quantities to-day to countries where the gun is being used successfully. Just why it is impossible to have that gun given a favorable trial in this country is beyond the apprehension of a great many good people up in my section of the country.

Mr. HAY. I can give the gentleman information about that if he wants it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, newspaper items in the last few days have reported that our Government proposes to take, or commandeer—I believe that, possibly, is the technical term—some machine guns which had been manufactured for shipment abroad. I do not know what the fact may be. The National Guard has been called out, quite a number of regiments going from Illinois. They have no machine guns, and, so far as I know, the War Department is not prepared to furnish them with machine guns. A number of public-spirited citizens of Chicago made a little organization for the purpose of purchasing machine guns and presenting them to the Government, but the law does not permit it.

I wonder whether the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] does not think it would be a good thing if we should put some provision in this bill authorizing the Government to accept, free of charge, machine guns or other implements of war?

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman want an answer to that question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HAY. No; I do not. I think the Government of the United States ought to furnish its own guns and ammunition and everything else and not rely upon the gifts of private individuals for its defense. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. MANN. Well, I agree with the gentleman that we ought not to rely upon private individuals; but when we are in a position where we have not got the money appropriated and we have not got the implements, and somebody offers to give them to us, would it not be a good thing to accept them? Of course, there are various ways of doing these things.

The other day the Aero Club of America—if that is the name of it—offered to give the Government an airship. The Lord knows we need some airships in Mexico. But the Government could not accept it. Well, the National Guard of Arizona and New Mexico had been called out, and they presented this aeroplane to the National Guard of one of those States before it had been mustered into the Government service. They could accept the machine, and they did, but they could not operate it. So we are in that delightful position: Not having the aeroplanes ourselves, the Government can not accept the gift of an aeroplane to be used by some one who can use it. A National Guardsman can accept it but can not use it. Is not that really brilliant administration on our part?

I think that the National Guardsmen of Illinois going to the front ought to be permitted to accept the gift of machine guns which the Government is not ready to give to them for their use. It is murder to-day to send infantry into battle without machine guns. It is not war; it is murder.

Now, a word as to this Lewis gun. Mr. Lewis is a retired officer of the United States Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I will ask for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. He invented what is called the Lewis machine gun. I do not know Mr. Lewis. I never heard of him until I heard of him on the floor of the House. He presented his gun to the War Department, and it did not appeal to them, and I have no criticism of the War Department in that respect.

Mr. Lewis went to Europe to see about organizing a company to manufacture his gun. He went, I believe, to Belgium or Holland, one of the two, and organized a company to manufacture his machine gun. That was before the war in Europe started. Having his company organized, before he had begun to manufacture these guns he was told that the best gun metal in the world was made in England, and that his gun barrels ought to be manufactured there. He went to England—to Birmingham, I believe—entered into negotiations with a firm there in reference to manufacturing the barrels of his gun and acquiring the gun metal. During the course of his negotiations there, the question was put to him: "You come to us to manufacture a portion of this gun. Why should we not manufacture all of it?" The negotiations resulted in an understanding that he should go back to Belgium or Holland, where his company was organized, dispose of his obligations there in some way, and come back to Birmingham—if that is the place—where this company agreed to manufacture his gun. Just about the time that the European war broke out—I think it was the very day that Austria's note went to Servia—this company manufacturing the Lewis gun invited a number of people to come down and witness the first test of the gun. Among others were the military attachés of the various Governments at London, and the story that I am repeating now I got from one of those military attachés, who himself fired 500 shots from this gun, I believe in the course of about a minute. The Lewis gun is called an automatic machine gun. Col. Squires said to me that it is really an automatic rifle, which one man can take up and carry and set it down on anything—the stump of a tree if a stump was handy, which it probably would not be. You could even have a man lie down, and put it on his back. One man points the gun and another man feeds it; and it is an authentic story that in one engagement in France two men operating one Lewis machine gun killed over 300 of the advancing enemy, mowed them down as a scythe mows down wheat, or faster than a scythe—like a harvesting machine. You can hold the gun yourself, in front of you, if necessary, with another man feeding it, move it along a line of men, and all in front of it are dead or wounded.

Now, I do not know anything about the other guns. I know nothing of the comparative merits of these different machine guns, but I feel quite confident that with these guns in the hands of armies, no infantry, no cavalry, no kind of an armed force can stand up, unarmed themselves with machine guns, as against a few machine guns in the hands of the enemy. A man would have just the same chance to advance against one of these machine guns without getting hit that he would have to come up against me, holding a fire department hose with the water turned on, and keep dry—just the same chance. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I know nothing about this Lewis machine gun except what I have here from the War Department. On August 16, 1913, the War Department made a test of three guns, the Lewis gun, the Springfield gun, and the Vickers gun. The Lewis gun stood below the other two guns. I will put in the RECORD the statement of the War Department.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What was the test? In what respects did the Lewis gun stand below the other guns?

Mr. HAY. They tested it as to the time of firing, the number of jams, the number of broken parts, the number of parts not broken but replaced. Excluding cooling time it took the Lewis gun 2 hours and 3 minutes, the Springfield gun 2 hours and 27 minutes, and the Vickers gun 1 hour and 24 minutes. Number of jams, Lewis gun 314, Springfield 59, Vickers 23. Number of broken parts, Lewis gun 8, Springfield 3, Vickers none. Number of parts not broken but replaced, Lewis gun 5, Springfield none, Vickers none. So that according to this test the Vickers gun is clearly far superior to the others.

Mr. SNYDER. What was the date of that test?

Mr. HAY. August 16, 1913.

Mr. SNYDER. Since that time, as the gentleman is advised, this gun is being built by an entirely different concern.

Mr. HAY. I am coming to that. Since that time the war broke out and Col. Lewis took his gun abroad, and as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said, sold it, and it has been manufactured since, as I understand, by the Savage Arms Co. at Utica. Now, the War Department has repeatedly tried to get a Lewis gun from that company in order to test it again, but it has not succeeded. It is stated by the Chief of Ordnance:

> Efforts have been made from time to time within the past year to obtain a Lewis machine gun for further tests. These efforts have not been successful until recently, when satisfactory arrangements were made with the Savage Arms Co., of Utica, N. Y., the American manufacturers of the Lewis machine gun, to submit a gun to tests similar to those held in the competitive trial of machine guns in 1913. The board testing this gun was composed of one officer of Cavalry, one officer of Infantry, and one officer of the Ordnance Department. The full report of the board is attached. In order further to test this weapon arrangements have been made for the purchase of three Lewis machine guns chambered for British ammunition, which it is intended to mount on aeroplanes on the Texas border or in Mexico. These guns have been procured with a view to determining whether this particular type of gun has peculiar and special adaptability for aeroplane work.

Now, the Lewis test was not satisfactory, and therefore the Government did not recommend to the Committee on Military Affairs the purchase of the Lewis machine gun. They are going to purchase a few of them, to see whether or not they are peculiarly adapted to aeroplanes. They have been used largely, according to the evidence, in England in aeroplanes, and not for the troops on the ground.

Mr. SNYDER. If they were all used for aeroplane work, they must have more aeroplanes than we have heard of. There is no question but that 4,000 guns have been shipped out of the country, and by reason of the excellent work they are doing they have orders approximating nine or ten thousand more at the present time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not a fact that England has been glad to get any sort of a machine gun that it could, and anywhere it could, as quick as possible? This ought to be stated, that there has been a propaganda in the press for the Lewis gun. Mr. Lewis was a United States Army officer and invented this gun, and he is a man of ability and makes things that work. But instead of offering this gun to the United States Government directly he turned it over to a private company. The gun was being manufactured in England, and they submitted through this company a gun for the original test, the construction of which was so faulty that the Lewis gun people themselves asked to withdraw it in order that they might get another gun that would stand the test. I state that to show that the commonly accepted notion that here is a man who went out of his way to try to give Uncle Sam an invention of his own is subject to a good many qualifications. What he did was to turn it over to a company and propose to sell it to Uncle Sam.

Mr. SNYDER. The fact remains that in this country to-day the concern is supplying guns which are giving complete satisfaction.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I would qualify the word "complete."

Mr. SNYDER. To the extent that countries other than the United States are willing to buy all that can be manufactured.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course they would; they would try to get all they could. They would even have bought our Krag-Jorgensens; but that does not mean that the Krag is as good a rifle as the Springfield.

Mr. SNYDER. I have not any interest in this Lewis gun, except that I saw it shoot once, and shot it myself. I saw the gun shoot 600 shots in a minute and 10 seconds. I fired it myself, lying over the edge of a packing box and holding it in one hand, and I shot it forty-seven times quicker than I could tell it. I know it is a well-built gun that will compete successfully to the extent of the life of the gun.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is true; but it does not follow that it is the best gun.

Mr. HAMILTON. I did not catch what the gentleman from Virginia said—whether there had been a second test of the Lewis gun or not.

Mr. HAY. Yes; there has been, and it did not prove satisfactory. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD this memoranda that I have referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing certain memoranda. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The memoranda is as follows:

MEMORANDUM REGARDING THE LEWIS MACHINE GUN.

1. The Lewis machine gun was first offered to the Board of Ordnance and Fortification by a letter dated May 2, 1912, from the Automatic Arms Co., inviting attention to an air-cooled, gas-operated, automatic machine gun, and asking for a field test. Mr. R. M. Calfee, attorney, and Mr. Huberty, machinist of the company, appeared before the board and exhibited the model of the gun. Arrangements were made for the board to witness a firing test of the gun at Fort Myer, on May 3. (Proceedings of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, May 2, 1912.)

2. The board, on June 6, 1912, resumed consideration of the letter dated May 2, 1912, from the Automatic Arms Co., presenting an automatic machine gun and asking for a field test. Members of the board witnessed a firing exhibition of the gun at Fort Myer, on May 5.

3. The board recommended that the Automatic Arms Co. be informed that "the kind of test proposed by them has limitations which the board does not care to accept, for the reason that the field test proposed usually follows tests made to determine the mechanical suitability of a weapon; but if they will submit a gun for such tests as seem suitable to determine its fitness for the service, it will be subjected to the tests usual for guns of this class under the Ordnance Department, including a field test. Their representatives will be permitted to be present during the tests, and the company will be furnished with a copy of the report."

4. The Board of Ordnance and Fortification, at a meeting on July 2, 1912, considered a letter dated July 1, 1912, from the Automatic Arms Co., requesting reconsideration of the action in regard to a field test of their gun. The board recommended that "the Automatic Arms Co. be informed that after careful consideration of their letter the board is of the opinion that the usual procedure should be followed, namely, the gun must be submitted to a technical test by the Ordnance Department. During this test the representatives of the company will be permitted to be present and, preliminary to the test, to give such an exhibition of the performance of the gun as they may see fit, in the presence of the representatives of the Ordnance Department charged with the technical examination of the gun. After this demonstration is completed the gun will then be submitted to such tests as the Ordnance Department may deem necessary. Ammunition for such exhibition and tests will be furnished by the Government.

"The parties representing the gun may have the privilege of declining to subject it to any portions of the test which may be proposed to which they may not wish to have it subjected at the time, but in respecting their wishes in this regard the report of the tests will, of course, state the facts.

"In the course of the complete test, the gun will have the kind of field test which they desire, and copies of all reports in regard to the test will be furnished the company.

"It is also recommended that the company be informed that the board has no objection to the gun being fired at Monterey, before the School of Musketry, or at College Park, by the Signal Corps, but such tests will have no weight whatever until the technical tests have demonstrated the structural efficiency of the gun."

5. The Board of Ordnance and Fortification, at a meeting on March 6, 1913, considered a "letter dated March 5, 1913, from the Automatic Arms Co., presenting for consideration, with a view to its adoption as a type for use in service, their .30-caliber, air-cooled gun, and requesting that the gun be given a thorough competitive test by a board of officers from the several arms of the service engaged in the manufacture and tactical use of machine guns, such as the machine gun board, constituted by Special Orders, 109, of 1903. Mr. R. M. Calfee and Mr. R. W. Lewis, representing the company, appeared before the board.

"It is recommended that the board of officers be appointed as requested by the Automatic Arms Co., the board to carry out a competitive test of all models of machine guns submitted, essentially in accordance with the program of tests of automatic guns described in the report of the board of officers convened by paragraph 36, Special Orders, No. 169, July 21, 1903, but the board to specially exercise its discretion as to the sequence in which tests Nos. 1 to 20, of the program, shall be made. The board should also make such tests as will determine the value of the guns for use for war purposes from airships, and the suitability of guns and mounts for use for attacking airships from the ground.

"The Chief of Ordnance should conduct the necessary preliminary correspondence with manufacturers of guns desiring to enter the competition.

"The final report of tests should be submitted to the Board of Ordnance and Fortification for consideration and recommendation."

6. In the above record no mention is made of the fact that the gun submitted by the Automatic Arms Co. is the "Lewis machine gun." However, in view of the fact that Mr. Calfee represented the Lewis gun at the test there can be no question but that the gun referred to in the correspondence with the Automatic Arms Co. is the Lewis machine gun.

7. The board convened for the competitive test of automatic machine guns submitted to it met at the Springfield armory on September 15, 1913. The Lewis gun submitted to this board and tested by it was one of two model guns manufactured in England (0.0.39153/930). It is presumed that the guns were manufactured by the Birmingham Small Arms Co., of Birmingham, England, in view of the fact that on July 18, 1913, Mr. Calfee, as secretary of the Automatic Arms Co., acknowledged receipt of rifle tools and gauges shipped to Col. I. N. Lewis in care of the Birmingham Small Arms Co.

8. In the 1913 test seven different makes of automatic machine guns were considered and tried out. The board consisted of two officers of the Infantry, one of the Cavalry, one of the Field Artillery, and an Ordnance officer. The arsenal test narrowed the competition down to the present service machine gun—the automatic machine rifle, caliber .30, model of 1909, and the Vickers rifle-caliber gun, light model. It was not desired to adopt a gun on simply an arsenal test, and three additional Vickers guns and four automatic rifles, caliber .30, model of 1909, were submitted to the board for an extensive field test, which was held at Texas City and Leon Springs, Tex. As a result of this test the board recommended the adoption of the Vickers rifle-caliber gun, light model, and the Vickers tripod, model J.

9. The new gun differs in one essential from the present gun in that it is water cooled instead of air cooled. It is slightly heavier when filled with water than the present gun, the weights being about 29 pounds and 36 pounds, respectively. The cost of the new gun is about twice that of the present gun, unless a tripod be added to the latter, in which case it would be about one and one-half times as great.

10. This test, in so far as the Lewis gun is concerned, indicated that the mechanism had not been developed to a satisfactory stage, having in the endurance test 206 jams and malfunctions, 35 broken parts, 15 parts not broken but requiring replacement, as against, respectively, 23, 0, and 0 for the Vickers gun and 59, 7, and 0 for the automatic machine rifle, caliber .30, model of 1909, the Benet-Mercier.

11. The board concluded, after a careful consideration of the data collected, together with the knowledge of the suitability of the various designs of machine guns gained by observation during the tests, that "the Lewis automatic machine rifle as at present designed is not considered superior to the service automatic machine rifle on account of failure to maintain continuous fire, the large number of parts that were broken, and the large number of jams, many of the latter being reduced only after much difficulty and considerable time."

12. The Lewis gun was therefore not given the field test in view of the fact that the board recommended a competitive test of this nature for the Vickers gun and the then service automatic machine rifle only.

13. On the conclusion of the field test at Texas City and Leon Springs the board expressed the opinion that "when the present service machine rifle (automatic rifle, model of 1909) was originally tested, some seven years ago, it was then without doubt the best type of machine gun in existence, but during the past seven years the Vickers Co. have developed a gun which not only overcomes all the serious defects inherent to the service type of Maxim gun (model of 1904), but compares very favorably in weight with the automatic machine rifle, caliber .30, model of 1909, the Benet-Mercier.

"The service machine rifles furnished the board for test were well made and finished, and only a small number of parts were either broken or replaced during the test, indicating that the large number of jams and stoppages of fire which occurred, particularly during the field firing, were not due to either defective material or workmanship."

14. Effort has been made from time to time within the past year and a half to obtain a Lewis machine gun for further test. These efforts have not been successful until recently, when satisfactory arrangements were made with the Savage Arms Co., of Utica, N. Y., the American manufacturers of the Lewis machine gun, to submit a gun to tests similar to those held in the competitive trial of machine guns in 1913. The board testing this gun was composed of one officer of Cavalry, one officer of Infantry, and one officer of the Ordnance Department. A full report of the board is attached.

15. In order to further test this weapon arrangements have been made for the purchase of three Lewis machine guns, chambered for British ammunition, which it is intended to mount on aeroplanes on the Texas border and in Mexico. These weapons have been procured with a view to determining whether this particular type of gun has peculiar and special adaptability for aeroplane work.

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance.

OFFICE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
June 17, 1916.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington May 8, 1916.

Memorandum for The Adjutant General.

Subject: Report of test of Lewis automatic machine rifle.

1. This test was made by a board of officers convened at the Springfield Armory pursuant to Special Orders, No. 85, War Department, c. s. The test is interesting not only as an effort to secure for the service an improved machine rifle or an alternate model equal to the service rifle for supply in emergency, but also as a means of reaching a conclusion as to the merits of the automatic machine rifle with which the service is now armed, the Benet-Mercier, which has been vigorously assailed in comparison with the Lewis gun.

2. The most considerable attack upon the Benet-Mercier rifle has been made by the commanding general of the eastern department in correspondence which is recorded in A. G. O. 2333911 (O. O. 472.5/22–Lewis). In this correspondence the commanding general of the eastern department states in regard to the Lewis gun:

"It is easily the best machine gun I have ever seen and it is certainly 3 to 1 in value over the Benet-Mercier. * * * I am interested in machine guns and this is by far the best I have ever seen. * * * The Benet-Mercier, in my opinion, is of little value, and this is the general opinion of most of those who have tried and used it. * * * We need a good machine gun, and the Lewis gun is, in my opinion, easily the best one in use to-day. * * * The Benet-Mercier gun, in my opinion, is unfitted for the military service. * * * It is intricate and unreliable. * * *"

3. This department, upon inquiry, was not able to obtain from the commanding general of the eastern department any statement of performance upon which his highly favorable opinion of the Lewis gun was based, other than reports of its use by the British Royal Flying Corps, which were of a confidential nature such that he was not at liberty to go into details concerning them, and its manufacture for the Canadian Government; but the unfavorable opinion of the Benet-Mercier gun was based upon adverse reports in regard to it made by a number of officers. The unfavorable opinion was not accompanied by any detailed statement of the mechanical defects found, nor by any information which would help in forming a conclusion as to whether the difficulties encountered were or were not such as might be expected to result from a lack of knowledge of the mechanical details of the gun, such as might reasonably be expected from the officers and men handling the gun, after proper instruction; and no statement was furnished of the character of the instruction of personnel of machine-gun units instituted in the eastern department, in order that an opinion might have been formed as to its appropriate character and its sufficiency.

4. It must be borne in mind that no entirely satisfactory machine rifle has yet been developed; that is, that we have never had a machine rifle that is not subject to stoppage by reason of some kind of malfunction. These weapons are machines, operating with tremendous pressures and tremendous velocity of moving parts, and are subject to the weaknesses and infirmities of all machines. They have never reached the simplicity and perfection of construction which would insure their operation in the hands of the average soldier or the average officer, with the same certainty that attends that of the ordinary rifle or pistol. Their infirmities have been accepted because of the large effective output which can be had from them when they do work well. The Benet-Mercier is no exception to this general statement, and that it can be relied upon to do good service when well handled by properly instructed men is evidenced not only by the findings of several boards which have been appointed, but also by the reports of officers who have handled it, both in our service and in the Navy.

5. The board whose report is the subject of this memorandum tested two Lewis guns; one adapted for the use of our service ammunition and the other for the use of British ammunition. The one adapted for use of our service ammunition was soon shown to be too unreliable to justify a continuation of the test, and was withdrawn. This fact, however, was not to the discredit of the system, since there had been little opportunity and little effort to develop the gun for the use of our service ammunition. The test of the gun using British ammunition was continued to the end, and the following is the conclusion of the board:

"Considering the performance of the Lewis guns in the test reported herein, and comparing that performance with the performance of the Vickers gun (automatic machine gun, model of 1915) and of the Springfield gun (automatic machine rifle, caliber .30, model of 1909) in the test conducted by the board convened by Special Orders, No. 191, War Department, August 16, 1913, the board finds that the Lewis gun in its present state of development is not equal or superior to either of the above-mentioned guns. The Lewis gun is not as reliable or as dependable as are the other guns mentioned.

"The Lewis gun, on the other hand, is lighter, simpler, and has a fewer number of parts than the other guns mentioned; and in the opinion of the board the question as to whether or not it can be developed to a satisfactory degree of reliability and dependability is an open one.

"The board therefore finds that the results of the present test were not such as to justify the purchase of four Lewis guns chambered for the service ammunition for further test at this time, but in view of the desirable features of the gun the board recommends that if the Savage Arms Co. undertake to develop a gun for the service ammunition, a further test be made, upon their request, after the development shall have been carried to a satisfactory stage."

6. The "Vickers gun" mentioned in the above quotation is the one which was adopted as the result of a previous test, but of which it has not yet been possible to secure a supply for the service, a small number being under manufacture. The gun spoken of as the "Springfield gun" is what is otherwise known as the "Benet-Mercier."

7. This department will encourage effort to develop the Lewis gun to a satisfactory stage, and will continue to use its best efforts to hasten the supply of Vickers guns, although funds at present available will do little toward this end. In the meantime, I think it should be accepted that the gun which the service now has is as good a one as it has been possible to secure, and better than the one which has been put forward by the commanding general of the eastern department as superior to it, in a manner which could hardly fail to shake the confidence of the service in the weapon which has been supplied to it; and that the service should be encouraged to go at the mastery of its present gun in recognition of the fact that it is a machine, and requires for its successful operation a degree of industriously acquired mechanical knowledge, as do all machines.

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General,
Chief of Ordnance, United States Army.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Has the chairman any information that he can give the committee as to the supply and equipment of the Mexican people with machine guns?

Mr. HAY. Whatever I would say would be a guess.

Mr. FESS. I have noticed some fugitive references in the dispatches to equipment of the Mexicans with machine guns.

Mr. HAY. I have no doubt they have some machine guns.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been reported that machine guns were used in the fight at Carrizal the other day in the assault on the America cavalry. Does the gentleman know anything about it?

Mr. HAY. Nothing except what I saw in the papers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My special interest is that the National Guard of Pennsylvania has gone into camp awaiting a call to the frontier. It is generally reported that there is a good deal of concern because the National Guard of Pennsylvania has not had a machine gun at any time. The men are all anxious to be equipped for the service that will be required of them in the use of machine guns. How are they to obtain machine guns under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. HAY. By the Government buying them with the money which we propose to appropriate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not anomalous that so large a body of men as the National Guard of Pennsylvania should not up to this time have had a machine gun or a chance to become expert in the use of it?

Mr. HAY. I can only say that the War Department has not spent the appropriations which Congress has made for the purchase of machine guns for three years because they have not been satisfied with the type of machine gun which they have so far been able to develop. They have now settled on the Vickers gun as being the best gun; but that gun is an English gun and the manufacturer of it is in England, and they are turning over all of their product to the English Government. There is a manufactory now in this country, as I understand it, which has been given the dimensions and parts, and so forth, of this gun, and is now manufacturing it, and has signified its purpose of turning the product of the manufactory over to this Government as they need it. I think the $4,000,000 which I propose shall be appropriated for machine guns will be spent in buying these guns as fast as they can be made. Then the National Guard from Pennsylvania will be equipped with them as fast as possible.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it the fault of the National Guard?

Mr. HAY. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the Government has not found the gun that it wants? The gentleman from Illinois referred to the National Guard in Illinois, which is evidently without machine guns also——

Mr. HAY. Oh, it is true of the whole country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been general?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. To what extent are the Regulars now in Mexico equipped with machine guns?

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is correct, every regiment there is equipped with 17 machine guns.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. They are so equipped now?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will yield, my understanding, and I am speaking just from memory, is that we have on hand practically a sufficient supply for all of the Regulars. We have a limited number with a few militia companies and a few now in reserve that will be given to the various militia companies if they qualify for them. In order for a militia company to be entitled to them it must have had its machine-gun squad inspected, a favorable report made thereon, and then to the extent of the supply now in reserve they will be issued to such companies.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman used this expression, "sufficient supply on hand."

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no; I said for the Regulars.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I so understood the gentleman, but the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] stated, as I understood him, that our Regulars now in Mexico are equipped.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is what I mean.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman spoke of a supply.

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not mean necessarily a supply here. I meant that we have guns enough for them, and they have been equipped with guns, and I do not think we have as many guns as we ought to have for the militia. The trouble is this: We were very much in the situation in regard to machine guns that England was in in regard to rifles when the war broke out. She was just passing through the transition stage from abandoning one rifle and adopting a new one, and she was caught very short of small arms. We have been working for the best kind of machine gun, and in the process of testing and determining that we perhaps have been a little too slow in having a supply of guns on hand out of a proper desire to get the very best.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What kind of guns are we using now?

Mr. SHERLEY. We have two or three types of machine guns which they have bought at different periods and which were standard in their day.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. There are some of them antiquated?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are all serviceable, but of different grades of efficiency.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It is not desirable to have different types of guns, is it?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but the ideal is not always possible in human affairs.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But it is highly important that we should obtain sufficient first-rate machine guns as soon as possible?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. HAY. And that is what we are trying to do.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I think when I came to Congress a few years ago I was told that we had 1,077 machine guns. In the testimony before the committee this year we were told that we had the same number, 1,077 machine guns; but I know that since I have been on the Committee on Military Affairs, the last two years at least, we have made appropriations, not large, but we have made appropriations for the manufacture of machine guns, and not one single gun, as the chairman of our committee just stated, has been made in the past three years, or purchased. Why? Is it the fault of Congress? No; but every evil, everything that tends toward unpreparedness has been charged to Congress. I want to say that I am for liberal appropriations in this bill for machine guns, and if it is necessary I want to write a provision in this bill that will compel the officers of the Army to either buy or manufacture those guns, so that we will have them when we need them. [Applause.] I do not think that it is the province of the Chief of Ordnance or any other man in the Military Establishment of this country when we appropriate money for the purchase or manufacture of articles necessary in the national defense to quibble for two or three years over a certain type of gun or a certain character of shell that they are going to buy or manufacture. When we appropriate the money it is up to them to either manufacture the best that they can or go out into the market and buy it, and not let the money go back into the Treasury of the United States and leave this country of ours defenseless. I want to say now that if the chairman of this committee has not some assurance from those in power that this money is going to be expended, he better get it; and if they do not give us that assurance that they are going to get these machine guns and not quibble as to whether they will have the Vickers or the Lewis gun, we will write a provision in the bill before it leaves Congress saying that they shall buy so many Lewis guns or so many Vickers guns, in order that we may know that we are going to have them when we need them. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think it is due to say this of the Ordnance people. The gentleman says they should go out and get guns. On the other hand, if they go out and spend money for a type that is readily available, then gentlemen on the floor, when evidence comes that there is a better gun or weapon, immediately say, "What is our Army doing; spending money for antiquated kinds of machines?" It is always a matter of judgment, about which people easily may err; but when we are undertaking to criticize others let us be fair. You have had an undermanned Ordnance Department ever since I have been in Congress. You have constantly been increasing the amount of work upon their hands without giving them enough men to do their work, and as I have repeatedly called attention to it, whenever you get a sudden demand you are going to have a breakdown among those technical men, because you do not create enough of them in ordinary times.

It is not true that the country is left defenseless. It is true that it would be well if we had more of these machine guns for the militia, but the situation is not extreme, and while mistakes may have been made in judgment, the motive that actuated these men in getting the very best for the money of the Government, of not wasting it on old and inferior weapons, and in undertaking to develop and procure the very best is commendable; and the trouble is that Congress does not supply the War Department with a sufficient corps to do one-half of the work that it ought to do in the way of development and of investigation, of trial and test of various weapons.

We are living in a very rapid age and revolutionary things are happening almost every day, and you are expecting a handful of men to pass judgment on matters that in other countries are passed on by hundreds and thousands. The reason that Germany, France, and those other countries are in advance of us in equipment to the extent they are is not because they are superior, it is not because their officers are better than ours as individuals; it is because you have there nations given over in large measure in thought and study to one particular endeavor, whereas we have been a peaceful people with only a limited number of men getting beggarly and meager help at times from the Government in the way of investigation and development. I am willing to criticize those men who deserve it, but let us in candor do justice to them as well as ourselves. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE. I hope the gentleman will not assume to say I question the good motives of these men, but it is the fact I am after.

Mr. SHERLEY. And the fact must be taken with all facts.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman inform us how long it takes to manufacture a machine gun and how rapidly?

Mr. SNYDER. I can answer the gentleman as to the Lewis gun, 50 completed guns a day.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not answer, as I do not recall, but after they have once gotten their equipment ready they can turn them out very rapidly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I suppose the gentleman would agree with me we have reached a stage which might properly be called a more or less acute stage now, and I assume the gentleman would not want to see our men, Regulars or militia, go into an engagement without machine guns?

Mr. SHERLEY. Absolutely not.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Therefore we all must recognize, there is not any controversy about that, that we ought to get the best machine guns that we can get. That is really all there is to it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that will be done. I think——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I am not criticizing anybody.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am simply answering the gentleman from Illinois because I felt that we ought to be fair. I know something about how these men work. I know how we tie them up by restrictions of the law, seeking to protect the Treasury; how we interfere as to price even with the amount of space that can be used; so that to-day the Ordnance Department is handicapped by lack of space to put draftsmen in the District of Columbia due to limitations we have put in various bills. I know that these men are as hard worked men as there are in the Government service and as intelligent men, and I feel it is only fair to bear witness to that fact in face of what has been said criticizing them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I agree entirely with the gentleman from Kentucky in the way in which the Ordnance Department has been overworked. Can the House be now assured that there are machine guns on the market that can be purchased with the appropriation we are now making?

Mr. SHERLEY. My understanding is—and I am speaking without a definite understanding because it has not been within my immediate jurisdiction—that, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has said, there is a company prepared to furnish, in what quantity I am unable to state now—Vickers guns——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think there is no doubt that the War Department, if they are given the money and do not have their hands tied by restrictions, will immediately go out and obtain all the guns that are necessary for the present emergency if it is possible to do it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The chairman of the committee has stated that in 1913 a test was made of three guns, and, as the result of which test, it was found that the Vickers gun was the best of the three. Does the gentleman know why the department then did not purchase the Vickers gun, which was found to be the best?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think I can state. At that time and now there have been a number of guns that were being made of these various types, and the Ordnance Department has been informed from time to time and have taken note at different times of improvements that were being made. The result was that perhaps they have been too slow; they may have held back too long; but they were desirous of getting the very best. Then came the European war, which interfered with securing additional Lewis guns for tests and interfered with obtaining the Vickers guns, and they have been trying for months and have just succeeded in arrangements whereby the Vickers gun, which is an English patented gun, can be manufactured in America. It is a combination of circumstances.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman will agree with me that improvements will always be made, and——

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course it is a matter of judgment that is to be exercised in each particular case. I would not say that the Ordnance Department should not have provided more guns, even though they were not as good as they hoped to have; but I am trying to present to this committee and the country something of the problems that confront these people in the hope that from criticism will come the desire also actually to help give these people more men and the means whereby they can do the tremendous amount of work that is now being thrown upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. May we have the amendment again reported? I ask unanimous consent that the original amendment may be again reported and that the amendment to the amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia and the amendment to that amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAY: Strike out "$1,400,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

Amendment to the amendment by Mr. GARDNER: Substitute "$3,360,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARDNER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 37.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. HAY and Mr. GARDNER took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 52.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 48, after line 23, by inserting the following as a new paragraph:

"Automatic machine rifles: For the purchase, manufacture, and test of automatic machine rifles, including their sights and equipment, for the National Guard, to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, $2,000,000."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. GARDNER on page 48, line 23:

"Automatic machine rifles: For the purpose of procuring automatic machine rifles, with pack outfits, accessories, and equipment for machine-gun organizations of the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, without cost to the said States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, but to remain the property of the United States and to be accounted for in the manner prescribed by law, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized under such regulations as he may prescribe, on the requisitions of the governors of the several States and Territories or the commanding general of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, to issue such automatic machine guns, with pack outfits, accessories, and equipment to the National Guard, and the sum of $4,008,720 is hereby appropriated and made immediately available until the end of the fiscal year 1918 for the procurement and issue of the before-mentioned articles."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to make his point of order. What is it?

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order that the amendment is new law. The gentleman is undertaking to make an appropriation and at the same time is legislating on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GARDNER. I invite the gentleman's attention to the fact that if it is legislation on an appropriation bill, he will find that in the next paragraph he is using the same language.

Mr. HAY. I did not use the same language as you do.

Mr. GARDNER. Substantially. Speaking of field artillery, this bill provides that field artillery for the National Guard is to remain the property of the United States and to be accounted for in the manner now provided for by law. It is in regard to field artillery.

Mr. HAY. We are not on field artillery.

Mr. GARDNER. I understand. I might raise the point of order on the field artillery. I assume it is subject to a point of order as well as this.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman wants to raise the point of order on field artillery when we get to it, all right, but I am talking about this particular item. But I have no desire to talk any more on the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know if the gentleman will yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under this amendment could these rifles be used for the National Guard except upon requisition of the governors?

Mr. GARDNER. In my opinion they could be used after the National Guard is mustered into the service of the United States just as much as all these appropriations that we are making here.

Mr. MANN. It may affect the point of order—whether this is an appropriation for the procurement of machine guns for the Army primarily, with the provision that in the ordinary course they may be issued to the National Guard upon the requisition of the governors, not as a matter of legislation, but as a matter of regulation possibly of the equipment. In other words, are we providing in this or the other items solely for the National Guard and does it require requisition of the governor in order for the National Guard to get this equipment?

Mr. HAY. It does not. What we have provided for in this and other items is for a reserve, which is to be used in time of danger or of war, like the present time, and if the gentleman's amendment is adopted in the way in which he has drawn it, then these guns manufactured under that amendment will be of no use whatever in this crisis.

Mr. MANN. The same is true in respect to the other items in the bill, unless when the War Department obtains these they use them as they please, except upon the requisition of the governor they may turn them over to the National Guard.

Mr. HAY. They use them as they please, and they turn them right over to any United States force that may be in being; and when the National Guard is drafted into the service of the United States every gun and every rifle belonging to the Government can be put into the hands of any and all troops in the service of the Government. There can not be any question about that.

Mr. GARDNER. I should like to be heard, Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. This wording in my amendment is almost exactly the wording which has been carried hitherto in the appropriations for field artillery for the Organized Militia. I hold in my hand a copy of last year's law. I read:

Field artillery for Organized Militia: For the purpose of manufacturing field artillery material for the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, without cost to the said States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, but to remain the property of the United States and to be accounted for in the manner now prescribed by law—

And so forth. It is merely a description of the way and the manner in which the property is to be disposed of when procured.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if it were true that we had no right to appropriate for machine guns for the National Guard at all, it would be perfectly true that we could not say in what manner we would appropriate for them. But the moment that it is conceded, as everybody concedes, that it is in our power to appropriate for machine guns for the National Guard, it is apparent that the wording which I have submitted is merely a qualification, showing the manner in which that appropriation is to be expended. It is not even a limitation. It is the ordinary descriptive phraseology which has already been carried in dealing with an analogous subject—the field artillery for the Organized Militia—for a long time. The fact is that heretofore, so far as I know, we have never specifically in the past appropriated for automatic rifles for the National Guard. The amendment which I suggested is in the wording presented to the Committee on Military Affairs by Gen. Crozier. It was submitted by Gen. Crozier in the hearings in substantially the same form, except for the amount carried and the expression "Organized Militia" was used instead of the expression "National Guard."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask a question in that connection. This is an appropriating bill. Here is a provision appropriating for machine guns for the National Guard. What is the authority of law, or the special authority, for that appropriation?

Mr. GARDNER. I would have to get the statutes. Probably the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] can tell us. I suppose it is the general law which authorizes the equipment of an army.

Mr. MANN. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that question can not be raised, because no point of order was made on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], which was an appropriation for machine guns for the National Guard. There was no point of order raised on that.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, that is a separate amendment.

Mr. MANN. This is a substitute for the Hay amendment. It is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I read from the last appropriation bill:

Automatic machine rifles: For the purchase, manufacture, and test of automatic machine rifles, including their sights and equipments, to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, $150,000.

I fancy there is no special authorization of law required in order to make it in order to provide money for equipping the Army with a new device. This is not a new device, but it is new to provide specifically for the National Guard, so far as automatic rifles are concerned. I submit for the consideration of the Chair whether, the point of order not being raised on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia in this particular respect my amendment could be found out of order, when clearly the gentleman's amendment is subject to the same rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it would. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. GARDNER. Merely for the sake of the record, I beg to say that I have applied to the amount of money requested by Gen. Crozier the new allowance of 12 machine guns to a regiment instead of 5 machine guns to a regiment, and it produces those figures which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Of whom did Gen. Crozier make that request; from you?

Mr. GARDNER. No; from the gentleman's own committee. Does not the gentleman read his own hearings?

Mr. GORDON. What page is it on? Will the gentleman read it?

Mr. GARDNER. Here is a word from the chairman:

The CHAIRMAN. And therefore you ask for $1,670,300 for automatic rifles for the National Guard?

That is on page 771 of the hearings. Then on the same page:

Gen. CROZIER. I have another estimate for automatic rifles for the Organized Militia of $1,670,300, with which I intend to get 428 guns, including some other things that go with them.

Mr. GORDON. That is not your amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. I explained that carefully. If the gentleman will please sit down and let me explain, I said I applied the figures sent in by Gen. Crozier, of 12 machine guns instead of 5, to those figures of $1,670,300.

Mr. GORDON. To whom did he send those figures?

Mr. GARDNER. I have read them into the RECORD. I will read them again for the information of the gentleman. I read:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, June 20, 1916.

DEAR MR. GARDNER——

Mr. GORDON. He requested them of you, did he?

Mr. GARDNER. He said in that statement that the War Department had changed its recommendation, and it was adopted by the War Department. The new figures were adopted on the 11th of April, 1916, by a letter written by The Adjutant General to the Chief of Ordnance, and I am informed that your committee has been notified of that fact.

Mr. GORDON. The chairman of our committee says he never got any such communication.

Mr. GARDNER. Then the mails have gone astray, because I am informed by an officer of the War Department that that notice was sent to the committee.

Mr. GORDON. Then the War Department made a requisition on you for these machine guns, apparently.

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, well, the gentleman can infer anything he chooses.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Is the amendment which the gentleman offers designed to provide automatic machine rifles for the National Guard, including those regiments which have now been drafted into the service of the United States, so that they may have machine rifles when they go to the front?

Mr. GARDNER. That is the purpose, so far as we can influence that result by an appropriation. I do not know whether they can be bought.

Mr. MANN. I do not say it would accomplish the purpose.

Mr. GARDNER. I do not know whether it would accomplish the purpose. My object is to get as many machine guns as possible, and to get them on an intelligent basis, to wit, on Gen. Crozier's latest figures.

Mr. MANN. The purpose may not eventuate. That depends on whether they can get the rifles; but is it the purpose of the amendment to provide the money with which these National Guardsmen going to the front may have machine rifles in the quantity indicated by the War Department to be necessary?

Mr. GARDNER. To be frank with the gentleman, I should have offered this amendment whether there had been any complications recently arising in Mexico or not. I know the gentleman is trying to help me out——

Mr. MANN. I am not trying to help the gentleman out. I am trying to get at the facts.

Mr. GARDNER. Those are the facts, that this amendment would have been offered without the slightest regard to the present situation in Mexico. But incidentally, in my opinion, it will allow us to equip the National Guard very much more satisfactorily.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not understand that the gentleman's amendment is based on an official estimate, is it? I think there is possibly a misunderstanding between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] and the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Let me explain——

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman's amendment is based upon certain estimates that were made by Gen. Crozier, submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman desiring to increase the number of guns. There is no official estimate from Gen. Crozier or from the department.

Mr. GARDNER. Let me interrupt the gentleman. There were no supplementary estimates sent in after the passage of the Hay bill, but Gen. Crozier appeared before the committee and he suggested certain figures. There were no supplementary estimates. The gentleman can assure himself of that by asking the chairman of the committee. Gen. Crozier came in and said that, calculating on a basis of five machine guns to a regiment, there was needed an appropriation of $1,670,300 for machine guns or automatic rifles for the National Guard. That was on the 4th day of April. At that time the basis of computation for the National Guard was five machine guns for each regiment. On the 11th day of April the War Department adopted a new basis, and I have been told that notification was sent to the Committee on Military affairs to that effect. At least I thought I understood that information to be given to me. Perhaps I am mistaken. But taking that new basis of 12 machine guns to a regiment instead of 5 machine guns to a regiment, and modifying the estimate in the first place presented by Gen. Crozier, by dividing by 5 and multiplying by 12, modifying it according to the new estimate of April 11, he will arrive at the figure which I have sent to the Clerk's desk, to wit, $4,008,720. Now, is it perfectly clear to the gentleman?

Mr. GARRETT. I think so. I thought possibly there was a misunderstanding between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] and the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it perfectly clear to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GARRETT. Quite so. I understand that no official estimate has been sent in asking for 12 instead of 5, but the gentleman from Massachusetts understands that that is the number now desired by the Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. GARDNER. I said there was no official estimate sent in asking even for the five. It was simply that Gen. Crozier stated in the hearing that that number is what they ought to have. The gentleman understands that the War Department has tables. The old tables said we must have four machine guns for a regiment and one for a machine-gun company or platoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to. What is the result of it? We have just adopted an amendment providing for $3,300,000 for these machine guns. The gentleman proposes to add $4,000,000 more. Is that the amount?

Mr. GARDNER. Four million eight thousand seven hundred and twenty.

Mr. HAY. Which would make over $7,000,000 for these machine guns. Now, it is perfectly obvious, from the information given to us by the Chief of Ordnance, that that amount of money can not be expended. The gentleman says that the Chief of Ordnance or some other officer has notified me of what he wanted or of some calculation that has been made. I deny that the Chief of Ordnance has given me any information whatever about it. I have never heard from him on this particular subject since the hearing which we had before the committee.

Mr. GARDNER. I did not say the Chief of Ordnance had communicated it to the gentleman. I said I understood from an officer in the War Department that the gentleman had been given this information.

Mr. HAY. Who is the officer who has given the gentleman this information?

Mr. GARDNER. I am not going to tell the gentleman publicly. I will tell him privately.

Mr. GORDON. Oh!

Mr. HAY. Then if the gentleman is not willing to state his authority for a simple statement like that, that I was informed or that the committee was informed as to what the War Department wanted, evidently there was no official statement of it to me, because if there had been an official statement no officer would have given the gentleman that information as being confidential.

Mr. GARDNER. No officer did give it to me as being confidential. It was not given to me as confidential, but I decline to state the name of the officer.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is treating it as if it were confidential. Now, I have offered an amendment for $2,000,000. I think the way the amendment of the gentleman is drawn the probability is that it might be held that these guns could not be furnished to the National Guard after the National Guard had been drafted into the service of the United States.

I am perfectly willing to appropriate any amount of money that may be shown to be necessary, but I do not think it is wise for the House to appropriate large sums of money for things that they can not buy and for things for which at this time they have no use. If there are $7,500,000 appropriated, that would supply machine guns, according to the gentleman's own computation, for nearly 200 regiments. We have not 200 regiments in the service.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman overlooks the 50 per cent wastage which the War Department in the order of April 11, which the gentleman has not seen but which I have, says must be calculated in the reserve machine guns.

Mr. HAY. What is the use of buying machine guns for regiments not in existence and not going to be in existence. Of course, I do not know how many more regiments may be called out, but if any more are called out we can buy the guns. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "two million" and insert "three million."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia by striking out "two million" and inserting "three million."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 47 ayes and 60 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armored motor cars: For the purchase and manufacture of armored motor cars, $150,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "150,000" and insert "300,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 48, line 25, strike out "150,000" and insert "300,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as I read the hearings, the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance recommends $500,000, and the hearings were away back in April. Since then exigent conditions in Mexico have arisen, and the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance came before the deficiency committee and asked for exigent appropriations to provide for a large number of trucks to carry provisions——

Mr. HAY. These are not trucks to carry provisions.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know they are not, but it shows the necessity of this kind of conveyance if we are to be beset with any difficulty in Mexico. As I read the hearings, the department recommended away back in April for this item of $500,000, and it specified what they would be for. It will take time, as the chief set forth in the hearings, to equip the automobiles with the necessary armor and with howitzers and quick-firing guns and make them ready for action. Does the gentleman think, in view of the recommendation of the department, that $300,000 is adequate, in view of the exigent conditions?

Mr. HAY. I think $300,000 is sufficient. I think we can obtain for that 24 armored automobiles, 60 shielded motorcycles with side cars, and 15 motorcycles with side-car ammunition.

Mr. STAFFORD. What would 24 armored automobiles amount to scattered over hundreds of square miles of territory?

Mr. HAY. The gentleman does not expect to have an army scattered over 100 square miles of territory, does he?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; and they are not going to be all placed in one little spot; if we have eventualities it will invite operations at different points.

Mr. HAY. I think the number of armored cars that will be provided for by $300,000 will be sufficient for any emergency that will arise in Mexico.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by making it $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by substituting for $300,000, $500,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this is the amount that Gen. Crozier recommended several months ago when the establishment under the military appropriation bill was being considered. Last year the bill only carried the paltry sum of $50,000 for armored motor cars. That was at the suggestion of the committee and not at the suggestion of the War Department. Since then, with the development of the value of armored motor cars in Europe—and it does not require an expert to determine the value of armored motor cars—the head of the department comes and asks for an appropriation of $500,000, and that at a time when we are not confronted with the exigent conditions that we are at the present time. I would not have been surprised if the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, had asked for an appropriation of $1,000,000, and yet this $500,000 will only provide something in the neighborhood of 36 armored motor cars. I do not claim to be an expert or have any expert knowledge of armored motor cars, but it does not take an expert to see their value. I think as reasonable a provision as $500,000 should be made now for this very valuable arm of defense.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does the gentleman know that the recommendation of the amount carried in the bill was made at the time when the Secretary of War and the Chief of Ordnance did not know whether or not the cars could be supplied by the local manufacturers? Now, it has been shown clearly what I told the House some time ago, that the Packard Motor Car Co. can make these cars and make them promptly.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is true; the gentleman strengthens the demand for an increased appropriation, because one of the reasons that the bureau did not ask for a larger amount was because they believed the necessary equipment could not be immediately provided, but it has been shown that the Packard and the Jeffrey and other manufacturing companies can turn out these cars in large numbers, and turn them out quickly. They are willing, they are able. We have provided this morning millions of dollars for the old character of defense, for horses and cavalry, and yet you are disguising the value of the armored motor car, that will do the service of squadrons of cavalry at less expense and less danger to the forces that are utilizing them. I am not advocating anything rash, anything wild. It is based on the recommendation of the head of the department, who is a conservative man, Gen. Crozier, and I think the amendment ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 35, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armored motor cars: For the purchase and manufacture of armored motor cars, $150,000.

Provided, That the appropriations hereinbefore made under the heading "Ordnance Department" shall be available for the payment of an allowance not to exceed $4 per day in lieu of subsistence to civilian employees of the Ordnance Department traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts of duty.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I think that provision——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I think that provision is already embraced in the general language on page 2 of the bill, which is to the following effect:

Including the payment of a per diem allowance not to exceed $4, in lieu of subsistence, to employees of the War Department traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts.

I think that embraces the Ordnance Department as well as any other department, but I leave that to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I have looked at the hearings and I do not see where the Chief of Ordnance has explained this matter. I have no objection to the point of order being made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have not made the point of order, but I reserved it for the purpose of obtaining information. I would like to know whether it is to correct some abuse in that department?

Mr. HAY. The Chief of Ordnance did not explain the matter to the committee, and therefore I can not explain it to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as no explanation has been given as a reason for this proviso at the present time I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Field artillery for National Guard: For the purpose of manufacturing field artillery material for the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, but to remain the property of the United States and to be accounted for in the manner now prescribed by law, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under such regulations as he may prescribe, on the requisitions of the governors of the several States and Territories or the commanding general of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, to issue said artillery material to the National Guard; and the sum of $3,000,000 is hereby appropriated and made immediately available and to remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1917, for the manufacture and issue of the articles constituting the same: Provided, That not more than $170,000 of this appropriation may be used for the purchase of field artillery material.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "$3,000,000" in line 18, page 49, and inserting "$8,000,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 49, line 18, by striking out "$3,000,000" and inserting "$8,000,000."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 49, line 18, as a substitute for the Hay amendment, insert "$16,800,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire recognition?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, $16,800,000 was the amount asked of the committee by Gen. Crozier. In April, before this present Mexican emergency arose, he came before the committee and asked for $16,800,000. How did he get at those figures? Because the Greble Board, long before the European war began, estimated the amount of field artillery which we ought to accumulate before the outbreak of war. We need some $66,000,000 worth of field artillery in addition to what we have got in order to accumulate the amount recommended. Allowing four years more for its accumulation, Gen. Crozier declared that we must appropriate $16,800,000 for each of the four years. The Greble Board, however, has been superseded by the Treat Board. The Treat Board has recently completed a new study of our artillery and ammunition necessities. The Treat Board figures were very materially reduced by Gen. Crozier. After reducing the Treat Board estimates, Gen. Crozier submitted to the Secretary of War a call for about $134,000,000 as an appropriation for artillery for the next four years, and the gentleman from Virginia is giving us $8,000,000 instead.

I wish to point out to this House another fact. The Treat Board found that in order to make us safe we must accumulate $480,000,000 worth of ordnance before the outbreak of war. Gen. Crozier pared that down to the bone, and reduced it from $480,000,000 to $280,000,000. He has submitted these revised figures with his approval to the Secretary of War. Taking that basis of $280,000,000, $134,000,000 must be apportioned, according to Gen. Grozier, for field artillery. If this amount is to be appropriated during the next four years we must appropriate instead of $8,000,000 over $30,000,000. In my amendment I have placed the figures at $16,800,000 because that is the amount called for in compliance with the old Greble Board estimate, made before the European war broke out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$170,000," in line 22, and insert the figures "$4,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 49, in line 22, by striking out "$170,000" and inserting "$4,000,000."

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. What is the object in increasing the amount of artillery which the department may purchase? Is it lack of capacity in the arsenals to manufacture?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. The department is without the capacity to manufacture this artillery which you provide they may purchase?

Mr. HAY. I suppose they could do it if it were extended over several years, but if we wanted it right away they could not.

Mr. KEATING. That is the point I wanted to get at—the capacity of the arsenals for the manufacture of artillery.

Mr. HAY. I think the arsenals where they manufacture this artillery are at Frankford and Rock Island. They manufacture some portion of this at Rock Island and some of it at Frankford, but I do not believe they would have capacity enough to make in one year as much as $8,000,000 worth of field artillery.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman will permit, I want to ask the chairman if it was not a matter before the committee that the heaviest field artillery we now have is the 6-inch howitzer, and that there is every possibility that we will want to use much heavier field artillery than that, and therefore this $4,000,000 of money should be available for the purchase of that field artillery if we should desire it?

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Without having to wait for our arsenals now not fitted up to make it?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. This paragraph is limited exclusively for the purpose of manufacturing field-artillery matériel. I want to ascertain——

Mr. HAY. Well, yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ascertain the need of the limitation by the proviso.

Mr. HAY. The reason of it is, wherever the Government can in its own arsenals manufacture field-artillery carriages, and so forth, it is desired it should be done; but we raised the appropriation, and when it may be necessary to buy this field artillery at once then we give more money for the War Department to expend outside of the Government arsenals.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that the amount carried by the proviso is the limit that can be utilized for the purchase of field artillery from private establishments?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Leaving this $4,000,000 available for the manufacture of field artillery in Government establishments?

Mr. HAY. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 49, in line 21, after the word "same," insert:

"Provided, That $3,000,000 of this appropriation shall be used for the purpose of establishing factories for the manufacture of artillery and machine rifles, ammunition, and equipment for the National Guard, and this appropriation shall be immediately available and shall remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1917."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, it is manifest that this House is determined to secure a large supply of artillery, ammunition, machine guns, and every other kind of arms for the National Guard. The section in which this amendment is suggested provides for the manufacture of artillery and matériel for the National Guard. We have been appropriating at the rate of about a half a million dollars a minute for the last hour. It is the purpose evidently of the House to arm the National Guard that is provided for in the act of June 3 with a complete equipment.

The gentleman from Massachusetts has just stated that before we get through we might need $480,000,000 worth of artillery. While I can not imagine that——

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGGART (continuing). It is evident we are to have a vast amount of it. I yield for just a question.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman will yield for a correction, will he not? I said $480,000,000 for ordnance. The gentleman says "artillery." That means rifles and small-arms munitions, and so forth.

Mr. TAGGART. I am much obliged to the gentleman for defining the weapons of war. It is evident that the Government manufacture of this vast amount of matériel will necessarily work economy. The House is well acquainted with the fact that the Infantry rifle used to cost $27 when manufactured by private parties. It is now laid down at $16, manufactured by the Government.

The House knows that powder used to cost 70 cents a pound, and we know now that it is manufactured by the Government for less than 40 cents a pound. I refer to the artillery powder. We are committed already to the Government manufacture of munitions, and we are unable with the manufactories we have to manufacture the munitions of war.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGGART. I will yield.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Why is it that the small-arms factory in Rock Island has been shut down for the last year and a half?

Mr. TAGGART. I do not know. I think it is a matter of regret if it has been, because the first thing we know the Army in the field will be without equipment. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] finally hit the bull's-eye awhile ago when he said that 50 per cent of this ordnance that we furnish would soon become ineffective. Everybody knows that a high-power rifle does not last. Everybody knows that a machine gun will not last but for a short time, and modern field artillery is not the kind that will last like the old artillery lasted. It will soon wear out. The power of the gun is so high it will soon become defective.

Mr. WINGO. If what the gentleman says is true—and I agree with him on the policy of Government manufacture—if we are going to need this equipment, ought not the amendment in the original form to stand, and not take the time to manufacture plants to manufacture an article, which will take too long?

Mr. TAGGART. So far as that is concerned, we have a thousand field guns now and they are not in the hands of the National Guard. The National Guard is not provided with half its complement of artillery, and, let me say about field guns, that if our National Guard had to go up against a modern army of the same size, provided with a full complement of field artillery, they might be annihilated without seeing the enemy, and could not approach at all or make any use of either rifle or machine gun. Now, that is the situation. The National Guard has not been provided with artillery. The artillery and ammunition provided for in the bill may be delivered any time for two years.

Mr. DOWELL. I note your amendment provides for the manufacture for the National Guard. Does the gentleman desire to limit the manufacture to only the use of one part of the Army?

Mr. TAGGART. I will say that the idea of limiting it to the National Guard is that this committee has the jurisdiction for providing National Guard ordnance. I understand the ordnance for the Regular Army is in the Committee on Appropriations. That is the reason I suggested it.

Why should we not follow the original policy of this Government? I dare say that not a single piece of ordnance was made by private manufacture until the Civil War, and ordnance is so costly now that the patriotism of any man will be suspected who is willing to vote these appropriations of millions after millions to purchase artillery. Every gun and its equipment costs not less than $25,000. Just think of it! And the modern high-power gun will cost $40,000 with all its accompaniments. Why, we just voted down an amendment of $16,000,000 offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts for artillery. They have enlarged the capacity of the Rock Island Arsenal. We acknowledge that we are not able with the Government facilities to manufacture this ordnance we are going to need in the future, and if it is made at private manufacture, no Congress will ever vote in time of peace, or the prospect of peace, for any great supply of ordnance. It is simply voting the money of the people for ordnance to be made at private manufacture at great profit at some future time and not for immediate use. I am justified in saying that, on account of the former cost of articles that were made by private manufacture and that are now made at a little more than half the cost at public manufacture, this amendment would work economy.

It would seem that this amendment is germane. This section provides for the manufacture of artillery, the manufacture of munitions, the manufacture of artillery matériel,, and the method of manufacturing. I am going to insist that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. MANN. A moment ago when I offered an amendment to increase the appropriation for automatic machine rifles for the National Guard from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000, my distinguished friend from Kansas voted against it. Now, here is an appropriation for $8,000,000 for field artillery for the National Guard. It ought to be twice $8,000,000, but the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] proposes to divert nearly half of the $8,000,000 from the obtaining of field artillery to constructing a building somewhere.

Well, just at present it is more important to have guns than it is to have roofs.

Mr. TAGGART. Let me ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. No; I did not interrupt the gentleman when he was speaking.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TAGGART. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman. I want information.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will wait, I will give him some. What the National Guard wants now is field artillery, automatic machines. Rifles are good in their way. It is necessary in war for men to have them, but no longer have they any practical value when battle array meets battle array. I would increase this appropriation from $8,000,000 to $16,000,000, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] proposed. I am not willing to reduce it from $8,000,000 to $5,000,000, as the gentleman from Kansas proposes, and therefore I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] desire to be heard in opposition to the point of order?

Mr. TAGGART. I simply ask unanimous consent to say this much.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the point of order.

Mr. TAGGART. Well, I will say on the point of order that this is a section devoted to the manufacture of matériel. This simply suggests the way to manufacture it. An amendment has been adopted here that the Government shall not manufacture more than half of it. The purpose of my amendment is to suggest a permanent way of getting a supply of artillery and munitions for the use of the National Guard. It is not a question of getting these guns immediately. We can not get these guns from private factories within the next 12 months, and the gentleman from Illinois knows it. We provided $2,000,000 worth of artillery for the National Guard a year ago, and I venture to say not a single gun has been delivered from that appropriation for the use of the Army. Now, this is against future contingencies. It is not to arm troops that are on the border. We have a thousand machine guns to be distributed to the National Guard.

The CHAIRMAN. This is simply a question of whether the amendment is in order or not. If the gentleman wants to be heard on that point, the Chair will be glad to hear him.

Mr. TAGGART. I say we have also a thousand field guns to be distributed to the National Guard, which argues the fact that we are not in immediate want of field artillery or machine guns. This is to provide a future supply of field artillery. The object of the section is to supply munitions, and the object of the amendment is to permit the Government to manufacture more munitions than it is able to manufacture on account of the limited capacity of Government armories.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman that if the amendment proposes new legislation for a Government factory to manufacture these implements, he does not think it is in order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a clerical error on line 20 of page 49. It should be "nineteen hundred and eighteen" instead of "nineteen hundred and seventeen." I move to strike out the word "seventeen" and insert "eighteen."

Mr. HAY. It should be "eighteen."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendment? Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ammunition for field artillery for the National Guard: For the purpose of manufacturing reserve ammunition for field artillery for the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, the funds to be immediately available, and to remain available until the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, $3,000,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, on line 5, page 50, I move to strike out "seventeen" and insert "eighteen."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 5, strike out "seventeen" and insert "eighteen."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$8,000,000," on line 5 of page 50.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 5, strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$8,000,000."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, that is what Gen. Crozier asked for, and I shall be glad to vote for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$4,000,000" in line 6 of page 50.

The CHAIRMAN. In a moment. The Clerk will first read the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That not more than $100,000 of this appropriation may be used in the purchase of field artillery reserve ammunition.

Mr. HAY. I move to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$4,000,000." That is a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 50, line 6, by striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$4,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That not more than $200,000 of this appropriation may be used to procure gauges, dies, jigs, tools, fixtures, and other special aids and appliances, including specifications and detailed drawings necessary for the manufacture by the Government and by private manufacturers of field artillery ammunition necessary for the use of the land forces of the United States in time of war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 50, line 13, by striking out the words "by the Government and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 50, line 13, by striking out the words "by the Government and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAGGART:

Page 50, line 15, after the word "war," insert: "That the board appointed by the Secretary of War under the provisions of section 121 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' shall select three sites in the interior of the United States for the establishment of factories for the manufacture of all munitions of war for the National Guard and report the cost of the same and the estimated cost of establishing and operating such factories to Congress before January 1, 1917."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. TAGGART. I will ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is now a quarter of 5. To put it frankly to the gentleman, there was some hope of finishing this bill tonight. Does not the gentleman think we ought to proceed?

Mr. TAGGART. That is what I thought.

Mr. MANN. I think it is extremely desirable that this bill become a law as soon as possible after the 1st of July.

Mr. TAGGART. In order that a great deal of this ammunition may be delivered on or before June 30, 1918? Is that the idea?

Mr. MANN. No; it is because if we do not have this law in operation by the 1st of July of course we have got to provide in some way for the maintenance of the Army, and it would be a very difficult thing to do without an elaborate bill.

Mr. TAGGART. I propose to discuss the point of order. The amendment calls for no appropriation. It does not make a new law. It does not change existing law. It simply adds something to the duties of a certain board created by section 121 of the Army reorganization act approved the other day. Section 121 of that act provides:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to appoint a board of five citizens, two of whom shall be civilians and three of whom shall be officers of the Army, to investigate and report to him the feasibility, desirability, and practicability of the Government manufacturing arms, munitions, and equipment, showing in said report the comparative prices of the arms, munitions, and equipment manufactured in Government plants and those manufactured in private plants, the amount of money necessary to build and operate Government plants for the manufacture of arms, munitions, and equipment; showing also what the Government plants and arsenals are now doing in the way of manufacturing arms, munitions, and equipment, and what saving has accrued to the Government by reason of its having manufactured a large part of its own arms, munitions, and equipment for the last four years. And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to transmit said report to Congress on or before January 1, 1917.

This section 121 prescribes the duties of a certain board to be appointed by the Secretary of War. This amendment simply adds one more item of duty for that board to perform. It calls for no appropriation. It is evident that Congress intended to work economy by having this board appointed, and this amendment asks that the board make a complete report, that it select these places wherever it chooses, and report to Congress what they would cost, and what it would cost to operate and maintain these factories.

The CHAIRMAN. The section cited by the gentleman prescribes that the board shall have authority to do certain things. The amendment provides that this board shall do certain other things. In other words, this amendment is needed in order to furnish authority for the board to do the things proposed. Hence the amendment is subject to the point of order that it is enacting law in an appropriation bill. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print as a part of my remarks an article on the subject of field artillery and heavy guns.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks along the line indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article is as follows:

BERLIN, June 22.

"Our successes in the present war are principally due to the superiority of our heavy artillery," said Prof. Dr. Rausenberger, the inventor of the giant 42-centimeter gun, on his recent visit to Sofia, in an interview granted to a correspondent.

"The light flat-fire field guns have been relegated to the background and will eventually disappear entirely," the German schoolmaster, who has become famous as the constructor of the most terrible modern war machine, continued.

"The field guns are of little use in trench warfare, and will have to be replaced by steep-fire ordnance. Trenches, shelters, and field fortifications of troops in ninety cases out of every hundred can only be reached by shells fired at a high angle. Only in rare instances is it possible to bombard them effectively with ordinary fieldpieces."

Asked whether it would be possible to improve the means of defense so as to render even the fire of the heaviest attacking guns ineffective, the inventor said:

"The artillery is capable of unlimited development. It is impossible to dig the trenches and shelters deeper, because this would hinder the rapid retreat of the troops in them, if they should be attacked suddenly by numerically superior forces. Even the deepest trenches and armored shelters afford no protection against the shells of our high-angle guns, and we can reach the enemy with our fire from distances which were not dreamed of before our 'Big Berthas' came into existence.

"We are able to fire across the English Channel and to throw shells 3 or 4 miles into England, but the limit is not nearly reached. Without any great difficulty we will be able to construct guns with a much larger range. England is no longer invulnerable, and she knows it."

In regard to his own invention the professor said:

"The general staff long ago asked the Krupps to construct a monster gun of certain specified capabilities. The experiments were begun more than 10 years ago, and we finally solved the problem, but the matter of the transportation of the enormous howitzers still bothered us. Only shortly before the outbreak of the war did we succeed in improving the mobility of the great guns. 'Big Berthas,' which could be transported and placed into position without specially constructed field railroads were used for the first time in the bombardment of Liege."

From his guns the inventor switched to a discussion of fortresses.

"I do not believe that fortresses like Liege and Antwerp will be rebuilt. The different countries will, of course, keep their frontiers fortified, but fortresses with girdles of forts have been made useless by modern artillery. The fortifications of the future will be of an entirely different character."

Finally the professor took up the munitions question.

"The hope of our enemies that we will ever run short of ammunition is futile. We are able to produce any required quantity of shells, and they will always be superior to those of the allies.

"At the beginning of the war we were not so well prepared. We had to construct an enormous amount of machinery and build many factories before we could fully supply the demands of our army. During the early stages of the war we were compelled to cast most of our shells, but now they are all made of pressed steel and their quality is unsurpassable.

"The British, with the rich resources at their disposal, have been very successful in the production of munitions. The production of Russia is also far larger and better than the general public knows. The industrial strength of the Russians must not be underestimated.

"I know the Putiloff works and their capability. With the aid of England, Japan, and the United States, Russia will manage to get enough ammunition for her armies.

"The quality of the American munitions was very poor at first, but it is becoming much better lately. The United States will undoubtedly more than double the production of shells during the next six months, but we can await the further developments of the war without anxiety, because we will always outclass our enemies in the production of ammunition, as we do in artillery."

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL GUARD.

Arming, equipping, and training the National Guard: To provide for the purchase, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, of horses conforming to the Regular Army standards for the use of Field Artillery, Cavalry, signal companies, engineer companies, ambulance companies, and other mounted units of the National Guard, said horses to remain the property of the United States and to be used solely for military purposes. Horses so purchased may be issued not to exceed 32 to any one battery, troop, or company, or four to a battalion or regimental headquarters, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, $800,000.

Mr. HAY. I move to strike out "$800,000" in line 3, page 51, and to insert "$200,000." I do that for the reason that the National Guard has now been called into the service of the United States, and will be furnished with horses, and it is not necessary to carry this appropriation for a larger sum than $200,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 3, strike out "$800,000" and insert "$200,000."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, under the existing organization some members of the National Guard have already provided themselves with their own horses. That is true of some of the field batteries. Two in my counties have provided partially or wholly their own horses. Now, my understanding is that the law up to the present time has provided that they shall receive forage, and so forth, for their horses. If they are ordered into the service of the United States, horses are furnished them, under another provision of the law. The question is, What becomes of the horses which they have purchased? I want to ask the chairman of the committee if there is some provision for taking over those horses, or for some disposition of them?

Mr. HAY. In the following paragraph we provide for the forage, bedding, and shoeing.

Mr. BORLAND. What becomes of the horses themselves?

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman mean the horses owned by the guard?

Mr. BORLAND. The horses owned by the guard.

Mr. HAY. I suppose they could dispose of them just like anybody else, if they wanted to.

Mr. BORLAND. They are going to the front.

Mr. ANTHONY. Ought there not to be some provision for remunerating these organizations which had already used their own funds?

Mr. BORLAND. It seems to me there ought to be. These men are on their way to the front with horses furnished by the Government. Their own horses will be left behind at their armories. There ought to be some provision for the Government taking over the horses that have been purchased by the National Guard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide for the procurement of forage, bedding, shoeing, veterinary service, and supplies for horses that may be owned or issued to organizations of the National Guard, $450,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 6, after the word "owned," insert the word "by."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "$450,000" and inserting "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 7, strike out the figures "$450,000" and insert "$100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide for the compensation of competent help for the care of materiel, animals, and equipment thereof, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That the men to be compensated, not to exceed five for each battery, troop, or company, shall be duly enlisted therein and shall be detailed by the battery, troop, or company commander under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, and shall be paid by the United States disbursing officer in each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia, $300,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order. I wish to ascertain the reason for making this provision for compensation of this help. Was this carried in the Army organization bill?

Mr. HAY. It was.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$300,000," in line 17, and insert "$100,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, on page 51, line 17, the figures "$300,000" and insert "$100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide for the participation of the whole or any part of the National Guard in encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises, including outdoor target practice and field and coast-defense instruction, either independently or in conjunction with any part of the Regular Army, and there may be set aside from the funds apportioned for that purpose and allotted to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia such portion of said funds as may be necessary for the payment, subsistence, transportation, and other proper expenses of such portion of the National Guard of said State, Territory, or the District of Columbia as shall participate in such encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises, including outdoor target practice and field and coast-defense instruction; and the officers and enlisted men of such National Guard while so engaged shall be entitled to the same pay, subsistence, and transportation as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades of the Regular Army are or hereafter may be entitled to by law: To provide for camps of instruction for the instruction of officers and enlisted men of the National Guard. Such camps shall be conducted by officers of the Regular Army detailed by the Secretary of War for the purpose, and may be located either within or without the State, Territory, or District of Columbia to which the members of the National Guard designated to attend said camps shall belong. Officers and enlisted men attending such camps shall be entitled to pay and transportation, and enlisted men to subsistence in addition at the same rates as for encampments or maneuvers for field and coast-defense instruction. To be immediately available, $2,500,000: Provided, That of this sum $500,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is authorized to be expended for the payment of transportation of troops of the Regular Army in connection with joint camps of instruction of the National Guard: Provided further, That hereafter nothing in the act of February 4, 1897, known as the act to regulate commerce, or any amendments thereto, shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates for members of State militia organizations traveling to and from joint encampments with the Regular Army.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, in line 21, page 52, I move to strike out the figures "$2,500,000" and insert "$500,000." I do that because there will be no maneuvers this year. There may be a few troops left, but there will be no maneuvers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 52, line 21, strike out the figures "$2,500,000" and insert "$500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, in line 22, strike out the figures "$500,000" and insert the figures "$100,000," so that it will read "$100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, page 53, at the end of line 2, strike out the word "ninety" and insert the word "eighty."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 53, line 2, strike out the word "ninety" and insert the word "eighty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. On line 5, page 53, I move to strike out the words "State militia" and insert the words "National Guard," so that it will read "National Guard organization."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 53, line 5, strike out the words "State militia" and insert in lieu thereof the words "National Guard."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide for the attendance of selected officers or enlisted men of the National Guard who pursues a regular course of study at any military service school of the United States except the United States Military Academy, or to be attached to an organization of the same arm, corps, or department to which such officers or enlisted men shall belong for routine practical instruction at or near an Army post during a period of field training or other outdoor exercises; and such officer or enlisted men shall receive out of any National Guard allotment of funds available for the purpose the same travel allowances and quarters or commutation of quarters and the same pay, allowance, and subsistence to which officers or enlisted men of the Regular Army would be entitled for attending such school, college, or practical course of instruction under orders from proper military authority while in actual attendance at such school, college, or practical course of instruction, $50,000: Provided, That in no case shall the pay and allowances authorized herein exceed those of a captain.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, on line 9, page 53, occurs the word "pursues." It should be "pursue." I move to amend.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 53, line 9, strike out the word "pursues" and insert the word "pursue."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For providing arms, ordnance stores, quartermaster stores, camp equipage, and all other military supplies for issue to the National Guard; for the promotion of rifle practice, including the acquisition, construction, maintenance, and equipment of shooting galleries and suitable target ranges; for the hire of horses and draft animals for the use of mounted troops, batteries, and wagons; for forage for the same; and for such other incidental expenses in connection with lawfully authorized encampments, maneuvers, and field instruction as the Secretary of War may deem necessary; and for such other expenses pertaining to the National Guard as are now or may hereafter be authorized by law, $2,000,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

After line 20, page 54, insert as follows:

"Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to relieve any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia from further accountability for all United States property issued thereto for use of the Organized Militia therefor which the records of the War Department show to have been lost or destroyed prior to December 31, 1911."

Mr. STAFFORD. To that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman that for some time there has been accumulating in different States old, obsolete, equipment, and the States have been charged up with the equipment and are now charged with it. The War Department thinks that in order to wipe off the slate and start fresh with this new legislation which we have just enacted that this amendment ought to be agreed to. I am offering the amendment at the request of the War Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. What was the date stated in the amendment at which time the claim is wiped out?

Mr. HAY. December 31, 1911.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have a faint impression that in the Army organization bill there was a provision whereby the States were to be charged for these losses.

Mr. HAY. That is in the future. These items are what have been charged up in the past, and they amount to about $316,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purpose as to the claims arising since January 1, 1912?

Mr. HAY. They do not propose to relieve those at all. It is only those old accumulated claims which have been carried since the Spanish War, 1898, and some of them before the Spanish War.

Mr. STAFFORD. We passed the so-called Dick law in 1907, did we not?

Mr. HAY. In 1903 the first law, and then the Dick law in 1908, if I remember correctly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the Dick law the National Government made most substantial advances to the various States in the way of accouterment.

Mr. HAY. Yes. Before the Dick law was passed they had made under the law of 1903 some advances, and these were charges made against the States and carried through a good many years, and they now amount in all of the States to about $316,000. The War Department does not see any way by which they can get the $316,000 from the States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are we assured that we can hold the States to a strict accounting as to the matériel furnished since January 1, 1912?

Mr. HAY. Under the new law we can. I do not think any claim has accumulated since that time. I do not think the States have lost any property.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have any of those claims been disputed by the States as to their responsibility?

Mr. HAY. Yes; a good many of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I can see some reason for wiping out old claims held against the respective States, but I do not wish this to be taken as a precedent for our action in the future. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide for the necessary clerical and office expenses of the Militia Bureau authorized by section 67 of the act approved June 3, 1916: Chief clerk, $2,250; chief of division, $2,000; clerks—2 of class 4; 3 of class 3; 7 of class 2; 15 of class 1; 8 at $1,000 each; messenger; 2 assistant messengers; 2 laborers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point or order. I notice in this paragraph that you are attempting to increase the salary of the chief clerk from $2,000 to $2,250. It is carried in the legislative bill at $2,000.

Mr. HAY. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order. So far as the increase in salary is concerned, I have not much concern, but if the gentleman makes the point of order he cripples this bureau, and it is particularly busy right now. They have not been provided for anywhere else.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have a chief clerk, at least, authorized in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for this very Bureau of Militia.

Mr. HAY. Yes; but the appropriation for that was made out of funds provided by the militia law, $2,000,000. That law has been repealed, and there is no longer any $2,000,000 provided under the law, and this force of clerks must be provided for. I am not so much concerned about the salary, and I will agree to put the salary at $2,000, or whatever it was before.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What is the gentleman going to do with this sort of situation? The legislative bill makes an appropriation of $39,200 for clerks in the Militia Division. That is the law.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman does not do that. He makes an appropriation to be paid out of $2,000,000 provided for under the militia law. The Army reorganization act repeals that law so far as that appropriation is concerned, and it provides that all of the money hereafter appropriated for the National Guard and for the Organized Militia should be appropriated by Congress every year. The appropriation made last year was from a permanent appropriation. These are annual appropriations, and that law has been, as I say, repealed. Therefore, if you do not permit it to stand these clerks will not be provided for, and, again, the Militia Bureau, which you have provided for, was a part of the General Staff of the Army.

Under the Army reorganization act this bureau is made a separate bureau of the War Department and it is no longer a division of the General Staff, and therefore the provision which was made in the legislative bill does not cover these clerks at all.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman say the annual appropriation of $2,000,000 was repealed by the present defense law?

Mr. HAY. Yes; all of it—$4,000,000 in all.

Mr. BORLAND. That ought to come out of the legislative bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, it is already passed, but, as I understand the gentleman from Virginia to say, it is ineffective because the appropriation from which it is intended to be made has been repealed.

Mr. HAY. There was appropriated in the legislative bill so much, to be taken from the sum of money provided by the militia act. Now, that act is repealed, and therefore there is no money from which these people can be paid.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman be willing, subject to the approval of the chairman of the legislative committee, to provide, for this year only, in the language or phrase of this bill, for these officials as carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill at the salaries therein stated?

Mr. HAY. Well, I will do that. I suppose this is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit—as I view it it is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, I think probably it is.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. So far as I am concerned I make no question about the number of employees or their salaries the gentleman is providing. I know nothing about that, and I am sure the gentleman has taken that into consideration.

The only point with me is this: Of course the point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I concurred with him in the reservation for this reason—it is not within the jurisdiction of this committee to report salaries for this bureau. Now if there is any question about these people not being provided for, of course so far as I am concerned I am willing to see the point of order not made without any idea of creating a precedent for the future.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman I am perfectly willing that should be done. I do not think that hereafter these clerks should be provided for in the Army appropriation bill. I think they should be carried in the legislative bill, but that has become law, and these clerks are not provided for because of the fact the Army organization act repealed the law which provided for the appropriation from which they have been paid, therefore they have to be taken care of somewhere, and I think they had better be taken care of here. Now, so far as the salary of the chief clerk is concerned, I would be perfectly willing for it to be put at $2,000, but the increase of clerks is made necessary, as the gentleman can well see, by reason of the fact that the Militia Bureau will have a great deal more work to do hereafter than they have in the past.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit? I directed that very query to the Chief of the Bureau of Militia Affairs when he came before our committee recommending an increase in his clerical force, and he stated that the increase was in prospect, in contemplation of the National Guard being brought under the indirect control of the War Department. The chief of the bureau then recommended that the chief clerk's salary be raised from $2,000 to $2,250, which recommendation our committee declined to allow. There was no recommendation for a chief of division or as to some of the other clerks. There is a considerable increase proposed, but I have no desire to cripple this bureau, and I would suggest that the chief clerk's salary be restored to the present salary of $2,000, and that the chief of division be eliminated, so that the legislative committee next year can take this matter in charge.

Mr. HAY. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me right there to ask some information——

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. This appropriation that the gentleman speaks of, which has been repealed, was for normal conditions? Now, how many people are called in the Army?

Mr. HAY. One hundred thousand.

Mr. CANNON. One hundred thousand, and liable to be more?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, here is an entirely new force.

Now, unless there is provision made elsewhere in this bill for this extraordinary increase of work that necessarily comes somewhere along the line of the public service in making very large appropriations for the payment of the National Guard and increase in the Army, why you might just as well not make them unless you have somebody to do the work.

Mr. HAY. I agree with the gentleman, but the gentleman from Wisconsin is putting me on terms. It is subject to a point of order, and the gentleman is saying——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, under the provisions I suggest, in nowise will the department be crippled. I am submitting here a proposal granting eight more clerks, all they request, and only asking for the elimination of one chief of the division.

Mr. BORLAND. I suggest to the gentleman that the division, as far as the militia passes under the War Department, passes out of the control of the Bureau of Militia Affairs, so it does not cripple the Bureau of Militia Affairs at all.

Mr. HAY. There is no other provision made in the bill for any increase in clerical help.

Mr. BORLAND. That will come in in a deficiency, then.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the statement made by the chairman of the committee that he is willing to accept an amendment to reduce the salary of the chief clerk to $2,000 and strike out the provision for the chief of division at $2,000, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill on page 54, line 24, by striking out "$2,250," so that it will read, "chief clerk, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Now, I move to strike out in the same line the following words, "chief of division, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 54, line 24, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three" preceding the words "of class four"; on line 25 strike out the word "three" and insert the word "two" preceding the words "of class three." and strike out "fifteen" and insert the word "fourteen" preceding the words "of class one"; on line 1, page 55, strike out "eight" and insert "nine" preceding "at $1,000."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the amendments suggested do not add one dollar to the appropriation in this bill. The effect of it simply is to decrease the $1,200 clerks by one, and to add one more clerk at $1,000, and the $200 saved by these two amendments is applied so as to provide for three $1,800 clerks instead of two. The effect of it will be that no clerk in the bureau now in its employ will be injured by this readjustment. If it is not done, the chief of the bureau has to select between two chiefs of divisions and give one an increase of $200 and not give it to the other. Both clerks are experienced, and the amendments suggested are not disapproved of or objectionable to the chief of the bureau. Inasmuch as it does not add one dollar to the appropriation but simply provides for the promotion of clerks now in the employ, and the $200 is saved by giving $200 less to a new clerk who comes in the employ of the Government for the first time, I trust it will be accepted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. It is a very unpleasant task to arise after we have had an agreement to a proposition that is not in order, which agreement was within the plain hearing of the gentleman who has proposed the amendment and then, after the point of order is withdrawn, for the gentleman to rise here and go contrary to the understanding between the gentlemen as to what should be considered as in order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I had no desire to do that, and I would not do it. The fact is I did not offer it before, because I understood you had reserved the point of order, and until you had stated definitely whether you would make it, I knew it was of no use to offer the amendment. That was the only reason I did not make it before.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, the gentleman was not bound by the tacit agreement which was lived up to by the chairman of the committee. This paragraph is a matter in the purview of the Committee on Appropriations. We have given consideration to that, and we gave consideration to the increase of this force. Without any desire to cripple this force, the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee] and myself agreed to grant all the requests of this Bureau of Militia Affairs, save in one particular, and that is to strike out the chief of division. Now it is perfectly within the power of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], after a gentleman's agreement has been entered into, to come here and submit the amendment, but I say it is not fair to the House to take advantage of the situation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to do that. I understood that the only objection of the gentleman was to the salary of the chief of division there, and that there was an understanding between the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Wisconsin that did not in any way affect the other employees provided for in this bureau. The only reason I did not offer the amendment before was that the point of order was reserved. If it had been insisted upon, it would have been useless for me to offer the amendment, and as soon as it was withdrawn I offered the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office rent of inspector-instructors, $25,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, after line 6, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"All the money hereinbefore appropriated for arming, equipping, and training the National Guard shall be disbursed and accounted for as such, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arms, uniforms, equipment, etc., National Guard: To procure by purchase or manufacture and issue from time to time to the National Guard upon requisition of the governors of the several States and Territories, or the commanding general, National Guard of the District of Columbia, such number of United States service arms with all accessories, Field Artillery and Coast Artillery material, engineer, signal, and sanitary material, accouterments, field uniforms, clothing, equipage, publications, and military stores of all kinds, including public animals, as are necessary to arm, uniform, and equip for field service the National Guard in the several States, Territory, and the District of Columbia: Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated $76,000, or so much thereof as may be required, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be made available for the purchase and maintenance of material and equipment necessary for the proper instruction in military aviation of such officers and enlisted men of the National Guard as may be authorized by the War Department to attend the United States Aviation School, $4,000,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$4,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 57, line 2, by striking out "$4,000,000" and inserting "$2,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Virginia what is the reason for that?

Mr. HAY. The reason for that is that during the next fiscal year it will not be necessary to expend this amount of money to procure and issue and purchase matériel, because the National Guard, as such, will not be in existence; they will be in the service of the United States, and we have already appropriated a large sum for this purpose.

Mr. MANN. All through the bill we have been making appropriations available for the National Guard on the assumption that they will be used by the Guard when drafted. Are there other appropriations that will provide them with this equipment?

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes. There is an appropriation of $12,000,000 over in another part of the bill that provides for this purpose, and this is an appropriation which will be paid——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the appropriation under this head for the Regular Establishment been increased with the expectation of reducing this item?

Mr. HAY. It has been increased for the Regular Establishment not for the purpose of reducing this item but my reason for reducing the item is that we can not spend the $4,000,000 on account of the fact that the National Guard will not then be in existence to spend it on.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood the gentleman to say, in answer to an inquiry made sometime ago, that the appropriations that we were making for other purposes of the National Guard for arms, field artillery, and so forth, could be used by the National Guard after it was called into the Federal service.

Mr. HAY. That is true.

Mr. MONDELL. If that is true with regard to these items, why is it not true also with regard to this?

Mr. HAY. Because, for instance, the accouterments, field implements, and military stores of all kinds, including public animals, will be furnished to the men who have been in the National Guard under other appropriations in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide for the expense of maintaining, upon military reservations or elsewhere, camps for the military instruction and training of such citizens as may be selected for such instruction and training, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and to furnish to said citizens the subsistence, transportation, and uniforms authorized by the act of Congress approved May —, 1916, $500,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move, in line 15, page 59, to strike out the word "May" and insert the words "June 3."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 59, line 15, by striking out the word "May" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 3."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, in line 16, page 59, I move to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, line 16, strike out "$500,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment by Mr. HAY: Page 59, at the end of line 16 insert:

"Provided, That so much of this appropriation as may be necessary shall be available for the subsistence and transportation of all persons between the ages of 18 and 45 years who have attended any camp authorized by the Secretary of War during the calendar year 1916."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAVENNER: Page 59, line 16, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States while making or causing to be made with a stop watch, or other time-measuring device, a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant."

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, this is precisely the same amendment that the House has adopted three times in the last two weeks. I do not think it is necessary to say anything more than what has already been said on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORES of Indiana) there were—ayes 75, noes 47.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANFORD: Page 59, line 16, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any person hereafter in time of peace appointed an officer in the Army who is not a citizen of the United States."

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, many will be surprised to learn that under existing law an officer in the United States Army need not be a citizen. There was a time when we were glad to have the service of men as officers in war who came to us because of their love of our cause.

These positions, however, in peace times are positions much desired by our own people. In war times they are positions of great responsibility. We have outgrown the days when we can wisely give such positions of profit in peace and responsibility in war to foreigners.

There are aliens now officers in our Army.

The statute law respecting the requirement of citizenship for enlistment and appointment of cadets and officers of the Regular Army is as follows:

1. ENLISTED MEN.

In time of peace no person (except an Indian) who is not a citizen of the United States, or who has not made legal declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, * * * shall be enlisted for the first enlistment in the Army. (Sec. 2, act of Aug. 1, 1894 (28 Stat., 216), as amended by sec. 4, act of Mar. 2, 1899 (30 Stat., 978).)

Citizens of Porto Rico shall be eligible for enlistment in the Regular Army. * * * (Act of Mar. 2, 1903 (32 Stat., 934).)

2. CADETS.

The Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy shall hereafter consist of * * *. They shall be appointed by the President, and shall, with the exception of the 80 appointed from the United States at large, be actual residents of the congressional or Territorial district, or of the District of Columbia, or of the island of Porto Rico, or of the States, respectively, from which they purport to be appointed. (Act of Mar. 4, 1916 (Pub., No. 79, 64th Cong. NOTE.—Citizenship is not essential to appointment as cadet.)

3. SECOND LIEUTENANTS OF LINE.

* * * That all unmarried soldiers under 30 years of age who are citizens of the United States * * * may compete for promotion under any system authorized by this act. (Act of July 30, 1892 (27 Stat., 336). There is no corresponding requirement of statute law respecting appointments to grade of second lieutenant from civil life.)

4. SECOND LIEUTENANTS OF ENGINEER CORPS.

* * * To become eligible for examination and appointment a civilian candidate for the appointment as second lieutenant (in the Corps of Engineers) must be an unmarried citizen of the United States. * * * (Sec. 5, act of Feb. 27, 1911 (36 Stat., 957).)

5. SECOND LIEUTENANTS OF PORTO RICAN REGIMENT.

Vacancies created by this act or occurring hereafter in the grade of second lieutenant in said regiment (Porto Rican Regiment) shall be filled during any calendar year by the appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of any native of Porto Rico graduated from the United States Military Academy, and, after such appointment shall have been made or provided for, by like appointment of native citizens of Porto Rico between 21 and 27 years of age. (Sec. 21, act of June 3, 1916 (national-defense act).)

6. SECOND AND FIRST LIEUTENANTS OF PHILIPPINE SCOUTS.

When, in the opinion of the President, natives of the Philippine Islands shall, by their services and character, show fitness for command, the President is authorized to make provisional appointments to the grades of second and first lieutenants from such natives * * *. (Sec. 36, act of Feb. 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 757).)

7. MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

SEC. 10. The Medical Department.—The Medical Department shall consist * * *, the commissioned officers of which shall be citizens of the United States. (Act of June 3, 1916 (national-defense act).)

8. DENTAL SURGEONS.

The President is hereby authorized to appoint and commission, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, dental surgeons, who are citizens of the United States between the ages of 21 and 27 years, at the rate of 1 for each 1,000 enlister men of the line of the Army. (Id.)

9. VETERINARIANS.

SEC. 16. Veterinarians.—The President is hereby authorized * * * to appoint veterinarians * * * and said veterinarians and assistant veterinarians shall be citizens of the United States * * *. (Act of June 3, 1916 (national-defense act).)

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to have the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 31.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAY for the committee: Page 59, following line 16, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"That section 125 of the act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, shall apply to the Coast Guard in the same manner as to the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps."

Mr. MANN. What is the purpose of this amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order for the purpose of getting an explanation.

Mr. HAY. The purpose of this amendment is to protect the uniform of the Coast Guard as well as the uniform of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send the amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDDLESTON: Page 59, after line 16, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The amendment is clearly out of order, but I trust the gentleman will reserve his point of order for a moment.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not make the point of order.

Mr. HAY. I am informed that the statute which the gentleman desires to repeal is the statute which prevents the payment of a pension to the father of a soldier if he was in the Confederate Army. Understanding that, I will not make the point of order, and I hope nobody else will. Let us adopt the amendment. I think the time has come when we ought to do it.

Mr. MANN. We repealed this section of the statute so far as it applied to soldiers in the Spanish War.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I think the time has come when we may very well repeal the section. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That a council of executive information for the coordination of industries and resources for the national security and welfare is hereby established, to consist of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend at the beginning of line 17 by inserting the words "Section 2."

Mr. HAY. I accept that amendment.

Mr. MANN. This is a new matter, and it ought to commence a new section.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the subsequent numbers to sections may be changed in order to conform to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Virginia to renumber the sections will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. All through the balance of the bill this council is referred to as the "Council of Executive Information." That title, it seems to me, is long enough, and evidently the committee thought it long enough because they used the title "Council of Executive Information." But as printed in what is now section 2, the title would be "Council of Executive Information for the Coordination of Industries and Resources for the National Security and Welfare."

These words are all capitalized. I suggest that in order to have the title of a reasonable length that the words that are capitalized after "Information" be changed to commence with lower-case letters.

Mr. HAY. I accept the suggestion.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the council of executive information to supervise and direct investigations and make recommendations to the President and the heads of executive departments as to the location of railroads with reference to the frontier of the United States so as to render possible expeditious concentration of troops and supplies to points of defense; the coordination of military, industrial, and commercial purposes in the location of extensive highways and branch lines of railroad; the mobilization of military and naval resources for defense; the increase of domestic production of articles and materials essential to the support of armies and of the people during the interruption of foreign commerce; the development of seagoing transportation; data as to amounts, location, method and means of production, and availability of military supplies; the giving of information to producers and manufacturers as to the class of supplies needed by the military and other services of the Government, the requirements relating thereto, and the creation of relations which will render possible in time of need the immediate concentration and utilization of the resources of the Nation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 60, line 21, after the word "railroad," insert the words "the utilization of waterways."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, there is no provision made here for the use of waterways.

Mr. HAY. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On pages 60 and 61 strike out all of section 4 and insert the following as a substitute therefor:

"SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Council of Executive Information to supervise and direct investigations and make recommendations to the President and the heads of executive departments as to the location of railroads with reference to the frontier of the United States so as to render possible expeditious concentration of troops and supplies to points of defense; the coordination of military, industrial, and commercial purposes in the location of extensive highways and branch lines of railroad; the mobilization of military and naval resources for defense, including the location and construction of factories for the manufacture of munitions of war; the increase of domestic production of articles and materials essential to the support of armies and of the people during the interruption of foreign commerce; the development of seagoing transportation; data as to amounts, location, method and means of production, and availability of military supplies; the giving of information to producers and manufacturers as to the class of supplies needed by the military and other services of the Government, the requirements relating thereto, and the creation of relations which will render possible in time of need the immediate concentration and utilization of the resources of the Nation.

"Provided, That said Council of Executive Information is authorized to select sites for not to exceed three plants for the manufacture of munitions of war for the use of the Army and the Navy and the coast fortifications of the Nation, and to erect the necessary buildings thereon, and to purchase and install therein such machinery as may be required for the manufacture of munitions of war. Said plants shall be located with especial reference to consideration of safety in time of war, and, if possible, in accordance with the recommendations submitted to Secretary of War Garrison by the War College, Division General Staff Corps, in compliance with the instructions of the Secretary of War in March, 1915. The sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available until expended, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section: Provided further, That no part of said appropriation shall be expended until the report of said Council of Executive Information concerning the location, construction, and equipment of said munitions plants has been approved in writing by the President of the United States.

"Nothing herein contained shall be construed as directing the abandonment of any existing munitions plant owned and operated by the United States or the curtailment of the output thereof."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. KEATING. I think the amendment is in order. The original paragraph is clearly out of order, but no point of order having been made against it, a germane amendment is in order. I have changed the original paragraph so as to give this board the authority to select sites for munition factories and to erect factories thereon. I contend that that is a legitimate addition to the duties of this board and having made that addition the appropriation provided for is clearly germane. I think the amendment is in order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the original section of the bill is clearly subject to a point of order, and any germane amendment relating to the same subject matter would be in order. However, this introduces an entirely new subject. It has been repeatedly held in the House that although an item in a deficiency bill be subject to a point of order, and the point of order be not made, it is not in order by way of amendment to introduce a new subject matter. The gentleman proposes to authorize this board to select sites to construct factories, a thing entirely apart from anything in the original paragraph.

In addition to that fact the erection of factories for munition purposes, under the rules of the House, is a matter that goes to the Committee on Appropriations and is not in order on the military appropriation bill.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman from Illinois has stated the rule very clearly; but where he errs, in my judgment, is in contending that the original section is not broad enough to make my amendment germane. We are giving this board very broad authority. It is "to make recommendations to the President and heads of executive departments as to the location of railroads with reference to the frontier of the United States," and is to consider "coordination of military, industrial, and commercial resources." It is to "consider the mobilization of the military and naval resources."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman contend that that gives the broad authority to buy railroads or build railroads, or anythink like that?

Mr. KEATING. It would not under the existing section.

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all.

Mr. KEATING. And it would not under my amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; it would.

Mr. KEATING. Not to buy railroads. If the gentleman wants to offer an amendment on railroads, we will consider that proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. Under the gentleman's amendment it would.

Mr. KEATING. I am giving the board authority to select sites for the location of munitions factories, which is in line with "mobilizing our military and naval resources for the purposes of defense." Nothing could be clearer than that. If you went about the work of mobilizing your military and naval resources, what could be more germane than to see to it that arsenals and workshops were properly located; and if private manufacturers would not locate them properly, what would be more in order than that you should give such a board—composed of experts—power to locate sites and to erect buildings thereon? I contend, again, Mr. Chairman, that, having permitted the original section to be adopted without a point of order being made, this amendment is in order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman's contention were correct, then you might add an amendment to build a railroad or to construct a ship plant, or you might add an amendment to construct any kind of a commercial manufacturing establishment.

Mr. KEATING. But that is a matter that is in the discretion of this committee. The committee is not going on a wild-goose chase.

Mr. MANN. I am discussing the point of order. The original provision, which was to conduct certain investigations and to make recommendations to the President, is not of itself a warrant to add to it a provision for the purchase of a railroad or a ship plant or the construction of a factory, or anything of that kind.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, in section 6 the sum of $200,000 is appropriated for experimental work and investigation. Suppose that under that provision the board wanted to erect a factory of some kind to carry on experimental work, does the gentleman contend it would not have authority to do so?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The general principles involved here are very simple. The application of these principles is not easy. Looking to the provisions of the paragraph under consideration it will be seen that these provisions relate entirely to collecting and reporting information, furnishing data, and so forth. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING], however, proposes to go further than to collect and afford information. It provides for the selection of sites, and the location of plants. If this amendment had been limited to requiring the board to furnish information concerning sites, it would clearly be an amplification of the provisions of the paragraph; in other words, it would perfect the bill by a germane amendment; but the amendment proposed goes so much further than anything contemplated in the paragraph under consideration and provides for something so entirely different, that the Chair does not think that it can be fairly said to come within the principle relating to perfecting a paragraph by a germane addition thereto. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Council of Executive Information shall adopt rules and regulations for the conduct of its work, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the President, and shall provide for the work of the advisory commission to the end that the special knowledge of such commission may be developed by suitable investigation, research, and inquiry and made available in conference and report for the use of the council; and the council may organize subordinate bodies for its assistance in special investigations, either by the employment of experts or by the creation of committees of specially qualified persons to serve without compensation, but to direct the investigations of experts so employed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may return to section 2 for the purpose of offering an amendment to transpose the words "is hereby established" from line 19 to line 17, inserting them after the word "information," so that it will read:

That a Council of Executive Information is hereby established—

And so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to the place indicated in the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman now submits an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, line 19, transpose the words "is hereby established" to line 17, on the same page, following the word "information."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the sum of $200,000 a year, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for experimental work and investigations undertaken by the council, by the advisory commission, or subordinate bodies, for the employment of a director, expert and clerical expenses and supplies, and for the necessary expenses of members of the advisory commission or subordinate bodies going to and attending meetings of the commission or subordinate bodies. Reports shall be submitted by all subordinate bodies and by the advisory commission to the council, and from time to time the council shall report to the President or to the heads of executive departments upon special inquiries or subjects appropriate thereto, and an annual report to the Congress shall be submitted through the President, including as full a statement of the activities of the council and the agencies subordinate to it as is consistent with the public interest, including an itemized account of the expenditures made by the council or authorized by it, in as full detail as the public interest will permit: Provided, however, That when deemed proper the President may authorize, in amounts stipulated by him, unvouchered expenditures and report the gross sums so authorized not itemized.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 36 of the bill.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the section which has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas when the section has been perfected.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, on page 61, line 22, I offer to amend by striking out the words "a year." I really think that is subject to a point of order, because an appropriation can not be made under the terms of the Constitution for longer than two years for the Army. But after consultation with the committee I have decided to offer an amendment striking out those words "a year," so it shall not be a permanent appropriation.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 39 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to this section? If not, the Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING].

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 36, line 5, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to return to page 36, line 5, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the amendment be reported first.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, line 5, after the word "county," insert: "Provided further, That not to exceed $30,000 thereof shall be expended for the replacement of the bridge across the Republican River near Fort Riley, Kans."

Mr. MANN. That is a good title.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to have an explanation as to whether this bridge is on Government territory, and why the Government should replace and keep it in condition?

Mr. HELVERING. I will say there is a question about whether or not the Government is entirely liable for the replacement of this bridge, and the War Department is trying to get that matter settled at the present time, and for the information of the gentleman I will say that I have a letter, a part of which I will read, from the Acting Secretary of War, Gen. Scott, relative to this proposition. The part referring to this bridge is this:

In order to use this road it is necessary that the bridge across the Republican River be reconstructed, and the department has recommended favorable consideration of the bill (S. 4063) authorizing the replacement of this bridge.

Now, this bridge was washed out by the unprecedented flood we had there last fall, or about a year ago now, and has never been replaced, and one end of it rests on the military reservation and the other on land adjacent to the military reservation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who owns that land?

Mr. HELVERING. Well, it belongs to different parties. This bridge connects the approach to the military reservation with the public highway.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should not the State or county officials contribute to the reconstruction of this bridge? Why should the whole burden of this fall on the National Government?

Mr. HELVERING. Well, I will say there is provision made that in case any money is returnable to the State of Kansas the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to retain this amount from such moneys.

Mr. GARRETT. That is not in the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. When a bridge connects private land to an adjoining county that county or the State should contribute to the fund for the erection and maintenance, and the whole burden should not be imposed on the National Government.

Mr. HELVERING. I will say this bridge is used by the Government and troops at Fort Riley entirely in reaching Junction City, where all the railroad lines supplying Fort Riley are located except one, the Union Pacific, which runs through the military reservation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, the public uses it also; it is not used exclusively for military purposes.

Mr. HELVERING. Not altogether.

Mr. STAFFORD. I feel constrained to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 39 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to return to page 39 for the purpose of offering an amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 12, after the word "transports," insert the following: "And supplies required for sanitation, including mosquito destruction of temporary camps beyond the borders of the United States, where it may be necessary to protect the Army against the spread of yellow fever or other diseases."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16460, the Army appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 173, line 9, after the words "Joint Committee on the Library," to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$9,000," so as to make the clause read:

Botanic Garden: For general repairs to buildings, heating apparatus, painting, glazing, repairs to footwalks and roadways, general repairs to packing sheds, storerooms, and stables, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 173, after line 18, to insert:

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items and supplies, and for all necessary personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 173, after line 23, to insert:

For furniture for the Senate Office Building and for labor and material incident thereto and repairs thereof, window shades, awnings, carpets, glass for windows and bookcases, desk lamps, window ventilators, etc., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 174, to insert:

Toward the construction of the fireproof building for committee rooms and offices for the United States Senate, provided for in the sundry civil act approved April 28, 1904, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 174, after line 4, to insert:

For the Capitol: For repairs, improvements, and equipment for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, $17,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 176, after line 2, to insert:

Public buildings commission: With a view to ultimately providing permanent quarters for all the governmental activities in the District of Columbia in buildings owned by the Government, a commission is hereby created to be composed of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and one other member of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and one other member of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and one other member of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives and one other member of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, and the Supervising Architect or the Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury during any vacancy in said office.

The said commission shall elect one of its members as chairman of the commission and is authorized to employ such expert clerical or other services as it may deem necessary, and shall avail itself of the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts.

The said commission shall investigate and ascertain what public buildings are needed in the District of Columbia to provide suitable and adequate accommodations, with allowances for future expansion, for all of the offices, establishments, and public services of the Government in the District of Columbia, the proper location of such buildings, the probable cost thereof, and the probable cost of such new sites as they may deem it necessary for the Government to acquire.

Any vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments were made.

To defray the expenses of said commission, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and to be paid out on vouchers signed by the chairman of said commission.

The said commission shall make report to Congress not later than the 1st of January, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further committee amendments?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, on page 68, after line 6, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

For the addition of a kitchen and bathroom to the lodge in the Salisbury National Cemetery, to be erected under the supervision of the Secretary of War, $1,800.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, that may be somewhat irregular, but the necessity of the appropriation is so great that I have nothing to say against the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I offered an amendment yesterday and asked that it be printed, to be inserted at the end of line 6, on page 8, that I ask the Secretary to read, and which I hope the chairman of the committee will accept.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, at the end of line 6, after the numerals "$40,000," it is proposed to insert:

That the appropriation made for the erection of the public building at Durango, Colo., in the public building act approved March 4, 1913, be, and the same is hereby, increased by appropriating $50,000 additional, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the completion of a suitable building, including vaults, elevators, and approaches complete, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office, Federal court, and other Government offices.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am very sorry the Senator from Colorado has offered that amendment. He presented the amendment to the Committee on Appropriations; it was discussel elaborately, and the committee declined to add the item. It is simply a proposition to increase the limit of cost for a post-office building. If that is to be done in one instance, there could be strong arguments made for its being done in a hundred instances. This is where the limit has been fixed by law for a public building at $100,000, and the proposition now is to increase that limit of cost to $150,000. It seems to me that we can not afford to make this bill a public-building bill in that manner.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have not troubled the Appropriations Committee very much in this Congress nor at the last one, and I certainly should not now press this amendment if it were not, in my judgment, an increase which is absolutely required.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will excuse me a moment so that he may have an opportunity to explain the amendment, I desire to say that there is no estimate for the appropriation. All the committee knew about it was the statement of the Senator from Colorado. It has not been estimated for by the department.

Mr. THOMAS. I am coming to that, Mr. President, and I think I can convince the Senator that he is mistaken. It was provided in 1910 by the bill which was that year reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that a site for a public building should be obtained at Durango for the sum of $10,000. The public buildings and grounds bill for 1913 provided for the erection of a post office at Durango at a cost not exceeding $100,000.

The city of Durango is the metropolis of a region of country as large as the State of Ohio. It is not a very large city at present, but it is the most important point in the southwestern part of the State. It is the metropolis and the distributing center for an enormous region of country and for about 200,000 people. It is the headquarters of a Government land office. A division of the Bureau of Forestry is located at Durango. It is also one of the Signal Service points.

By the act of June 16, 1916, a law which has just been enacted, provision is made for a term of the United States court to be held at Durango. That, of course, necessitates the increase of the size of the building, so that it can be made to accommodate this added function.

In conjunction with the bill providing for this term of court, a bill passed the House, which was promptly reported out, upon an estimate made by the Treasury Department and submitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for an added $50,000 to the appropriation, which also changed the building from a post-office building to a general public building. That bill has passed the Senate and is now in the other House. It has therefore been not only reported and placed upon the calendar, but it has received the favorable consideration of this body.

I assumed, and I had a right to assume, because of the precedents which the Committee on Appropriations have hitherto established, that this process was all that was necessary to secure its favorable consideration by the Committee on Appropriations, or at least to secure its consideration, even though its action might be adverse; but in view of the position taken by the Committee on Appropriations on Sunday last, when I appeared before it, I immediately made application to the Treasury Department for an estimate. That estimate was secured at once and forwarded to the committee under date of June 26, 1916, and I will read the letter to the Senate. It is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and reads as follows:

Your attention is respectfully invited to the proposed Federal building at Durango, Colo. A site for this building at a limit of cost of $10,000 was authorized in the act of June 25, 1910, and the construction of the building at a limit of cost of $100,000 in the act of March 4, 1913. This legislation provides for the construction of a post office only.

On June 12, 1916, an act (Public, No. 91) was approved by the President amending the laws relating to the judiciary and providing for the holding of terms of court at Durango. Said act further provides, "That the Secretary of the Treasury, in constructing the public buildings heretofore authorized to be constructed at the cities of Grand Junction and Durango, be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to provide accommodations in each of said buildings for post office, United States court, and other governmental offices, and the existing authorizations for said buildings be, and same are hereby, respectively amended accordingly."

and the existing authorizations for said buildings be, and the same are hereby, respectively amended accordingly.

I think the Senator from Virginia will concede that the amendment is not subject to the objection that no estimate has been submitted concerning it—

While the legislation also provides that the unexpended balances of appropriations for the construction of these buildings are made available for the purpose stated, the original limit of cost fixed, viz, $100,000, is not sufficient to allow the construction of a building at Durango which will provide accommodations for the courts. It is therefore recommended that the limit of cost for said building be increased in the sum of $50,000.

Your attention is also invited to the fact that the sundry civil bill recently passed by the House of Representatives contains an item of $40,000 for the continuation of the construction of the building at Durango, Colo. It is not believed that this amount will furnish sufficient funds to carry on the work until Congress will have an opportunity to make further appropriation, and it is therefore recommended that when this bill receives consideration in the Senate the amount appropriated therein for the Durango building be increased to $60,000.

Respectfully,

BYRON R. NEWTON,
Acting Secretary.

Now, Mr. President, while it may be irregular—and, of course, I shall not contend that it is not in view of the positive assertion of the chairman of the committee—it is nevertheless not unusual, as I am assured by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, which assurance is confirmed by my own experience, to make these increases in appropriation bills. So that I am not asking anything unusual, and nothing unprecedented. I would not ask it at all if it were not for the exigency which is presented by virtue of the legislation to which I have called attention.

Mr. President, in 1914, when an appropriation bill was reported to the Senate and under consideration on the 18th day of July, 1914, an amendment was offered, and I think it was accepted—at least it was not objected to by the chairman of the committee—

On page 26, after line 16, to insert:

To erect at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md., under the direction of the Secretary of War a monument—

And so forth, for which the sum of $75,000 was appropriated.

About the same time, and I think to the same bill, an amendment was offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] for an appropriation—if my memory serves me aright—of considerably more than $100,000 to be expended in ceremonies appropriate to the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the writing of the National Anthem by Francis Scott Key. I raised a point of order against these appropriations, on which occasion the Senator from Maryland said:

Mr. President, I wish to say that I introduced a bill in the Senate appropriating this sum of money some little while back, and that bill has been reported to the Senate, and is on the calendar to-day.

The bill for this increase in the limit of the cost of the building at Durango was not only reported and placed upon the calendar but was taken up and passed by the Senate.

The Senator from Maryland then goes on to express the hope that there will be no opposition to the item, and he delivered a speech descriptive of the occasion which it was designed to commemorate, and again referred to his action in introducing and having reported to the Senate a bill carrying the amount desired, which was upon the calendar. I then asked the Senator when the bill was reported. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 18, 1914, page 12316, and following:

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It was reported yesterday. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not only not object to the amendment but will vote for it. I think it is entirely appropriate, and it should be adopted.

The point of order was then overruled, the question having been submitted to the Senate by the Presiding Officer. I quote further from the RECORD:

Mr. THOMAS. One moment. I did not understand the question as it was put to the Senate, and I do not think that some other Senators did. I certainly did not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will restate the question submitted to the Senate. Is the amendment proposed by the committee in order?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I submit respectfully that the question has been put and the amendment has been sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Chair does not care to have any misunderstanding of his position.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the question be put again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be put again. Is the amendment of the committee in order? [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

A division was asked for, and the ruling of the Chair was sustained, and the appropriation was made.

Now, Mr. President, when it is in order to appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars for the purpose of celebrating historic occasions for which no estimate has been made, but which is justified upon the ground that a specific bill providing for it has been introduced and has been reported to the Senate and is upon the calendar, then, a fortiori, is an application for $50,000 to erect a public building for purposes which are essential and necessary not only in order but, in view of the fact that the specific bill has been passed and followed by an estimate, it is not too late, although dated yesterday, the amendment should be granted.

Mr. President, this building has been in contemplation since 1913, but has been compelled to take its place in the series of buildings provided for. The bids for the new structure were about to be opened at the time of the enactment of the law of June 12, 1916, devoting it to additional purposes. The people have waited a very long time for that building. To erect it now with the present appropriation would be to put up a structure that is inadequate for all the purposes provided for by the Government, and, as a consequence, we should not be relegated to the uncertain alternative of relying upon the specific bill to which I have called attention.

I am informed—unofficially, of course, but I think the information is reliable—that it would be practically impossible to secure the passage by the House of the bill to which I refer. If that were possible, I would not be here taking up the time of the Senate or trespassing in any manner upon the prerogatives of the committee; but, under the circumstances, I hope the Senate will sustain this amendment and incorporate the amount asked for in the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say a few words in relation to the amendment proposed by my colleague. The difficulty with the situation is now that the appropriation for a $100,000 building has been made, the plans have been drawn, the contract has been let, and the building is about to be constructed for the purposes of a post office only. On the 12th of June of this year there was passed an act providing that there shall be a Federal court held in the city of Durango; and if the building there shall be completed as at present authorized, there will be no court room. It seems to me that it is absurd to go on with that building and say that it shall be constructed as a post-office building only when at this session authorization has been given for the holding of court there. At this very time, when the $40,000, the amount appropriated by this bill, is to be applied, it seems to me the plans should be changed so as to make the building accommodate all the departments of the Government that need to be housed there.

I desire to read a section from the bill which was passed on the 12th day of June of this year:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, in constructing the public buildings heretofore authorized to be constructed at the cities of Grand Junction and Durango—

For the building at Grand Junction the appropriation is sufficient. The changes in the building there can be made without the passage of any additional law upon the subject by Congress—be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to provide accommodations in each of said buildings for post office, United States court, and other governmental offices, and the existing authorizations for said buildings be, and the same are hereby, respectively amended accordingly; and the unexpended balance of all appropriations heretofore made for the construction of said buildings, and all appropriations which may be provided in any pending legislation, or that hereafter may be made for the construction of said buildings, are hereby made available for the purpose stated in this paragraph.

There is an absolute authorization for this building and a contemplation that it is necessary in the case of Durango that there should be an additional appropriation in order to provide a court room. It seems to me it is absolutely absurd to say that we will not change this, but that we will go on and have the building constructed for a post office only, when the term of court has been prescribed for that city and when a court room is absolutely necessary and essential. For that reason it seems to me urgent. It can hardly be that any other instance is like this in any particular, and therefore there is no danger that this bill is going to be opened for amendments of that character.

In this particular instance, where the authorization has been made for the Secretary of the Treasury to provide accommodations, the estimate has been made that it is necessary to increase that amount by $50,000. The court can not be held there without accommodations. They do not want to have to rent buildings in order to do it; and it seems to me that now is the time, so that the changes can be made at the minimum cost to the Government. For that reason, it seems to me, that this amendment which is offered by my colleague should be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, turning to page 73, under "Yellowstone National Park," I move to strike out "$135,000" and to insert "$152,500," which is the estimate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, in line 24, it is proposed to strike out "$135,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$152,500," so as to read:

Yellowstone National Park: For maintenance and repair of improvements, $152,500—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Further, on line 25 of the same page, where "$7,500" occurs, I move to make it "$15,000." That is not an addition, but it is a different division of the fund.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 25, page 73, it is proposed to strike out "$7,500" and in lieu thereof to insert "$15,000," so as to read:

Including not to exceed $15,000 for maintenance of the road in the forest reserve leading out of the park from the east boundary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee, on page 168, in the general appropriation of $2,450,000 for the Immigration Service the estimate is $200,000 more, and I think the estimated amount ought to be granted. The last year or two they have been furloughing these employees of the Immigration Service, causing great hardship to them in that way—not dismissing them, but putting them on furlough without pay.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I have no information on the subject, except that there was an estimate $200,000 bigger than the amount the House put in. I have no objection to his amendment, of course with the understanding that it will have a thorough investigation, and if it appears to be wrong I may not be able to hold it in the bill. I will endeavor to do so, however, after careful investigation.

Mr. LODGE. I am very much obliged to the Senator. I only wanted to call attention to the fact that these men have been furloughed, and now the immigration is again increasing, and I think the committee of conference ought to consider the matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not object to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 168, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "$2,450,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,650,000."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether there is any need, under the present greatly reduced immigration, for such large expenditures?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Immigration Service yields the Government a large surplus over what is appropriated. Under the old law the whole immigration fund was segregated, and then Congress passed a law turning in the balance of two or three millions, and it yields a great deal more. This amount is insufficient to employ these furloughed men. They were furloughed owing to the reduction in the number of immigrants caused by the war. The immigration is now increasing again, and, of course, more men are needed; and to keep the service down in this way and force these men on furloughs not only is a hardship on those men, but it impairs the service. They need more men.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have some figures as to how much the immigration is increasing. My information is that the immigration at the present time is only a fraction of what it was.

Mr. LODGE. It went down very low the first year of the war. It has begun to rise again.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator give any figures?

Mr. LODGE. I can not give the exact figures; but the department has estimated for $200,000 more, because the service has been positively crippled by these furloughs, even with the reduced immigration, and they ought to have additional money.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am a little skeptical of that, considering the fact that the House made the reduction after investigation. I know that the immigration at the present time is only a fraction of what it has been.

Mr. LODGE. I am aware of that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not believe in keeping men upon the pay roll, simply because there is a revenue larger than the expenditures, if they are not needed.

Mr. LODGE. I am not asking anything of that absurd kind. I am asking that the men who are furloughed without pay be employed when there is work to do, and the work should not be crippled.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to remark, in answer to the Senator from Nebraska, that by reason of furloughing men from the Immigration Service, and by reason of inadequate equipment in the matter of launches and boats, the Immigration Service is in such condition on the northwest border of the United States—the border between British Columbia and the State of Washington—that it might be truthfully described as being paralyzed and breaking down.

When the war broke out there were a great number of men in Canada that desired to come to the United States in order to avoid the obligations imposed on citizens of Canada by the war. We have a border there that is covered by forests, and a great part of it is an intricate labyrinth of waterways; and instead of increasing the force of the Immigration Service it was reduced, and the consequence was that a very large number of illegal immigrants have come into the United States by reason of the inadequate enforcement of our laws. In addition to that, there is a constant stream of Chinamen coming into the United States illegally across that border by reason of the inefficiency of the Immigration Service.

I am speaking about this matter advisedly. I have investigated it. I have called upon men to make reports in whose judgment I have confidence, and I have prepared a detailed statement describing the situation which I have just stated in very brief form. I am very hopeful that there will be no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOLLIS. In answer to what the Senator from Nebraska has said, I have inquired, and I find it is true that the number of immigrants has largely decreased. I can not give the percentages. It is also true, however, that the stations have to be maintained whether there are 10,000 men coming through a station or 1,000. They need as many men to perform the functions. Then in this respect the labor was largely increased, and especially the expense, on account of the war. Many defectives can not be returned to the countries from which they originally came, and they have to be looked after and taken care of. That is a very serious item, and until the war is over, and they can be sent back to the parent countries that will be a very large item. I have talked with the immigration officers, and I am satisfied that this amendment should be allowed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have one other amendment that I should like to offer. On page 190 I want to offer the amendment submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in the Book of Estimates:

Claims for property damaged or destroyed by fire in the Malambo district in the city of Panama on January 12, 1906, in the amounts recommended by the joint land commission, as enumerated on page 22 of Senate Document No. 148, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $53,800.

That is estimated for and sent in by the Secretary of the Treasury. The payment of those claims was recommended by the Foreign Relations Committee, recommended by the Secretary of War, and recommended by Col. Goethals. These buildings were destroyed by the operations of the United States, and, as Col. Goethals says in his letter, not for sanitary purposes; and they ought to be paid for.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will ask the Senator if he does not think this matter ought to go to the Committee on Claims. There is nothing before the Committee on Appropriations with respect to it.

Mr. LODGE. It is before the committee in the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was estimated for?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. Not only that, but it has been twice placed on the general deficiency bill by the unanimous vote of the Senate, and in the last Congress the Senate passed a bill providing for the payment of these claims.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that if he puts it on—he knows the urgency behind this bill, and the necessity for speedy action—it will be impossible to make as persistent an effort to keep the item on as we could make on the deficiency bill.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We must complete this bill as a law before the 1st of July. I will not object to it, but I think it will stand mighty little chance in conference, and if you put it on the deficiency bill it will stand a much better chance. That is my opinion about it.

Mr. LODGE. I took the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury that it be placed on this bill. It was referred to the subcommittee in charge of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not going to object to its going on this bill, though I think it will have a mighty short tenure. This bill must pass by the 1st of July, and the Senator knows the difficulties before us.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that. Let it go on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. It is also proposed to change the total in line 18 to agree with the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that will be done.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 26 on page 122.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 122, at the end of line 26, it is proposed to insert:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among natives of Alaska, and of assisting them in the establishment of small industrial enterprises, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, which sum may be used for the erection and repair of buildings, purchase and repair of machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable the natives of Alaska to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1926, and any such sums so reimbursed are hereby reappropriated and made available for expenditure, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, prior to June 30, 1926, for the purposes above indicated. The Secretary of the Interior shall annually submit to Congress on the first Monday in December a detailed report of all moneys received and expended hereunder for the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among natives of Alaska.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this is estimated for in the Book of Estimates, and for that reason, unless objection is made, I am unwilling to take up the time of the Senate in debating it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Is there any objection to the amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. My attention was diverted, so I shall be obliged if the Senator will briefly state what he proposes to do. There were several Senators talking to me.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. statement was, Mr. President, that this has been estimated for in the Book of Estimates; and in view of that fact, unless particular objection is made, I am unwilling to take up the time of the Senate in discussing the merits of the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will ask the Senator what is the purpose of the appropriation? I understand it is $25,000.

Mr. NELSON. It is for the purpose of relieving what is known as the Father Duncan Colony of Indians on the Annette Islands in Alaska. It is in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. On the judgment of the Senator from Minnesota I will make no objection to it, though, of course, we will have to investigate it when we get it into conference. I am entirely without information on the subject. I make no objection to it. It is estimated for, and I make no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. In connection with the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, I wish to put some facts into the RECORD, in order that the conferees may have them before them in the consideration of the item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

In August, 1887, William Duncan, an independent missionary, working among the Tsimpsean Indians of British Columbia, brought to the Annette Islands, in the southeastern part of Alaska, a colony of between 800 and 1,000 of these Indians from the old town of Metlakahtla, in British Columbia.

By act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1101), Congress set apart Annette Islands for the use and occupancy of these Indians, under such rules and regulations and subject to such restrictions as might be prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of the Interior.

Under the leadership of Mr. Duncan, this colony made rapid progress. The heads of families of the colony built good homes on lots set apart for them, a large church house was built, a schoolhouse, and other public buildings. A salmon cannery and a sawmill were established, first through the cooperation of Mr. Duncan, the Indians, and philanthropic persons in the United States. Later Mr. Duncan bought the interests of these persons and of the natives and ran the cannery and the sawmill as his personal property and employed native labor.

In recent years Mr. Duncan, who is now 84 years old, has lost his control over the Indians, and the cannery and sawmill have not been operated within the last four years. Since these industries closed the Indians have no means of making a living on the island and have had to go away for employment. The school had also been closed. Four years ago the Government established in the village of Metlakahtla a school, which it now maintains with five teachers. In order to give the Metlakahtlans an opportunity for self-support on the island, the Secretary of the Interior decided last winter to put the cannery and the sawmill again in operation. To this end the cannery building was leased for a term of five years, beginning April 1, 1916, to P. E. Harris, a cannery operator of Seattle, Wash., on terms which it was estimated would produce an annual income of $7,500 for the village and at the same time give employment to a large percentage of the inhabitants.

On May 17, while necessary repairs on the building were being made by the lessee and while he was awaiting the arrival of new machinery, the cannery building was completely destroyed by fire, as were also the warehouse and a portion of the wharf. Because of this loss by fire the lease is rendered ineffective. The Secretary is unable to require the lessee to fulfill its terms.

The natives are, therefore, again without any means of support on the island, nor is there any way of providing for such support until the cannery can be replaced and the sawmill repaired. There is also pressing need for the repair of the pipe line which brings water from a mountain lake to the village, and without which there is no adequate supply of water either for drinking or for protection against fire.

It is therefore urged that the $25,000 recommended as a reimbursable fund for use in aiding the natives to establish industries (Book of Estimates, 1917, p. 953), but not allowed by the House, be appropriated with the understanding that its first use shall be for the rebuilding of the cannery and the repairing of the sawmill and the pipe line at Metlakahtla and for assisting the natives in the operation of these industries.

FACTS IN REGARD TO METLAKAHTLA AND THE IMMEDIATE NEED OF A REIMBURSABLE FUND.

(1) Until the close of the industries four years ago about 800 Indians lived on the island. Every family had a good home. Most of the houses had from four to eight rooms. There were many smaller industries dependent on the cannery and the sawmill.

(2) After the close of the industries many families moved away, and many of them have taken up permanent homes in places not so desirable as Metlakahtla would be if the industries were reestablished. All do leave the island for work in the summer except a few old men and women. When they leave they must carry their children with them. Last summer when fire occurred in the village only two Indians were on the island, and the village would have been destroyed but for the presence of two Government school-teachers and a young Indian who had come over from Ketchikan for the night. The nearest place at which employment can be had is 15 miles away. When the Indians leave the island they must abandon their houses and lose their value, as they can not be sold.

(3) After the Government school was established and there was hope for profitable employment on the island the Indians began to return, and there was an increase of approximately 100 in the population within a year.

(4) The burning of the cannery has almost produced a state of despair among the Indians. The island will be rapidly deserted if the cannery is not rebuilt.

(5) With the $25,000 asked for as a reimbursable fund, the cannery can be rebuilt and equipped, the sawmill repaired to produce lumber for the cannery, and the pipe line repaired to bring water for the use of the village, the cannery, and the sawmill.

(6) The operation of the cannery and the sawmill will enable the Indians to remain at home during the summer, cultivate their gardens, conduct cooperative stores, and maintain other small industries.

(7) The operation of the cannery, mill, and other industries will enable the village to repay to the reimbursable fund at least $5,000 a year, which can be used to assist other native villages in establishing small industries. It will also provide, in addition to this, a small income for much-needed improvements in the village.

THE HYDABURG COLONY.

By Executive order, June 19, 1912, a tract of approximately 12 square miles on the west coast of Prince of Wales Island, in southeastern Alaska, was reserved for the use of a colony of natives who had migrated thither from the villages of Klinquan and Howkan and founded a settlement, which they named Hydaburg. Under the supervision of the teacher of the United States public school, the Hydaburg Trading Co. was organized to transact the mercantile business of the settlement and the Hydaburg Lumber Co. to operate a sawmill. The Hydaburg people have turned a dense forest into a thriving little town, with a busy wharf, a sawmill that turns them out good lumber at a cost of $10 a thousand; neat, single-family homes instead of the communal houses in which they lived in their old villages; a long, boarded street, of which they are proud as the finest in Alaska; and a cooperative store, which the first year made a clear profit of 125 per cent, paying a cash dividend of 50 per cent and adding 75 per cent to the capital stock.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to go at the foot of page 67, and I call the attention of the chairman of the committee, in charge of the bill, to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the foot of page 67, it is proposed to insert:

That the internal-revenue taxes imposed by the Philippine Legislature under the law enacted by that body on December 21, 1915, as amended by the law enacted by that body on February 4, 1916, and the tonnage tax on vessels engaged in foreign trade enacted by that body on February 4, 1916, are hereby legalized and ratified; and the collection of all such taxes heretofore or hereafter is hereby legalized, ratified, and confirmed as fully, to all intents and purposes, as if the same had by prior act of Congress been specifically authorized and directed.

Vessels owned by citizens of the Philippine Islands and documented as such by the government of said islands shall hereafter be exempt in ports of the United States from payment of tonnage taxes and light dues; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, upon certification by the Commissioner of Navigation, to refund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, tonnage taxes and light dues imposed upon vessels owned and documented as aforesaid entering ports of the United States since August 1, 1914: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed as exempting said vessels from any taxes or dues imposed by the government of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think that amendment ought to be adopted. I have had some correspondence with the Secretary of War. It simply validates the Philippine legislation. I asked the Senator from Nebraska, the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines to investigate it and he has done so. I am satisfied that the amendment offered by him should be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 108, line 2, strike out "$150,000" and insert the following:

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, of which $100,000 may be used to test the existence of artesian and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions by boring wells, one-half to be immediately available.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I wish to say that that has been estimated for in the general Book of Estimates and the amount was reduced. The latter clause which I have offered as an amendment to the section as it stands in the bill was not included in the act. Under the conditions as they exist in the semiarid region—and it is particularly true in some portions of my own State—many people have taken up homesteads in those semiarid regions and are compelled to haul water for domestic purposes sometimes 8 to 15 miles. The lands are productive, artesian water has been discovered in some sections of the State, but no individual homesteader can afford to bore an artesian well because the expense is very great. If, however, the Government itself would experiment in that region and bore wells and discover artesian water, as it has been discovered in some of these sections, then individuals would be able to act in cooperation with each other and bore these wells.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I recall that in the Agricultural appropriation bill, I think it was the last one, an appropriation was made for this identical purpose, an appropriation, I think, of $100,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows what experiments were made under that appropriation. I am very certain that the appropriation was made.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that I introduced that very amendment and it was referred to the Agricultural Committee as an amendment to the Agricultural bill, but it had nothing to do with boring for artesian water.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will yield, I think I can clear up the situation.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly. I am asking for information.

Mr. NORRIS. I introduced an amendment which was added to the Agricultural appropriation bill of which the amendment now offered by the Senator from Oregon is practically a copy. I intend to offer the same amendment the Senator has offered; I have it now on my desk, but I was unable to get recognition. It is the same amendment which was added to the Agricultural appropriation bill. It has been done twice. The last time the amendment was put on in the committee, the time before it was put on on the floor of the Senate, but in conference it was put out of the bill both times, so that it has never been in the law. The principal objection, I may say while I am on my feet, that was made to the item in the Agricultural bill was that it was not properly in that bill, but ought to be in the sundry civil bill, and that the Geological Survey ought to have charge instead of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator is, of course, more familiar with the outcome of it than I, but I know it passed.

Mr. NORRIS. It passed the Senate on two different occasions.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the reason why I made the inquiry.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Nebraska states, as I understand him, that it was practically eliminated from the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. NORRIS. It was.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I know the Senator from Nebraska has been very active in attempting to get some such legislation as this, and I have been very glad to cooperate with him. I will say to the Senator I did not know that he had introduced the amendment to the Agricultural bill this year, because I was prevented from attending the committee meetings on account of the Army reorganization bill.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I did not introduce it in the Agricultural bill this time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I though the Senator said he had done so.

Mr. NORRIS. I said I had it on my desk to offer it as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Objection has been made to the Agricultural Department taking charge of this work, that it has not the appliances and the equipment necessary to bore for artesian water, while the Geological Survey has all the appliances and can do it at very much less expense.

I know how urgent it is to get this bill disposed of, but I am going to read into the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter from the assessor of Lake County, Oreg. He has lived there for forty-odd years and his letter shows the condition of the settlers in that section of the State. I want to say, however, I am not asking for this increase to have it apply to one county in the State. It is of general application and should be extended and the experiments made at such points as the discretion of the department may suggest.

I will ask that the letter from A. J. Foster, assessor of Lake County, be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DECEMBER 21, 1915.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In compliance with the request which you made of me when you were in Lakeview, I am herewith inclosing the number of homestead and desert-land entries which have been made in this land district. These entries do not comprise the entire number of entries which have been made in this land district, but only include those which have been made in the arid portions thereof, which are designated on the map as "The Great Oregon Desert."

An examination of the records in the land office shows that there are 430 homestead entries and desert-land entries in this land district in Crook County, and that there are 1,300 homestead entries and desert-land entries in this land district in Lake County.

Most of this land, if irrigated, would be excellent alfalfa land.

There are a few artesian springs in this area, and this would almost positively indicate that artesian water could be secured at a minimum cost.

A Mr. Cyrus was traveling throughout Lake County, securing signatures to a petition requesting Congress to appropriate money for the purpose of having test wells bored in various parts of the county in an effort to locate artesian water. While I did not have the pleasure of meeting this man, being away on business at the time, I am in full accord with the work which he is doing, since I believe that if wells could be bored in various parts of this land district that artesian water would undoubtedly be secured in a majority of the instances. Almost without exception, where artesian water has been sought, it has been found. Summer Lake has produced several most excellent artesian wells, and in the Fort Rock and Christmas Lake Valleys wells have been obtained which give every indication of being artesian water if they were only cased or driven deeper. Cliff, which is east of Christmas Lake, has a few artesian springs. Wherever these artesian springs are found, artesian water is easily obtained.

It might be well to remind you that the information regarding local conditions on the desert has been obtained by myself during a period of residence in this country of about 40 years, during which time I have been tax assessor of Lake County for a period of 10 years, when my present term of office shall have expired, which will be in 1916.

Trusting that you will be able to materially assist us in securing appropriations for this exceedingly important reclamation work, I am,

Yours, very truly,

A. J. FOSTER.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In addition to that I have and will ask to have printed in the RECORD a petition from about 500 settlers in that section of the State asking for the relief that it is hoped this appropriation if allowed will give those people.

Mr. President, I have been through that section of the country, and I know whereof I speak when I say that men are compelled in some sections of the State to haul water to their homes all the way from 8 to 15 miles. It means a great deal of suffering. The lands are fertile; and if artesian water can be placed upon them, as it is firmly believed it can, they will be productive.

I ask to have the petition, without the names, because the list is long, printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The petition referred to is as follows:

A petition.

To the honorable PRESIDENT AND
CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, citizens of Lake County, Oreg., would respectfully represent:

First. That northern Lake County is divided into four distinct basins or saucers, designated, in the order of their size, as the Christmas Lake Valley, the Fort Rock Valley, the Silver Lake Valley, and the Summer Lake Valley.

Second. That we believe that in each of these valleys artesian water may be obtained.

Third. That it has already been demonstrated that artesian water can be obtained in Summer Lake Valley.

Fourth. That with water these fertile valleys would become very productive, whereas without water the settlers are unable to produce remunerative crops, and in most cases are compelled to leave their lands as soon as title is obtained, while if it were demonstrated that water can be obtained at reasonable cost they would remain and cultivate the soil, thus creating a prosperous community.

Fifth. That from geological reports it appears that Christmas Lake Valley is the deeper basin of those mentioned, and if artesian water can be obtained there it is reasonable to believe that it may be obtained in each of the other basins.

Sixth. That the settlers in these valleys are mostly poor men, unable to bear the expense of putting down an experimental well. Therefore your petitioners would earnestly pray that you appropriate the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of drilling an experimental well in one of these basins, said work to be done under the supervision of the State water board or Government engineers.

That you will grant our request, your petitioners, as in duty bound, ever pray.

VERIFICATION OF COPY OF PETITION AND SIGNATURES.

STATE OF OREGON,
County of Clatsop, ss:

I, A. R. Cyrus, being first duly sworn, depose and say that the within and foregoing copy of a petition to Congress, together with the names attached thereto, is a full, true, and correct copy of the original petition circulated by me, and the copy of the names therein contained is a true copy of the names attached to the original petition, and that the signatures attached to the original petition are genuine.

A. R. CYRUS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2d day of November, 1915.
[SEAL.] JAS. M. WAGGENER,
Notary Public for the State of Oregon.

(My commission expires Mar. 1, 1917.)

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I hope the chairman of the committee will not object to the amendment, in view of the fact that estimates have been made and it is recommended by the department.

Mr. NORRIS. I might say to the chairman of the committee, if the Senator will permit me, that this is the same amendment I submitted to the chairman of the committee some time ago, and I understand he has no objection to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am making no objection to it. The Senate can dispose of it without any comment from me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. I propose the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 12, on page 53, insert:

Readjustment of National Zoological Park boundaries: For acquiring, in accordance with the provisions of the sundry civil act approved June 23, 1913; for the condemnation of land for an addition to the National Zoological Park, all the lots, pieces, or parcels of land, other than the one therein excepted, that lie between the present western boundary of the National Zoological Park and Connecticut Avenue, from Cathedral Avenue to Klingle Road, $89,441.43, together with the sum of $107,200 appropriated for this purpose by the sundry civil act approved June 23, 1913, which is hereby reappropriated, both sums to be available until used, and said land, when acquired, together with the included highways, to be added to and become a part of the National Zoological Park; in all, $196,641.43.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I offer the following amendment.

That there is hereby appropriated out of said sum the sum of $300 to reimburse the Moeur-Pafford Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Arizona, for damages sustained by reason of the inability, under existing law, of the United States to carry out a certain agreement between said company and the project manager in connection with a contract dated November 25, 1911, between said company and the project manager of the Reclamation Service, Salt River project, Arizona, approved by the Director of the Reclamation Service on December 20, 1911.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I merely wish to refer to the report of the committee of the House on this particular bill in favor of the bill reported to the House. It asks for a mere change of the appropriation for the Irrigation Service. Three hundred dollars is the amount to be paid this company for the purchase of a certain tract of land for a right of way for the irrigation ditches of the Reclamation Service. I have the report of the House committee in my hand, but I will not detain the Senate by reading it, but ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Phoenix, Ariz., March 26, 1912.

MOEUR-PAFFORD CO.
(Care of W. A. Moeur, Tempe, Ariz.).

DEAR SIR: In connection with the construction of the western canal across your property in section 10, it is understood that the Reclamation Service will sink a well to water level in the south part of your tract, and erect a windmill of some standard make, with 10-foot wheel, about 40 feet in height, together with a 5,000-gallon tank.

Mr. Reed has instructions to start work in this matter as soon as you can make some arrangements to meet him and indicate where you would like to have this work done.

Very truly, yours, C. H. FITCH, Project Manager.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER,
Washington, September 29, 1914.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: On June 26, 1914, you submitted to this office a contract with the Moeur-Pafford Co., dated November 25, 1911, and approved by the Director of the Reclamation Service on December 20, 1911, for the purchase of 2.26 acres of land for a canal right of way for use in connection with a reclamation project in Arizona, and asked whether the reclamation fund might be used for the sinking of a well and the erection of a tank and windmill for that company or other land belonging to it as a part of the consideration for the above purchase.

On July 3, 1914, you were advised that as the contract contained no reference to any well, tank, or windmill, such use of the reclamation fund was unauthorized, but that whether proper steps might be taken to correct a mutual mistake, if there was one, was a question not then considered. (70 MS. Comp. Dec., 15.)

On September 21, 1914, you submitted a draft of a praper which it is proposed to execute as a contract with the Moeur-Pafford Co., for the purpose of curing a mutual mistake in the omission from the contract of November 25, 1911, of an undertaking on the part of the Government to construct said well, tank, and windmill, and ask whether such a contract may properly be entered into.

From an examination of the accompanying correspondence it is concluded that the omission from the written contract of November 25, 1911, of any reference to the construction of a well, tank, or windmill, by the United States for the owners, as a part of the consideration for the land, was intentional at least on the part of the officer executing the contract on behalf of the United States, and probably of both parties, and that the contract was drawn just as they meant that it should be, the owner relying on an unauthorized assurance by the local officers of the Reclamation Service that these improvements on his property would be made for him by them without the incorporation in the contract of any provision therefor.

That this conclusion is correct is evidenced by the statement in the draft of the paper you now submit that said omission was due to the belief of both the officer executing the contract on behalf of the United States and of the company "that the sinking of the well, the construction of the tank, and the erection of the windmill could properly and lawfully be done without specific provision being made therefor in the said contract of sale."

Had the contract, when executed by such parties, been a binding one, without approval, such an intentional omission would not have constituted a mutual mistake. (See United States v. Milliken Imprinting Co., 202 U. S., 168, 177; Shenandoah Valley R. R. Co. v. Dunlop and wife, 86 Va., 346, 351; Meade v. N. & W. R. R. Co., 89 Va., 296.)

But it appears that the contract could not, by its terms, have become binding upon the United States until its approval by the Director of the Reclamation Service, that at the time of his approval of it he was unaware of any agreement by the local officers with the owner for the making of such improvements on his property, and that upon his subsequent discovery of the proposed expenditure of money for the purpose he immediately required an explanation and did not approve of the transaction. The omission of such a provision from the contract could not therefore have been a mistake on the part of the United States and necessarily could not have been a mutual mistake of the parties.

You are therefore advised that there is no apparent legal basis for the execution of the paper submitted.

The inclosures are returned.

Respectfully, GEO. E. DOWNEY, Comptroller.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I offer the following amendment, and I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter accompanying it from Secretary Redfield explaining why it was not in the estimate.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 26, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Since the estimates for appropriations for the next fiscal year were submitted by the department, we have had a season's experience at the Orangeburg, S. C., hatchery and we are now in better position than we were last fall to state the further needs of this station.

You will recall that the original appropriation for the Orangeburg hatchery was $25,000, and that an additional appropriation of $10,000 was subsequently made, the total amount being $15,000 less than the department regards as essential for the establishment and completion of a modern fish hatchery.

It is now too late to take this matter up with the House of Representatives, the sundry civil bill having been completed and reported to the House; but I am bringing the matter to your attention in the belief that you will use your own judgment as to the advisability of making an effort to secure, through the Senate, the small appropriation needed for the completion of this establishment. An inspection of the station made by the Chief of the Division of Fish Culture during the present month reveals the fact that there can now be used to advantage the sum of $6,000 which will place the station in the way of realizing the high expectations which we entertain regarding it. If, however, you deem it inadvisable to take the matter up now, the department will be pleased to include the item in the estimates to be submitted next fall. A draft of the proposed item is inclosed.

I understand that the Commissioner of Fisheries has already acquainted you with the successful outlook for the Orangeburg station for the present season. I may state, by way of supplement, that plants of fingerling black bass made from that station up to date number over 135,000, and it is estimated that 30,000 bass and 30,000 bream remain on hand available for distribution. This is regarded as a very good showing for a new station. Up to this time the principal food fish propagated at the station has been the large-mouth black bass, but with additional pond facilities it is intended to extensively propagate sunfish and rock bass, and possibly crappie or strawberry bass.

Thanking you for your continued interest in this and other phases of the work of the department, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 160, after line 9, insert the following:

For completion of the fish hatchery at Orangeburg, S. C., including construction of additional ponds, construction of fish-culturist's cottage, and improvement of grounds, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have a similar amendment for a fish-cultural station in Texas, which I present for consideration. I wish to say to the chairman of the committee that the estimate of this appropriation is on its way now. It has not yet been received.

The SECRETARY. On page 161, at the end of line 5, insert:

Fish-cultural station, San Marcos, Tex.: For the purchase of land, construction of buildings and ponds, improvement of grounds, and the purchase and repair of equipment, to be available until expended, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 172, after line 10, insert:

To pay Mrs. J. Laura Shively, widow of Hon. Benjamin F. Shively, late a Senator from the State of Indiana, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. I offer another amendment. On page 78, line 14, I move to amend section 1 of the pending bill by striking out the words "eighteen hundred and eighty-six," in lines 14 and 15, on page 78, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "nineteen hundred and fifteen."

I will state that the date I ask to have stricken out went into the bill through an oversight, and the same error occurred in the District of Columbia appropriation bill at the last session. In referring to the quality of asphalt to be used in the construction of streets the provision is that the quality shall be equal to the best made in the District of Columbia prior to July, 1886, a date at which the quality of asphalt was very poor.

I might add that the asphalt used at that time would not be used at all at this time. So the amendment simply strikes out the "1886" and inserts "1915," so that the asphalt used shall be of a quality equal to the best used prior to July 1 of last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 22, the item reads:

Kendallville, Ind., post office: For continuation, $500.

It is proposed to insert a semicolon and the words "for the purchase of a site for building, $15,000."

Mr. KERN. There has been authorization for the building there some time ago and the building is sadly needed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. I offer some amendments in regard to the provision for the Federal Trade Commission, on page 56. I am aware that there is some unfriendliness to the Federal Trade Commission in the Senate. The commission was established after a hard fight and a substantial number of Senators were opposed to it. But the commission was established, and it has begun its work and it has done splendid work so far. It ought not to be cramped now. The friends of the commission hoped to have an opportunity to appear before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, but by turning to the first page of the bill we read that the bill was transmitted to the Senate June 26, and that it was reported to the Senate June 26. So it is evident that there could have been very little chance for a hearing.

I am not intending to offer amendments that will increase the aggregate of the appropriations made for the Federal Trade Commission. I am going to ask that the items be readjusted. The commission submitted estimates for the coming year, and those estimates were cut, I believe, $185,000 in the House. The commission will be cramped in its work, but in the way the appropriations are now specifically divided they are unnecessarily cramped.

The first amendment that I offer is on page 56, line 18, to strike out "$1,200" and insert in place thereof "$1,800." It is obvious to any Senator——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think that amendment ought to be made, and I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. On the same line——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before these amendments are passed on, I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to say that it is not his purpose to increase the appropriation.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; I shall move in another place to reduce them so that the aggregate will not be any larger than is now provided in the bill.

Mr. BORAH. What the Senator is seeking to do is to readjust the amount which has been provided for.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is it exactly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 18, page 56, after the semicolon, insert:

Chief clerk, $2,500.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is a man who was in the old Bureau of Corporations.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to that amendment. There ought to be a chief clerk at $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. On the same page, line 23, I move to strike out the figures "$151,080" and insert "$156,580," so that the footing will be correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. On page 57, line 8, I move to reduce the figures "$250,000" to "$244,500," to take care of the increases made by the amendment already agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. On page 57, line 8, there is a provision stating that no salary shall be paid hereafter exceeding the rate of $5,000 per annum. The work of the Federal Trade Commission has to do involves very intricate and novel legal questions. The commissioners themselves are paid $10,000 each, but they are administrative officers and their time is not free to handle legal questions even if they were qualified. Anyone who has had anything to do with recent trust legislation knows that the corporations interested will have the very best legal talent that money can get. It is not unusual for them to pay their lawyers $40,000 and $50,000 a year. It is not right for the Government in protecting the interests of the people to be limited to lawyers at $5,000. It is not respectable for this Government to be represented by $5,000-a-year men when $50,000 lawyers are to oppose them. Therefore, without increasing the total of the appropriation, I ask to have that limit raised to $7,500 per annum. So, on page 57, line 8, I move to strike out the figures "$5,000" and to insert the figures "$7,500."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 8, it is moved to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$7,500."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, this is a matter on which I hesitate to make any comment, but the limit of $5,000 was deliberately put in by the committee, and I know of no great litigation that the Trade Commission will have to conduct. I asked one of the members of that commission who came to see me if they had had any big litigation, and he replied that they never had had, but might have hereafter. The governor of my State gets an annual salary of $5,000; the judges of our supreme court of appeals get $5,000; the attorney general of the State gets $3,500, and I believe that competent counsel to do such legal work as the Trade Commision will have to do can be had at $5,000 per annum. In my judgment, the Senate ought not to give authority for the increase asked for, but, of course, it is for the Senate to determine.

The Trade Commission is going along at a very rapid pace. I am not contemplating any criticism of its work, but I do desire to bring to the attention of the Senate the great extravagance which is being indulged in. I am told that 250 people are employed by the Trade Commission. That may be necessary, but I confess it will take a bigger imagination than I have to conceive that the Trade Commission needs 250 men to do its work, and the appropriation for that commission in this bill is close to a half million dollars.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that it is fair to say, however, that a number of those clerks—probably a large majority of them—were carried over into that department by the action of Congress transferring the Bureau of Corporations to the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Of course the work of the Corporation Bureau is now within their jurisdiction.

Mr. GALLINGER. But still they are employed by the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I simply want to call attention to the fact that the activities of this Government are expanding and enlarging and that expenses are increasing at an alarming pace. I do not think this increase ought to be made; but it is for the Senate to determine. If they wish to give a bigger salary, it will be agreeble to me; but I do not think it ought to be given.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, before the Senator from Virginia takes his seat, I desire to ask him a question. Is the limitation of $5,000 per annum contained in the present law?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is. It was put in there, as I recollect, when the first appropriation was made for this commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Has there been any complaint on the part of any member of the commission that that limitation was unduly hampering them?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. One of those commissioners told me that they might have big litigation at any time. I asked him if they had had any such litigation, and he said they had not, but that they were liable to have it at any time, and they wanted a higher-priced lawyer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Nothing, however, has occurred thus far, so far as the Senator from Virginia knows, which makes it necessary to pay anybody more than $5,000 per annum?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Nothing of that character is known to me.

Mr. HOLLIS. If it be true that the Federal Trade Commission has a very large number of clerks, that objection, if it is one, will be obviated to a large degree by adopting the amendment which I have offered, because if counsel is paid more than $5,000 a year, some one else will be cut off the pay roll. So that objection is not valid.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator from New Hampshire will excuse me one moment, I desire to state that I said that this commission had 250 employees. My clerk corrects me by informing me that the number is 240, to be absolutely accurate.

Mr. HOLLIS. That number will be less if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that he is wrong about that. The salaries of the clerks of that commission are provided for in another bill, known as the legislative appropriation bill, which has already passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is in addition to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is in addition to this.

Mr. KERN. It does not increase the total of the appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. It does not increase the appropriation at all. I am not saying a word about that, but I am correcting the Senator from New Hampshire when he states that it reduces the number of some other employees and turns somebody else out, for that is not correct, because, as I have stated, the clerks are provided for in the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; but it is contemplated to spend this money in employing people to do work. Now, if you pay them more salary, there will be less left for others, so that there will be fewer employed. It must have that result.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. What connection has the attorney for this commission with the office of the Attorney General or the Department of Justice?

Mr. HOLLIS. He has none at all, as I understand.

Mr. VARDAMAN. His office is not under the Department of Justice?

Mr. HOLLIS. He has no connection at all with it; the office is entirely separate; but their fields are coordinate to some extent.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Then, I think the request of the Senator from New Hampshire is very reasonable. I think the Trade Commission should be given a fair trial.

Mr. GALLINGER. It strikes me as being very questionable——

Mr. HOLLIS. I have the floor, and my colleague rises to talk without getting permission.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought the junior Senator from New Hampshire had yielded the floor.

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not know why the Senator should think that. I was still on my feet.

Mr. GALLINGER. The senior Senator from New Hampshire will in his own right get the floor.

Mr. HOLLIS. I beg pardon?

Mr. GALLINGER. The senior Senator from New Hampshire will in his own right get the floor; the junior Senator need not be disturbed on that point.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then I suppose he will do it at the proper time. I have noticed a disposition on the part of certain Senators to get up and talk, no matter who has the floor, and I do not propose to submit to that.

Mr. President, those who are objecting to this amendment are those who objected to the Federal Trade Commission. They were hostile to the idea——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from New Hampshire has no right to make that statement. I have objected to the amendment, but I did not object to the creation of the trade commission. The Senator's statement is entirely without authority.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have had several conferences with the distinguished Senator from Virginia during the spring about the Federal Trade Commission, and he has every time asked me what has the Federal Trade Commission done.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator stated that when the Federal Trade Commission was created everybody opposing this increase of salary objected to the creation of the commission.

Mr. HOLLIS. No; I did not say that. I said that those who are now objecting to this amendment are those who are hostile to the trade commission.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is not correct. I am not hostile to the Federal Trade Commission. Because I object to their extravagance does not make me hostile to the commission.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator from Virginia has several times asked me this spring what the Federal Trade Commission has done that they should have so much money. I have suggested to the Senator that when the matter came before his committee I would be prepared to tell him; and I was very sorry I did not get the opportunity to do that. I am now going to tell the Senate something about it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I should like the Senator to say whether he ever stated to me that he desired to be heard before the committee. My recollection is that he told me that he was going to ventilate this question on the floor of the Senate, but he never intimated a desire to be heard before the committee. If he had done so, I should have invited him to be heard. I did not know that he desired to be heard.

Mr. HOLLIS. I will take the Senator's statement as to that. I had a talk with him about it, and I told him that I should be ready; and I had a right to assume that I should have a chance to be heard before the committee. It is quite evident that there has not been such chance. I did not make any application to the Senator and warn him months ahead that I wished to be heard before the committee, but it is a fact that the Senator in his talk here has shown hostility to the Federal Trade Commission, as I understood him. If he says now that he has no such hostility, I am very glad, indeed, to find that I was mistaken.

I think the Senator is mistaken when he says that there has been a limit placed of $5,000 per annum on the amounts paid to counsel for the Federal Trade Commission. The counsel for the past year has been Mr. S. S. Gregory, of Chicago, a very distinguished lawyer, who has been president of the American Bar Association, and a man who is an expert on these matters. At the time the rural credits bill was in the committee and some question arose as to its constitutionality Mr. Gregory was one of the men suggested whose advice should be sought; but I found that he was employed by the Federal Trade Commission, and therefore did not apply to him. I can not conceive that Mr. S. S. Gregory, of Chicago, has worked for the Trade Commission during the past year for $5,000, and until some one shows me the figures I shall not believe it, because Mr. Gregory is not a $5,000-a-year man.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understand Mr. Gregory has been devoting only half his time to the work of the commission, and he receives the pay for that. As I understand, the commission does not employ lawyers regularly; but I understand this fund is to employ lawyers when the commission needs them in litigation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask what amount has been paid Mr. Gregory? Does any Senator know?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not know; I merely know that he was employed by the commission and that he is not a $5,000-a-year man. I know that.

Mr. BORAH. I know something of Mr. Gregory, and that thought occurred to me; but it also was a matter of some interest to me to know how he was paid and how much.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think I have known, but I have forgotten. I think that Mr. Gregory devotes half his time to the work of the commission and receives $5,000 a year, which is compensation at the rate of $10,000 a year. This provision is drawn so that Mr. Gregory can not be employed any more on that basis, because it says:

> No salary shall be paid hereunder exceeding the rate of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. Gregory has been employed at the rate of $10,000 per annum, working half his time, and this would cut him out.

One of the best ways to cripple the Federal Trade Commission and to show that it is not of great value to the country is to deprive it of good legal assistance. One lawyer making one mistake could discredit the commission so that Congress might well repeal the act creating it.

It is a very foolish saving for anyone to hire cheap lawyers, and anyone who has had substantial litigation knows that fact. I do not know why lawyers' fees have gotten so high in recent years. I sometimes suspect it is because they work for and associate with multimillionaires, are around the clubs with them, and in order to live as the millionaires do they have to charge large fees.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. My recollection is that the Trade Commission does not initiate litigation in the courts.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think the Senator is mistaken as to that.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, do they?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. My recollection is that they are simply advisers of the Department of Justice.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think the Senator is mistaken. The way the Trade Commission acts is this: Some one who is being injured by unfair methods of trade will make a complaint to the commission. The commission will then hear the complainant; and, if there is anything substantial in it, they will hear the one complained against. They must have their lawyers to represent them, just as the Interstate Commerce Commission does. The Interstate Commerce Commission stands between the shippers and the railroads, while the Federal Trade Commission stands between the people who are being injured and those who are injuring them.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, my recollection is that they simply advise the Department of Justice, when the facts disclosed to them suggest it.

Mr. HOLLIS. No; they act independently.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have sent for the act, and will ascertain that fact definitely.

Mr. HOLLIS. They act independently of the Department of Justice. The Trade Commission have been, in effect, working only about a year; they have not developed to their full power. One of the provisions inserted in the Trade Commission act gives the Trade Commission, when trusts are dissolved by the courts, authority to establish and fix the terms of the decrees, and follow them up. The Senate is aware that in the successful antitrust cases, notably in the Northern Securities case, as soon as the people obtained a favorable decision from the Supreme Court the stocks of the component companies immediately went up; and so the result of the litigation was that the people who were supposed to be monopolists were really benefited in dollars and cents. Within a few days the Federal court in New York has delivered a decision against the Corn Products Co.; it has turned over to the Federal Trade Commission the duty of drawing the decree and seeing that the Corn Products Co. is dissolved into its component parts, and that competition is maintained. Under the law as it exists now, instead of the stock of the Corn Products Co. going up, it went down yesterday, because under the Trade Commission the public will be protected. The Federal Trade Commission is the place where that decree against this enormous monopoly is to be handled, opposed to the best legal talent that that trust can command, and it is not right for the members of the Federal Trade Commission to go into court and wrangle with the lawyers for the defendant over that decree with $5,000-a-year lawyers. There is not a member of the Senate that would do it in a matter of that importance. They would hire a lawyer whom they would have to pay at the rate of $25,000 or $50,000 a year.

The chairman of the committee well says that up to the present time there has not been an important lawsuit tried by the Trade Commission. That is very true, because one thing that was insisted upon in the Senate, and insisted upon also by the administration, was that the Federal Trade Commission should proceed sanely and slowly to their work and not frighten honest business; and they have done it in a quiet and effective way. There have been numberless complaints brought to the attention of the commission, and in nearly every case where complaint has been made of unfair competition, the corporation complained against, on being notified by the Federal Trade Commission, has admitted its error and has promised to mend its ways, and has done so. That is what the law was passed for. The commission were not to wait until the unfair competition had ripened into monopoly, until the eggs had gotten scrambled so that they could not be unscrambled, but they were to act as quickly as the evil appeared, and correct it, just as a person summons a physician.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that I met a distinguished lawyer representing one of the greatest corporations of this country, who said that the creation of the Trade Commission had done more good, he believed, than anything Congress had ever done. The corporation which he represents sells its goods all over the United States to little concerns, and the Trade Commission has stopped a great deal of trouble. I thought it my duty to say here on the floor of the Senate that this man, representing one of the greatest corporations in the country, said he believed the creation of the Trade Commission was one of the best things done by Congress.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think that is the feeling of business men generally. Mr. Hurley, who will be the new chairman of the commission beginning July 1, was a very prominent business man in Chicago, and the business interests of the country take what Mr. Hurley says; they accept his judgment. If, on looking into a case, he says, "You are not doing right; this practice must stop," they take Mr. Hurley's judgment on it. Mr. Hurley, as I have said, is to be the new chairman of the commission.

I have here, but I will not weary the Senate by reading it, a list of the decisions which were rendered by the commission, under the same method that the Interstate Commerce Commission renders its decisions, up to January 31 last. That was only five or six months of actual operation; and forty-odd cases which were submitted to the Federal Trade Commission were passed on by the advice of their counsel and opinions rendered.

These opinions act as guides to business men; they are available to them. When a man thinks he is getting close to the line he can not go to the Trade Commission and ask them if he is doing right, because if the Trade Commission should say, "Yes; it is entirely proper," then the Department of Justice might not agree with the Trade Commission, and might prosecute just the same. The result would be a conflict between the law officers and the Trade Commission; but whenever the commission render decisions, just like the Supreme Court of the United States, those decisions are made available to the business interests of the country; and they form in themselves a rule of conduct not absolutely inflexible, but giving a guide, just as the decisions in will cases or tort cases or the thousand other matters that come up.

The magazines have taken up the matter, and in the Outlook for March, 1916, there is an article by Dr. Davenport, who took Mr. Roosevelt's place on the Outlook staff, in which he compliments very highly the work the Trade Commission is doing.

I have other material here, which I will not weary the Senate with, but I will read a letter which I received from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission last March, when I first took this matter up with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. His letter gives the work that has been accomplished up to that time in a very concise form. He says:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, March 15, 1916.

Hon. HENRY F. HOLLIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR HOLLIS: Pursuant to your request, I am handing you herewith inclosed some material explanatory of work which the Federal Trade Commission has been engaged upon for the past year.

If you will take a minute or two to scan the address which I made before the Merchants and Manufacturers' Export Association, which is marked in blue pencil as No. 1, it will give you a fairly good perspective of our activities. It has the advantage also of being in such form that you could make ready and convenient use of it if it were required in the course of formal debate.

An examination of our Conference Ruling Bulletin, marked in blue pencil No. 2, I think will be of much interest to you. This practice is analogous to that which the Interstate Commerce Commission has employed since 1907 with reference to the laws under their jurisdiction. They have been very successful in affording speedy and expeditious relief to parties concerned with the law, and have facilitated the administration of the law under their jurisdiction by these informal rulings. An examination of our rulings 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 will disclose the character of quick relief which this commission has afforded in some instances. In each one of these cases, which are fairly typical of others which are not reported, the relief has been secured and the public interest protected in a short time and without recourse to protracted litigation. The other rulings, I think, will interest you also, inasmuch as they indicate the manner in which doubt attaching to the relationship of Government agencies to business and to law has been in some manner relieved, to the benefit and advantage of the business community, and without prejudice to any Government agency, and to the advantage of the public interest.

Inclosed herewith I hand you a copy of the last issue of The Outlook, which has just come to my desk, and which contains an article by Prof. Frederick M. Davenport, of Hamilton College, entitled the "Prenomination campaign." On pages 571 and 572 he refers to the Federal Trade Commission and some of its accomplishments. The article is especially significant because it is written by an economist who has given the matter evidently very careful study and attention from an unprejudiced point of view. It is also significant to me because of the admission which it contains that the theory of regulated competition espoused by the President has justified itself as against the theory of regulated monopoly. Prof. Davenport, I understand, occupies the same position with the Outlook Co., with reference to these matters, which Mr. Roosevelt occupied prior to his resignation therefrom. I believe you will find it of exceptional interest.

There have been over 200 complaints of unfair competition filed with the commission. A large number of these are disposed of by amicable adjustment in situations similar to the illustrations referred to in the conference rulings. There are other complaints, however, where the economic and legal questions can not be determined without formal hearing. These cases are cases of substantial consequence and importance to the business community. Formal complaints have not yet been filed in all of these cases, for the reason that we are proceeding with very great care, and we believe that it is better to proceed slowly and surely. It is probable that several such important matters will be brought in for formal hearing within a short time.

In addition to this work, we have been completing the fertilizer report, which was called for by resolution of Senator SMITH; the oil report, which has been called for by resolution of Senators GORE, OWEN, and CHILTON; the lumber report, previously instituted by the Bureau of Corporations; and a report upon foreign trade, under paragraph h of section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission act. The report which we have just recently submitted to Congress, on the cost of transportation of oil by pipe lines, you are doubtless familiar with; a copy is hereto attached, marked in blue pencil, No. 4. The significance of this report is exceptional. In the first place, it affords to the Interstate Commerce Commission a basic foundation of fact as to the factors which go to make up proper cost in the consideration of reasonable rates to be charged. The Hepburn Act made pipe lines common carriers, and this report will furnish a substantial volume of fact upon which to base a judgment as to a reasonable rate. You will also notice that the report, while it contains facts that are very startling, is couched in a very conservative tone. This report has elicited a large amount of favorable comment.

Inclosed herewith I am also handing to you some of the printed matter which Mr. Hurley is getting out in connection with his industrial survey and cost accounting, and also a copy of an exceptionally able address which he recently made in connection with this work. You are doubtless familiar with his point of view, so I will not at this time go into detail explaining it. It has been enthusiastically received by the business community, and particularly by the smaller units in the business community.

This, in a general way, I think, will probably give you a survey of what we have been doing during the last year. Of course we had to coordinate the entire work of the old bureau of corporations and its staff of employees and the new functions and the new work of the Federal Trade Commission, and were required at the same time to continue the work of the old organization. We deliberately set out to proceed slowly. The commission believed that that was the part of wisdom. The interests involved are very large and the consequences are very serious, and we have felt that the commission could do nothing better than to firmly and thoroughly acquaint itself with conditions in as thoroughgoing and as broad a manner as possible before taking any action. At the same time we have proceeded insistently and consistently, as I think the record discloses. If it would be at all of interest to you, I would be very glad to show you, if you should come up to the office, or to furnish you with the somewhat unduly flattering editorial comments which we have received from a very great many quarters. Many of the strongest dailies of the country in their editorial columns have commended the different activities of the commission, and this quite regardless of the politics of the paper, nor indeed is this confined to the dailies. The prominent weekly papers of the country have also treated us very generously. This is not of any particular significance in and of itself, except as an indication of the manner in which thoughtful and intelligent men in reportorial work regard the work and accomplishments of the Federal Trade Commission.

On behalf of the whole commission I want to thank you for the interest which you have manifested in asking for this statement as to the work and accomplishments of the commission during the past year.

With assurances of my esteem, I am,

Very truly, yours, JOSEPH E. DAVIES.

I think I have indicated enough to the Senate so that they will realize that the work the commission is performing is important, and I should think they ought to have 140 or 240 clerks to do it properly, and that is not complained of; but I do appeal to those Members of the Senate who know about legal needs and the conduct of legal cases and the interpretation of a complicated act like this to support this amendment, so that they may have proper advice.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator made a statement a moment ago that I did not quite understand. I did not hear distinctly what the Senator said with reference to some action that had been pending in some court in New York against the Corn Products Co. I understood the Senator to say that that court had turned over to the Trade Commission the duty and responsibility of preparing a decree for the court.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is true.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Who represented the Government in that case—the district attorney?

Mr. HOLLIS. I assume that the Department of Justice represented the Government in that case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The district attorney, I take it, is an able lawyer?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes. That matter was fully debated a year ago last summer, and I remember that the Senator from Utah took the view then that the Department of Justice could do it. Nevertheless, that provision was inserted in the bill, that the Trade Commission should take these decrees whenever the court referred them to them, and it is under that provision that it is done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know that provision is in the act. I was opposed to it at the time, and I am still opposed to it. I see no reason why the duty of preparing a decree should be turned over to an administrative bureau of the Government. I think that is the duty of a court, with such advice as it may obtain from counsel in the case. But if it is necessary to turn over that responsible duty to the Trade Commission, why is it not sufficient that they should have the advice of the district attorney who tried the case and of the able lawyers who are in the Department of Justice?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is the same ground that was covered a year ago.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In other words, why is it necessary that we should provide for special counsel to advise the Trade Commission and to assist the Trade Commission in preparing these decrees when there are lawyers already in the case presumably familiar with it and presumably of sufficient ability to give that advice, if any be needed?

Mr. HOLLIS. It is because the results to the public have been so unfortunate under the old system. The Department of Justice, for some reason or other, has been so impotent to follow up the victories that the courts have bestowed upon the people that it was necessary to have some special department with special information with skilled lawyers who knew about that special field to draft the decrees, so that they could cover the various points that might be raised by the very ingenious lawyers for the defense.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to see one decree which has been formulated by the Trade Commission. I should like to know of one case where it has formulated a decree to compare, if we might, the decree as overhauled by the Trade Commission with the decrees which have been entered heretofore by the courts.

I was not friendly to the Trade Commission theory when it was created, but I am willing to be convinced. I have seen, however, no report from the Trade Commission, I have seen no result in the way of disorganizing or recomposing into its competitive parts any monopoly, not anything of that kind, which would indicate that there is any change in the situation from that which existed under the old system. If there is, I should like to have it incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho knows that the Federal courts of the United States do not very often declare monopolies to exist. When one is declared to exist, it is rather an unusual thing. Up to this time there has been no such decree referred to the Federal Trade Commission; and until that has been done, and they have reached a conclusion, it will be impossible to inform the Senator on that point.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I supposed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it might be pertinent to suggest that it would be impossible for any decree which the Federal Trade Commission could frame to be worse than the one which was framed in the Standard Oil Co. case.

Mr. BORAH. It might be pertinent to suggest that, in order that they may be criticized by comparison, we should at least have one decree by the Federal Trade Commission. It is barely possible that it could be as bad.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understand, this is the first case of this kind that has been referred to the Trade Commission.

Mr. HOLLIS. This is the first one to be referred to them, and unless they have suitable legal assistance I can assure the Senator that it is likely to be a bad one. That is why we want good lawyers—so that it will be a good one.

Mr. BORAH. Really, what is the difference between a $5,000 lawyer and a $7,500 lawyer as to ability?

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator can do the mathematics as well as I can.

Mr. BORAH. But when you come to put a $5,000 lawyer against a $50,000 lawyer on the other side, what is the difference between the $7,500 and the $50,000 and the $5,000 lawyer, so far as legal ability is concerned? There is only one conclusion to be drawn from the Senator's statements. We have got to follow them to their logical conclusion, and if you are going to measure the public service in that way you must raise these salaries to at least $10,000 or $15,000 a year. I am opposed to the raise at all.

Mr. HOLLIS. There is always that twilight zone between the good and the bad. It seems to be the idea of the department that for $7,500 they can get a fairly good man. They can not get as good a one as they can for $10,000, but they might make a mistake and get a worse one for $10,000. That is always possible.

Mr. BORAH. I doubt if the Trade Commission will ever get a better lawyer than Mr. Gregory to serve them.

Mr. HOLLIS. But they can not keep Mr. Gregory under this provision, because they can not pay him at the rate of over $5,000 per annum, and he will not serve for that, if I know Mr. Gregory.

Mr. BORAH. I think, if the truth were known, there is another reason why Mr. Gregory is not continuing his service with the Trade Commission. I do not think it is entirely a matter of dollars and cents. Mr. Gregory is a rather public-spirited gentleman, and he has reached that age, both in his practice and in his gathering of wealth, where he is not so interested in $2,500 extra, as some of us might be if we should engage in the practice. I think it is not wholly a question of dollars and cents that cuts Mr. Gregory out of this service.

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not say that it is. I merely use him as an illustration of what has been done under the bill as it stood previously and what might be done under the bill as amended.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has any detailed statement been furnished as to how the commission have used the lump fund they have been given before?

Mr. HOLLIS. I am not aware as to that. I do not know. I did not know anything about this matter coming up at this time until late yesterday afternoon, and I am unable to inform the Senator on that point.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator think they will change their present lawyers and get abler lawyers if we change the salaries?

Mr. HOLLIS. I think if we change the law as it is proposed to do they will lose Mr. Gregory, and I think that will be a misfortune.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Change the law?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; the law is changed. Under this language they can not employ——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, as the Senator is not on the Appropriations Committee, I will state that we laid down a rule at the beginning of the consideration of this bill that we would not increase any salaries. We began to consider it on Sunday, and we gave an opportunity to be heard to every Senator who wanted to appear, as I understood; and a great many came. We decided at the outset not to increase any salaries at all. Our view was that if they needed a lawyer in special litigation, under the lump sum they could employ a lawyer and pay what they pleased or what was necessary, what they thought was fair and just.

As I understand, the object of this is to employ a regular lawyer at $5,000 a year. We concluded not to increase any salaries; but if any special case, like this Corn Products case, should arise the commission would have authority to employ a lawyer to draw the decree and settle the matter and pay him for that special work, rather than to have to pay him $5,000 by the year; and you could get a better man to settle one case than you could get, probably, at a regular salary.

Mr. HOLLIS. Does the Senator think that under the provision as it appears, which is that "no salary shall be paid hereunder exceeding the rate of $5,000 per annum," it would allow them to pay a man at a greater rate than that?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do. I think that means a regular salaried officer. If they want to employ Mr. Gregory or any other lawyer to settle this Corn Products case, that is not a salary, that is a fee for a specific piece of work. Our idea was not to increase any salaries. We did not think a man employed at a regular salary of $5,000 probably was the man they would want for such work as that. If they had another case they would want another lawyer, probably, to settle the case and pay him for the service rendered what was fair and just. That was our idea.

Mr. HOLLIS. All the other commissions in Washington, including the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Reserve Board—I do not remember what the others are—have competent counsel, employed by the year, who become specialists in their particular lines. I found out, in connection with the rural-credits bill, when I wanted advice about the constitutionality of proposed provisions, that I was unable to employ a lawyer whose advice I thought was valuable for the $5,000 that was appropriated for the purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator is perfectly right. We ought to have a good-salaried man—a $5,000 man there who is an expert. But the Senator is arguing that they have to settle litigation, and you can not get a $5,000 man to do it. You have to have extra counsel, always, to handle those things in special litigated cases. You do not expect a salaried man to do that. But for regular salaried men we made a rule not to increase anybody's salary, and we did not increase a single man's salary, although we had hundreds of applications; but we thought that out of this lump sum, when they wanted to employ a lawyer, they could do it.

Mr. HOLLIS. This amendment does not propose to increase anybody's salary. There is $250,000 appropriated here in a lump sum for legal services, and so forth. I have said all that I know about it; I have used all the arguments that occur to me.

The Senate must vote on it. I am aware that if it does not pass the Senate by a substantial vote it will probably disappear in conference. I hope we will get the best judgment of the Senate on it, and, whatever action the Senate takes, that the conferees will insist upon it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, some of the Senators seem to be assuming that the Senator from New Hampshire thinks the limit ought to be $7,500. I do not so understand his view of it.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think there should be no limit.

Mr. OVERMAN. So do I.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I gather from his early remarks, he is of the opinion that there ought not to be any limit at all, and that is my opinion as well; and he is suggesting $7,500 simply to make the bill a little better than it is, not to make it what it ought to be.

We put no limit on the Interstate Commerce Commission when they employ a lawyer. Why? Is there any difference between the two? Is one entitled to any more confidence than the other? If the service sought to be secured is not worth more than $5,000, it may be assumed that the commission will not pay more than $5,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, right there I want to ask the Senator how he construes this language:

> For compensation, travel expense, and per diem in lieu of subsistence * * * of such special attorneys, special experts, special examiners, special agents, clerks, and other employees as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying on the work of said commission, * * * $250,000.

We provide that no salaried man in the office shall be paid more than $5,000; but under that $250,000 appropriation does not the Senator think they could pay $25,000, if they wanted to do it, for a lawyer to attend to a special case?

Mr. CUMMINS. Unquestionably, if he was employed for a particular service.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. But if he were employed regularly throughout the year he could not be paid more than $5,000, or in that proportion for any part of a year. But I think we ought to give the commission the authority to have counsel, and I do not believe his salary ought to be limited to $5,000. I do not think it ought to be limited to $7,500, although that would be much better than the bill as it is. I am afraid, however, that I have not put my view in the form of a question.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator has yielded the floor, I want to say a word in regard to this matter.

I think we ought not to go entirely insane with regard to the expenditure of money. We vote millions and hundreds of millions of dollars in order to get ready to fight—and I am in sympathy with that, so far as the implements of war are concerned—but we seem to have lost all interest in taking care of our domestic affairs, and our domestic problems are infinitely more important than those which arise out of our foreign relations.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, does not the Senator realize that in times of excitement, such as have existed consequent upon the war, all of these great domestic questions are apt to be shelved on the one hand and advantage taken of the fact upon the other? And has not that a great deal to do with this widespread propaganda about preparedness which is designed to divert the attention of the people from these tremendously important domestic questions, many of which contain the germs of more danger to this country than any possible foreign foe could menace us with?

Mr. CUMMINS. Unfortunately, Mr. President, there is too much ground for the suggestion just made by the Senator from Colorado. I, for one, am not willing to close my eyes to the domestic problems which affect the welfare of the people of the United States.

I am willing to give all due attention to preparation for war; but I am not willing to forget that the fortunes of the people of the United States, after all, are infinitely more affected by the regulations which we announce and the laws that we pass to regulate industry, commerce, and the affairs of the people as between themselves than by the creation of armies or navies.

I believe the Federal Trade Commission is the most valuable function which we have established in recent years. I understand perfectly that it has not yet occupied completely the field that it is intended to occupy. There has been no opportunity to occupy that field; but even with the meager chance it has had, and with the very limited time during which it has been at work, it has performed a great service for the people of this country. It has given a sense of security to honest business——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. And it has created some additional apprehension in dishonest business. I for one am entirely satisfied with the little part I had in the creation or establishment of the Federal Trade Commission. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, as a concrete proposition, what has the Federal Trade Commission done?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Federal Trade Commission, as just recorded, has passed upon more than 100—possibly 200—applications suggesting unfair competition, and it has removed the danger of unfair competition in many of these instances. Mark you, the Federal Trade Commission has only been in operation something like a year, and my friend from Idaho seems to think it ought to have sprung full-armed into the arena ready to grapple with every industrial problem that may arise.

Mr. BORAH. No; the Senator from Idaho did not anticipate that on the part of the Federal Trade Commission when it was created, and the Senator from Idaho did not suppose it had done anything of the kind until he listened to the Senator from Iowa. After the Senator from Idaho had been given to understand that it had accomplished such marvelous things for the public he asked for one concrete illustration of what it has done for the public.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not in my mind or at hand the record of the Federal Trade Commission, but I had in my view the general industrial situation of the United States, and he is blind to everything before him who does not see the general effect which the establishment of this tribunal has had upon the minds of the people of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I were to go to the Federal Trade Commission and obtain a ruling on some business enterprise, would that prevent me from being prosecuted civilly or indicted criminally?

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume the Senator from Illinois is familiar with the law. The law is very specific about that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would it prevent me from having my business combination dissolved afterwards? I am familiar with the provisions of the law; but suppose that were to be a fact——

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course it was not established to usurp the place of the judicial branch of the Government of the United States. We could not put it into the place of the judiciary if we would, and we would not if we could.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand perfectly that many Senators on this side of the Chamber were very much opposed to the Federal Trade Commission, and as yet nothing has been accomplished apparently that has changed their minds. I was for it then. I am for it now. I had confidence then in what it would do. I have confidence in what it has done and great hope for what it will accomplish in years to come. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Federal Trade Commission bill provides in a general way for the exercise of a certain kind of jurisdiction on the part of the trade commission over the subject of unfair methods of competition, not unfair competition, but unfair "methods" of competition, a phrase which, I confess, I had not even the vaguest idea of the meaning of, and I doubt whether anybody else had when it was put in the bill. The Senator has said that this trade commission has investigated something like 100 cases of alleged unfair methods of competition. Has the trade commission found that any unfair methods of competition exists in any one of those cases?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not able to answer the question definitely. I think it has, and I think that upon the report in many instances the methods have been abandoned by those who had been engaged in evil practices.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is just what the great attorney of one of the greatest corporations said to me. They had complaint made of unfair practices, and this commission has gone around and settled the troubles. That is exactly what he said. He said that the law was one of the finest pieces of legislation ever passed, because he had come in contact with the commission where these unfair methods had been practiced and they had stopped them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish the Senator would give me a reference to one case.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have the floor, and I desire to continue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CUMMINS. No one has asked me to yield. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would be glad if the Senator had pointed to some concrete cases where the Federal Trade Commission has found unfair methods of competition.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest that the Senator from Utah apply to the Federal Trade Commission. I have no doubt he will be given an opportunity to examine what it has done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should not have asked the Senator from Iowa the question, but I thought he knew.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator asked me the name. Does he doubt my statement? I have not hesitated to give the name. He was the attorney for the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Hon. Burton Craige, of Winston-Salem, N. C. The Senator can write to him and get the information for himself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is not information. It is mere opinion.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator asked me to give the name, and I gave it to him.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask to have printed in the RECORD the rulings in 40 cases of unfair competition, which were issued by the Federal Trade Commission on January 31, 1916.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Conference Rulings Bulletin No. 1. Issued Jan. 31, 1916.]

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION—CONFERENCE RULINGS.

EXPLANATORY NOTE.

The following are rulings of the commission in conference which are published as being of public interest. Future rulings will be announced from time to time through the public press and subsequently compiled and issued by the commission in successive bulletins. These rulings are published for the information of business men engaged in interstate commerce and others interested in the work of the commission. They are not decisions in formal proceedings, but merely expressions of the opinion of the commission on applications for the issuance of complaints and informal inquiries with regard to particular facts which involve the interpretation and construction of the Federal Trade Commission Act and of those sections of the Clayton Act with the enforcement of which the commission is charged.

While these rulings may be regarded as precedents in so far as they are applicable in proceedings before the commission, a more extensive presentation of facts in later cases may result in their modification, and they should not, therefore, be regarded as conclusive in the determination by the commission of any future action.

Copies may be obtained by those interested on application to the secretary of the commission.

CONFERENCE RULINGS OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

1. Public interest—Competitive method discontinued: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that a corporation engaged in the refining and sale of cane sugar, whose principal market is in the State in which its refinery is located, alleged that a larger corporation, having refineries located in other States and disposing of its product in interstate commerce in many States, refined and sold exclusively in the State of the applicant and in competition with it sacked sugar which is branded "pure cane fine granulated sugar." The applicant alleged that this sugar is not a standard fine granulated sugar as the branding leads consumers as well as many in the trade to believe, but is what is known as "off" sugar in the manufacture of which an expensive part of the refining process which is necessary to extract the final residue of from 2 to 3 per cent of molasses is omitted; that this "off" sugar is sold to jobbers at about 10 cents per hundred pounds less than the market price for standard granulated sugar; and that by reason of the alleged false brand or label on the sacks retailers and consumers are deceived into the belief that they are buying granulated sugar equal to standard. As a result, the applicant stated, it was compelled to meet the competition of this "off" sugar in the sale of its standard fine granulated sugar, in the manufacture of which it uses the complete refining process, a part of which its competitor omits in manufacturing the "off" sugar.

Upon consideration of the above allegations, the commission, having instituted an investigation, and shortly thereafter the corporation complained of having issued a notice to the trade announcing that it had discontinued the sale of the "off" brand of sugar, and the applicant requesting to be permitted to withdraw its application, and the corporation complained of assuring the commission that it had discontinued the sale of sugar branded in the manner complained of and had no intention of resuming the sale of this package: Held, That the method of competition complained of having been permanently discontinued, it does not appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

2. Public interest—Competitive method discontinued: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that a manufacturer engaged in interstate commerce issued a publication in which, under the guise of trade news, misinformation of a character unfair and detrimental to the applicant's business was circulated. Upon investigation by the commission the applicant advised that the use of the alleged unfair method had been discontinued; and the party complained of assured the commission that its policy had changed with a change of management and no such practice would in the future be engaged in either against the applicant or any other competitor: Held, That the method of competition complained of having been permanently discontinued, it does not appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

3. Public interest—Competitive method discontinued: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that a typewriter rebuilding company engaged in interstate commerce had circulated among dealers in various States a letter falsely stating that a competitor's factory in the Middle West had been removed to the East, and that for this reason many of its customers in Central and Western States would make new arrangements for obtaining typewriters. The party complained of subsequently advised the commission that the statement when made was believed to be true. It also sent a letter of retraction to all dealers receiving the first communication, and assured the commission of its readiness to take any further action deemed necessary. The applicant, being advised of these facts, suggested that no further action be taken: Held, That the method of competition complained of having been permanently discontinued, it does not appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

4. Public interest—Competitive method discontinued: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that a manufacturer engaged in interstate commerce sent out a printed circular containing an alleged letter to it by a dissatisfied customer of the applicant, disparaging the quality of applicant's product, which letter the applicant charged was fictitious. Upon investigation the commission received assurances from the concern complained of that it had discontinued the publication of the circular in question, and that in future it would not in its advertising matter refer in any way to the products of its competitors: Held, That the method of competition complained of having been permanently discontinued, it does not appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

5. Public interest—Competitive method discontinued: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that an association of wagon peddlers, competing with a jobber, had, by threats of boycott, prevailed on a manufacturer engaged in interstate commerce to refuse to sell to such jobber. Shortly after an investigation was started the commission was advised by the jobber that the manufacturer had resumed selling to it. Assurances were also given the commission by the manufacturer that the jobber would not in future be denied the privilege of buying from it by reason of the threatened boycott: Held, That the matter having been satisfactorily adjusted as between the parties, it does not appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

6. Exclusive territory—Refusal to sell: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that a manufacturer engaged in interstate commerce, having designated an exclusive dealer in a certain local territory, refused to sell to another dealer within this territory. It further appeared that such exclusive dealer was under no obligation to refrain from dealing in the products of other manufacturers of the same commodity: Held, That neither the Federal Trade Commission act nor the Clayton Act prohibits manufacturers selling their product exclusively through one dealer in a given territory. A refusal to sell to others in such territory, under such circumstances, is therefore not unlawful.

7. Manufacturers engaged in interstate commerce, irrespective of the size of their business, and all wholesalers so engaged subject to Clayton Act: On inquiry: Held, That all manufacturers engaged in interstate commerce, irrespective of the size of their business, and all jobbers or wholesalers thus engaged, are subject to the provisions of the Clayton Act.

8. The right of one manufacturer engaged in interstate commerce to buy out a competitor, and jurisdiction of the commission in such matters: On inquiry as to the right of one manufacturer to buy out a competitor in the same line of business: Held, That the only jurisdiction of the commission in respect of such transactions is to enforce the provisions of section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibiting the acquisition by any corporation engaged in interstate commerce of the capital stock, in whole or in part, of another corporation thus engaged, where the tendency of such acquisition may be to substantially lessen competition between such two corporations, or to restrain interstate commerce, or to create a monopoly; and also possibly to enforce section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission act, if such purchase, either of property or of capital stock, in connection with other circumstances might constitute an unfair method of competition: Held, also, That the mere purchase of the property of such competitor other than capital stock is not prohibited by the Clayton Act or the Federal Trade Commission act.

As to the validity of such purchase of property or capital stock under the Sherman Act the commission expresses no opinion.

9. Exclusive agency: On inquiry by a piano manufacturer whether the following clause in a "consignment agreement" is in contravention of the Clayton Act, to wit:

"Item 3. The factor shall offer, sell, or lease the pianos consigned to him by the consignor only to persons residing in the counties of ———, in the State of ———, and shall not sell nor lease during the life of this contract any other pianos than those consigned by the said (piano manufacturer).

Held, it appearing that the "consignment agreement" does not provide for a sale or lease of the goods of the principal to the person designated as "factor," but only for the establishment of an agency for the sale of the goods of the principal, therefore the use of such clause does not appear to be in violation of section 3 of the Clayton Act.

10. Direct selling: On application for the issuance of a complaint it was alleged that certain mining operators were selling their product direct to consumers at wholesale prices, and coercing retail dealers into handling their product, either by threats to sell or by temporary arrangements for selling their product direct to consumers. Upon investigation by the commission it appeared that the operators were in fact selling their product direct to consumers, but that this method of competition was not used for purposes of coercion, but was necessary in order to keep their product on the market: Held, That the sale by a mining operator of his product direct to the consumer is not of itself an unfair method of competition.

11. Practice—Information respecting alleged violation of law submitted by parties not directly interested: On inquiry: Held, That the fact that a party complaining to the commission has no direct interest and acts without specific authority from the parties alleged to be injured will not prevent the commission from taking action if the matter presented is one properly within its jurisdiction. It is the evident purpose of the law that action by the commission should be taken regardless of the source of its information when it has reason to believe that there is a violation of a law which it is empowered to enforce and that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

12. Public interest—Violation of State statutes: On application for the issuance of a complaint it appeared that the commissioners of a certain county had appointed an employee of a bridge company to the position of county civil engineer, and that this situation made it possible for the company to secure information respecting the letting of bridge work which was not available to competing companies. It appears that the State law prohibits such engineer from being interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract for the construction of bridges under his supervision: Held, That as the condition complained of may be corrected by resort to a State statute a proceeding will not be instituted in the absence of important considerations of public interest.

13. Exclusive territory: On inquiry by a manufacturer whether section 3 of the Clayton Act is violated by a contract containing the following clause:

"In consideration of exclusive sale of your goods in ——— from date of this contract to March 1, 191—, ——— agree to neither sell your goods outside of the territory heretofore reserved to ———, directly or indirectly, under penalty of paying all damages resulting from a violation of the clause and cancellation of this contract at the option of the manufacturer; nor to countermand this order except on payment to ——— Manufacturing Co. as liquidated damages 20 per cent of the net amount of goods hereby purchased."

Held, That section 3 of the Clayton Act does not prohibit manufacturers selling their product exclusively through one dealer in a given territory and requiring the dealer not to sell their product outside of the territory assigned.

14. Refusal to sell: On application for the issuance of a complaint it appeared that certain manufacturers, pursuant to their established sales policy of selling only to local retail dealers, refused to sell to the applicant, a retail dealer doing business principally by mail, a certain commodity for shipment direct from the mills to consumers in a State where the applicant maintained no place of business. On investigation by the commission it appeared that there was no agreement or understanding among the manufacturers complained of to prevent the applicant or others doing a similar business, by refusal to sell or otherwise, from securing this commodity, nor did it appear that such manufacturers had been coerced or intimidated by retailers affected by the competition of the applicant: Held, That, under the circumstances, a refusal of a manufacturer to sell to the applicant for direct shipment from the mill to territory covered by local dealers is not a violation of any law which the commission is authorized to enforce. Whether a refusal to sell under other circumstances is contrary to the provisions of the Clayton Act or the Federal Trade Commission act the commission does not now decide.

15. Exclusive agency—Exclusive territory—Refusal to sell: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that several manufacturers, having appointed exclusive agents or distributors in a given place, refused to sell to another dealer at the same point: Held, That neither the Clayton Act nor the Federal Trade Commission act prohibits manufacturers establishing exclusive agencies or assigning exclusive territory to dealers. Under such circumstances a refusal to sell to others than such agents or distributors is not unlawful under these acts.

16. Practice—Charges not sustained on investigation: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it was charged by a packer of canned clams that a competitor, in order to drive the applicant out of business, bid up the price of fresh clams to such an extent as to make the business unprofitable. The applicant, when requested, failed to submit further information, and an investigation by the commission did not substantiate the charges made: Held, That the commission, having no reason to believe that the party complained of has been or is using the alleegd unfair method of competition, will not proceed further.

17. Corporate name—Private rights—Public interest: On application by a corporation for the issuance of a complaint, it was alleged that one of its stockholders, whose name had been adopted by the applicant as part of its corporate name, had formerly been a stockholder in a competing corporation and had then permitted the latter to use his name or part of its corporate name, but that after the withdrawal of said stockholder from the competing corporation it had, in violation of an alleged agreement between one of its officers and said stockholder, retained his name in its corporate name, to the injury of the applicant: Held, That as the application presents questions concerning purely private rights, in which the interest of the public is quite remote and indirect, it does not appear to the commission that a proceeding in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

18. Refusal to sell—Exclusive agency: On inquiry: Held, That the Clayton Act does not prohibit manufacturers establishing exclusive sales agencies in certain territory and selling their product in such territory only through such agencies. A refusal to sell to others in such territory where such agency has been established is therefore not unlawful. Whether a mere refusal to sell under any circumstances is contrary to the provisions of the Clayton Act or the Federal Trade Commission act the commission does not now decide.

19. Pipe lines—Jurisdiction: On application for the issuance of a complaint as to the methods of a pipe line for the transportation of oil between the States: Held, That the commission has no jurisdiction in the premises and that the matter should be referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

20. Exclusive territory—Refusal to sell: Op application for the issuance of a complaint it appeared that a manufacturer engaged in interstate commerce assigned exclusive territory to jobbers of his product in various States and refused to sell to the applicant, a competing jobber: Held, That the Federal Trade Commission act and the Clayton Act do not prohibit manufacturers selling their product exclusively through one dealer in a given territory. A refusal to sell to others in such territory under such circumstances is therefore not unlawful. Whether a mere refusal to sell under any circumstances or for any reason is contrary to the provisions of the Clayton Act or the Federal Trade Commission act the commission does not now decide.

21. Exclusive Agency—Exclusive territory—Refusal to sell: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that a manufacturer engaged in interstate commerce, having selected an exclusive agent or distributing dealer in certain territory, refused to sell to another dealer within this territory: Held, That neither the Federal Trade Commission act nor the Clayton Act prohibits manufacturers establishing exclusive agencies or assigning exclusive territory to dealers. Under these circumstances a refusal to sell to others than such agents or distributors is therefore not unlawful under these acts.

22. Railroads—Jurisdiction: On application for the issuance of a complaint as to the abandonment by an interstate railway company of part of a branch line and its purpose to abandon more of it: Held, That the commission has no jurisdiction of the subject matter of this complaint.

23. Interstate commerce—Jurisdiction: On inquiry whether a local merchant, in offering an automobile free to the customer drawing a specified number, is practicing an unfair method of competition: Held, That, as interstate commerce is not involved, the commission has no jurisdiction to determine whether or not the act complained of is unlawful.

24. Interstate commerce—Jurisdiction: On application for the issuance of a complaint, a retail dealer alleged that a competitor engaged in business in the same city sold goods below the price at which the applicant could purchase them: Held, That, as interstate commerce is not involved, the commission has no jurisdiction to determine whether or not the practice complained of is unlawful.

25. Interstate commerce—Jurisdiction: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that a retail dealer was selling a well-known make of underwear much below the customary price, to the injury of a jobber in the same city who sold these goods to the local retail trade: Held, That, as interstate commerce is not involved, the commission has no jurisdiction to determine whether or not the practice complained of is unlawful.

26. Interstate commerce—Jurisdiction: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that two competitors of the applicant, located in the same city, sold lumber below cost. The sales of all parties at interest were confined wholly within one State: Held, That, as interstate commerce is not involved, the commission has no jurisdiction to determine whether or not the practice complained of is unlawful.

27. Interstate commerce—Jurisdiction: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it was alleged by a retail dealer that other dealers in the community were using unfair methods in competition with him: Held, That, as interstate commerce is not involved, the commission has no jurisdiction to determine whether or not the methods complained of are unlawful.

28. Banks—Jurisdiction: On inquiry respecting the refusal of banks to lend money on a particular kind of collateral: Held, That the facts do not present a case within the jurisdiction of the commission, banks being expressly excepted from the provisions of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission act.

29. Practice where suggestion of violation of decree of Federal court is made: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that the practice complained of might be in violation of a decree against the party charged with these practices, which decree was entered in a Federal court: Held, That the matter should be, in this instance, referred by the commission to the Department of Justice. Each matter of this kind will be disposed of upon its own facts.

30. Jurisdiction—Deprivation of rights by municipal ordinance: On inquiry: Held, That the commission has no jurisdiction to pass upon the claim of an electrical engineer that, by town ordinance, his right there to carry on his work is unduly abridged.

31. Interstate commerce—Jurisdiction—Refusal to sell: On inquiry: Held, That where a jobber or manufacturer refuses to sell to a retailer in the same State, and no interference with interstate commerce appears to be involved, the commission has no jurisdiction to act in the premises.

32. Interstate commerce—Labor unions—Jurisdiction: On application for the issuance of a complaint respecting the enforcement of certain local labor-union rules: Held, That as the labor union is not engaged in commerce, the commission has no jurisdiction to determine whether or not the practice complained of is unlawful.

33. Refusal to manufacture and sell—Competition—Jurisdiction: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that a company engaged in the manufacture of bottle crowns refused to make certain crowns for the applicant, assigning as the reason that the crowns ordered would constitute an infringement of the trade-mark of another customer, a competitor of the applicant. It did not appear that the refusal complained of was induced by the competitor: Held, That, as the facts do not disclose a method of competition, the commission is without jurisdiction to act in the premises.

34. Interstate commerce—Jurisdiction: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that the proprietors of certain small coal mines refused to sell to a retail dealer in the immediate vicinity except through a competing dealer and, through the purchase of other near-by mines, cut off his supply of coal: Held, That, as interstate commerce is not involved, the commission has no jurisdiction to determine whether or not the practice complained of it unlawful.

35. Interstate commerce—Jurisdiction: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that a retail dealer competing with the applicant, both doing business only within the State, discriminated in price between different localities in the sale of a commodity: Held, That, as interstate commerce is not involved, the commission has no jurisdiction to determine whether or not the practice complained of is unlawful.

36. Procedure—Combinations in restraint of trade: On application for the issuance of a complaint, suggesting unlawful combinations by companies engaged in interstate commerce in restraint of such commerce, no unfair method of competition being alleged: Held, That the matter thus involved should be referred to the Department of Justice.

37. Clayton Act—Section 3—Pending litigation: On application for the issuance of a complaint, alleging a violation of section 3 of the Clayton Act, where it appeared that the party complained of is the defendant in a suit brought by the Department of Justice, involving the same questions of law and fact: Held, That a proceeding by the commission at this time would not be to the interest of the public.

38. Interstate commerce—Jurisdiction—Competition: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that a retail dealer, doing business wholly within one State, advertised the product of the applicant, a manufacturer engaged in interstate commerce, at less than the price at which the latter sold it at wholesale: Held, That, as in this instance, the method of competition complained of is used by a concern engaged solely in intrastate commerce, and only against local competitors not engaged in interstate commerce, the commission has no jurisdiction.

39. Manufacture and sale of repair parts—Unpatented articles: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that certain foundrymen made and sold repair parts for stoves manufactured by the applicant. It was not claimed that the stoves were patented or that the foundrymen led the public to believe that the parts were made by the applicant: Held, That under such circumstances the making and selling of repair parts for unpatented articles, by others than the original manufacturer, is not a violation of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission act.

40. Interstate commerce—Local boycott—Jurisdiction: On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that certain advertisers in a local newspaper, and some of its subscribers, all apparently residing in the community where it was published, combined together and threatened to withdraw their patronage unless the management of the paper changed its policy: Held, That the facts alleged do not disclose the violation of any law which the commission has jurisdiction to enforce.

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to ask the Senator if he knows whether or not these 40 rulings include the investigation which was made of the Timber Trust?

Mr. HOLLIS. I can not tell, because they do not think it is consistent with fairness to the companies that have submitted to the ruling to publish the names. The names are not given in the ruling because there might be an unjust allegation not supported by proof.

Mr. CUMMINS. Having expressed my opinion with regard to the general value of the Federal Trade Commission, its value in the past and what it will be in the future, I think it is only fair to remember when we are discussing the appropriation for it that under the law the Bureau of Corporations was transferred to the Federal Trade Commission giving to the latter all the power and imposing all the duties of the Bureau of Corporations. I assume that my friends upon this side who are so critical of the Federal Trade Commission are not likewise opposed to the Bureau of Corporations. That bureau was established under a former administration, and I think it commanded the approval of most Republican Members of this body as well as the greater number of the Democratic Members of the body.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Iowa think there is no difference between the Bureau of Corporations and the Federal Trade Commission both in function and principle?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is a very great difference. The Senator from Idaho knew that very well before asking the question.

Mr. BORAH. And the Senator from Idaho asked it because the Senator from Iowa is assuming that if we are against the Federal Trade Commission we are also against the Bureau of Corporations, when it is an entirely different and distinct institution.

Mr. CUMMINS. From my standpoint that is about as logical as some of the other suggestions made by the Senator from Idaho with respect to the Federal Trade Commission. I did not so assume. There was no such inference in my suggestion. I said that the Bureau of Corporations was a function of government that had been created under a Republican administration, and that therefore we were at least bound in a way to the recognition of that part of the work.

Now, what part of the work is carried on as the successor of the Bureau of Corporations? I do not know, because I have not analyzed it; but I venture to say that four out of five of the minor employees of the Federal Trade Commission have performed the duties which we laid upon the Bureau of Corporations. Therefore, when the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] suggested that the commission had 250 employees, I think he said, he created an erroneous impression. He seems to assume that this commission has employed all this army of clerks in order to perform the work which we put upon the Federal Trade Commission a year ago, whereas a large part of the clerical technical work is being done by the Federal Trade Commission as the substitute for the Bureau of Corporations.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire will prevail. I believe that the commission has real need of general counsel. The very suggestion made by the Senator from Utah indicates the high necessity of the most competent, trained, and skillful lawyers, because while I do not agree with him with regard to the impracticability or legal impossibility of defining or determining what unfair methods of unfair competition are, yet we all recognize it to be a new, untried, and a difficult subject, and we are attempting to employ that standard or those standards for the purpose of preserving competition in the country, fair, reasonable competition. I can easily see how the commission desire and ought to have counsel who could not be employed at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say upon the amendment. I look with a sympathetic eye upon the appropriation made for this commission. I hope it will be liberal and generous, so that the work which we have imposed upon it can be done to the best possible advantage.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I concur in all the encomiums that have been passed upon Mr. Gregory by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and others, who have spoken here. I know Mr. Gregory, and have known him for a number of years. There is no better lawyer in the country, and if this Trade Commission has need of excellent counsel I do not think they could select a better man than Mr. Gregory.

So my opposition to this amendment is in no sense an opposition to Mr. Gregory.

I am not going to enter upon a discussion of the Trade Commission bill. That is a matter of the past. I discussed it somewhat at length when it was before the Senate and expressed my opinion as vigorously as I knew how at the time. My opinion has not changed, although the commission has been in operation for something like a year. In my deliberate judgment there is no function which the Trade Commission ought to perform that could not be as well performed by the Bureau of Corporations, which it succeeded in many important particulars.

So far as the new functions are concerned, that have been conferred upon it they would have been performed by the Department of Justice and by the courts as they were being performed at the time the Trade Commission was created far better than the Trade Commission can perform them.

Our attention, however, has been called to the rulings of this Trade Commission with reference to the subject of unfair methods of competition. I undertook to say in the form of an interrogatory to the Senator from Iowa that nobody knew what was meant by the expression "unfair methods of competition," and I do not believe anybody knows now. I think that. Certainly a reading of these 40 rulings of the Federal Trade Commission throws absolutely no light whatever upon that question. What unfair competition is we all know, because the courts have determined over and over again what that is. Unfair competition can be defined with as much certainty as almost any phrase that is used in the law. But what unfair "methods" of competition is nobody knew. The proponents of the bill upon the floor of the Senate differed among themselves as to what it meant, as was pointed out at the time. No two of them agreed.

Now, I am going to take the time of the Senate—and I will be very brief—not to read these 40 decisions, although they are very short—they embrace less than 9 or 10 pages of printed matter—but to take the time to call the attention of the Senate to the conclusions of the commission in these cases. They are very brief and consist of not more than three or four lines. The first case:

The commission—

Held, That the method of competition complained of, having been permanently discontinued, it does not appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

Certainly we are not afforded much light by that statement as to what "unfair methods of competition" is.

Case No. 2:

Held, That the method of competition complained of, having been permanently discontinued, it does not appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

Case No. 3:

Held, That the method of competition complained of, having been permanently discontinued, it does not appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

Case No. 4:

Held, That the method of competition complained of, having been permanently discontinued, it does not appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

The brief statement which precedes the conclusion calls attention to the facts involved in the case. I will not take time to read these statements.

Case 4, for example, reads:

Public interest—Competitive method discontinued: On application for the issuance of a complaint it appeared that a manufacturer engaged in interstate commerce sent out a printed circular containing an alleged letter to it by a dissatisfied customer of the applicant disparaging the quality of applicant's product, which letter the applicant charged was fictitious. Upon investigation the commission received assurances from the concern complained of that it had discontinued the publication of the circular in question, and that in future it would not in its advertising matter refer in any way to the products of its competitors.

Then follows the holding I have already read. That is all there is in that case.

Case No. 5:

Held, That the matter having been satisfactorily adjusted as between the parties, it does not appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public.

Case No. 6:

Held, That neither the Federal Trade Commission act nor the Clayton Act prohibits manufacturers selling their product exclusively through one dealer in a given territory. A refusal to sell to others in such territory, under such circumstances, is, therefore, not unlawful.

That is the only finding thus far that contains any helpful suggestion of any character whatever.

Case No. 7. I will not stop to go through all these 40 cases, but in a general way they are all of the character I have indicated. There is not, I venture to say, in all these holdings a single suggestion that enables a corporation or an individual engaged in commerce in the United States to guide his future conduct with reference to the matter of unfair methods of competition. There is not a single line. These cases have been called to the attention of the commission by letters or by other communications—by applications of one sort or another—and all have been disposed of in this summary way. There is not a suggestion by the commission, so far as these various rulings indicate, that reflects any light whatever upon this exceedingly important matter as to what constitutes unfair methods of competition.

Now, just a word with reference to another question which the Senator from New Hampshire referred to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Before the Senator leaves that, will he allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Without arguing the merit of the proposition the Senator is stating as a matter of fact, my understanding is that in those cases which were so disposed of on the record the commission took them up with the corporations against whom the charges were made and had negotiation with them, and through this negotiation and other representations backward and forward between the commission and the corporation the practices were discontinued. I know that to be the case in some instances.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to have been so in some instances, but the particular purpose for which I was calling attention to these rulings——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In just a moment. I was calling attention to them to show that thus far the Trade Commission had apparently thrown no light upon this question, in which we are all so much interested, as to what really constitutes unfair methods of competition. That was the purpose of my inquiry of the Senator from Iowa. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Utah has been a distinguished practitioner at the bar. About how many cases would he think the Federal Trade Commission ought to have determined after the lapse of one year—litigated cases, stoutly contested cases, that would determine legal principles?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, there does not seem to have been any stoutly contested case.

Mr. WALSH. I asked the Senator about how much he would expect of them in a year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no idea, Mr. President. That depends on a variety of circumstances.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Senator really expect that any great litigated case involving a stout contest on both sides such as would produce and elucidate any particular legal proposition could be determined in that period?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should expect that after a year's experience and after having investigated, as they said here, some 40 cases, they would be able to throw some light upon the question which I have adverted to. That is the only purpose of my referring to the rulings at all.

Mr. WALSH. Just one further question. I dare say as experienced a lawyer as the Senator from Utah has been concerned in the prosecution or in the defense of some trust case. Has he ever been able to get a determination inside of a year on some one case?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, my practice was not extended in that line. I do not now recall how long the litigations took.

Mr. WALSH. Speaking from my own experience, I would say it would proceed rapidly if he got a determination in a case of this kind inside of two years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But if I may use an illustration, it did not require the Interstate Commerce Commission very long to give the general public an idea of the scope and meaning of the law under which they were operating. They did that quite speedily, and I see no reason why when this Trade Commission has been investigating 40 cases which were at least represented by somebody as involving a violation of this provision denouncing unfair methods of competition they should not have been able to enlighten us in some way, in some degree, as to the meaning of that provision.

Now, Mr. President, with reference to the other function of this commission, that is as to their performing the delegated duty of preparing decrees for courts. I think the provision a very unwise one. I thought so at the time. I am at a loss to understand how any self-respecting court would call upon an administrative bureau of this character to aid it in performing a judicial function as this is. It seems to me that the logical and proper thing for a court to do when it comes to pass judgment is to determine itself what judgment ought to be entered, and then, if it is in doubt as to the phraseology, to turn it over to the lawyers who are trying the case and who are familiar with the whole matter to prepare the findings, if any are necessary, and to formulate the language of the decree.

Any district attorney who is sufficiently competent to be appointed to that responsible position after he has heard the testimony, after he has prepared the case, after he has argued and after he has won it before the court ought to be in a better position to advise the court as to the character and form of a decree than some outside administrative body which is called in at the last moment to do so. I see no reason why this commission need to have lawyers of extraordinary ability to advise them. The duties which they ought to perform are of a character that the Bureau of Corporations performed without any difficulty and without having any such expert legal advice. If from time to time they need legal advice of this character there is the Department of Justice to go to, and I would rather provide for an additional assistant or additional assistants to the Attorney General of the United States with a good salary or salaries than to permit this Trade Commission to employ this expert legal assistance which I do not believe it needs.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a minute.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator misapprehends the scope of the Trade Commission law. To me it always seemed that the law was calculated to stand as a buffer between the big interests that sought to monopolize trade and the effect of the Sherman antitrust law. You have noticed since the law was passed there have been no prosecutions under that law, and I venture to say in the future we will find little under that law.

I am surprised to see the Senator from Utah so critical about the commission. I think it is acting as a paregoric for the big interests, and you ought not to expect too much of it. If it serves its purpose of keeping off prosecutions under the antitrust law, I think that will be complying with the spirit of the law. I am utterly surprised to hear my good friend from Utah, an attorney so skillful and able as he is, have such high expectations of the commission. If he simply regarded the commission as a buffer to protect big interests and consolidations against the Sherman antitrust law, then he would be on the right track, and make no mistake.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I understand, though I am not sure, that the criticism in reference to certain appropriations in this bill for the Federal Trade Commission is made the vehicle through which attack upon the efficiency of the Federal Trade Commission is made.

The Federal Trade Commission has not been in existence long enough to establish its character. It is not to be expected that in a period of a little over a year there could be such an accumulation of work, experience, recorded decisions, and action as to impress the public opinion of the country. When the creation of a Federal Trade Commission was under consideration I declared that, in my judgment, the best evidence of its value would be that it would have but little to do; and I believe that prediction or that expectation is being realized.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Nevada has just said that he predicted that this commission would have little to do, and that the prediction has been verified. If the commission has little to do, why should we appropriate so much money for it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. A very much larger sum than this would be required if the commission had very much to do.

Before the Federal Trade Commission had been established, the question of the trusts was a foremost question in the minds of the American people. It was a subject of universal discussion. The delinquencies of great corporations, the delinquencies of great trust magnates, their offenses against the public interest were the subject of constant consideration, and it has always been my contention that we should have an organization with reference to trade resembling the organization that we had created regarding transportation, with similar powers of investigation and correction; that many evils would be checked in the bud; that great abuses could not ripen; that existing abuses by the powers of investigation and correction and admonition would be eradicated, and the necessity for giant prosecutions, both in the civil and criminal courts, would disappear.

Mr. President, that great question of combination in trade, of trust organizations, is no longer prominent in the minds of the American people, because the evils have largely disappeared, partially as the result of judicial decree, but in a very large degree as the result of the powers of investigation and correction conferred upon the Federal Trade Commission.

I have made some inquiry with reference to the methods of that commission, and I have found that, whilst numerous complaints have been made there which might otherwise have been made upon ex parte statements, the subject of suits, either criminal or civil, that just as soon as such complaints are made and inquiry is made of the corporation charged with the delinquency, and information asked regarding it, a practice which has been started, and which is regarded as objectionable and unfair, has been either immediately abandoned by the party charged or, after a discussion of the matter with the officials of the trade commission, modified or reluctantly abandoned. So business has not been held in terrorism of criminal prosecution and suits involving the destruction of organizations connected with great activities, and yet practices which are subject to condemnation and disapproval have been abandoned; and this not in the public eye, with no advertisement of the alleged delinquencies of business men, mortifying to their feelings and prejudicial to their business, but all conducted in such a way as to accomplish the purpose of the law without offensive publicity.

So, Mr. President, I feel that this commission is doing a good work. If it were not doing a good work, we should hear more complaint to-day of existing abuses, such complaints as we used to hear; the country would not be silent, the country would be vocal if the old abuses existed. My belief is that you hear very little of the work of this commission simply because it is conducted in a quiet, unobtrusive, and efficient way and because the reprehensible practices likely to be indulged in by business men and organizations in competition with each other are checked in their very inception.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this bill appropriates a quarter of a million dollars for legal services. If the Attorney General were to communicate a request from his department that he required more help, so far as I am concerned, I would pass it without a question, leaving it to his judgment to decide what is necessary in the administration of justice in that department to call for such help.

The Federal Trade Commission, Mr. President, is a perambulating agency that hovers on the borderland between the executive department and the judicial department of the Government. It possesses all the bad qualities of both and the governmental virtues of neither. If the attorneys who are required under this $250,000 appropriation were attached to the Department of Justice, they could represent some real power, because they would be connected with the authoritative judicial department of the Government, which has power to enter decrees and judgments in proper cases. In that event their investigations would lead to some final result; but the Federal Trade Commission, as it is organized now, is nothing but an irresponsible master in chancery that can collect evidence, can investigate, but whose recommendations have no more power than those of any other investigating commission which is in existence in the country.

The difficulty now is that this country is investigated to death, Mr. President. The very bowels are investigated out of every legitimate enterprise doing or trying to do business, and that investigation has not been confined to this administration alone, for it was just about as bad under the preceding one. I have tried for a good many years several times to get from the department at Washington proper advice in the formation of business enterprises to conduct legitimate pursuits in the Mississippi Valley, and I have signally failed in every instance to obtain an opinion or any departmental advice that would shield men who desired to conduct business properly, either against the dissolution of their enterprise or their indictment when they were subsequently investigated by the Department of Justice.

The sum of $250,000 is here provided. If it were attached to the Attorney General's office, if he made a proper request for that much additional help, it would not be subject to this criticism. The very act itself, Mr. President, disclaims any idea that it can be any protection to anybody that asks it. I remember not very long ago—a year and a half or two years ago—when a legitimate enterprise engaged in coal mining in the Mississippi Valley of the country, in two States, covering a wide area of the soft-coal belt, came here for the purpose of ascertaining whether they could legitimately combine a variety of their properties to operate so that they might give work to the miners who were then idle. Competition had reduced their profits to the point where it was no longer profitable even for the large mines to conduct their affairs. We undertook to get some kind of advice. I was not acting in any other capacity than merely to direct them to some place where they might have this proper guarantee or protection given them, but there was no place in the Government where it could be secured.

I was not acting in any capacity as attorney or otherwise, but simply as a Member of this body, giving them such friendly suggestions as they sought, and I had to tell them to go back and take the advice of their lawyer, and to trust to his good judgment and the mercies of a court if they chanced subsequently to be indicted or prosecuted.

What does this act approved September 26, 1914, commonly called the Trade Commission act, do? In section 5, on page 4 of the pamphlet containing this act, I find it says:

> No order of the commission or judgment of the court to enforce the same shall in anywise relieve or absolve any person, partnership, or corporation from any liability under the antitrust acts.

Now, what security is there in that? I would rather that the attorneys attached to the Department of Justice should be given the duty of investigating, and, if the Attorney General does not now have a competent force to send lawyers into the field to investigate methods of large concerns doing an interstate business and liable under the antitrust act, let him ask for more help, and let the department be vested with power to go into court and obtain a proper decree or judgment that will be a protection.

This is the main thing I have in view when I think of the Trade Commission. The practices which are evil in themselves can be checked by the Department of Justice if proper help be given them, because, at last, everything that is improper must rest upon the final adjudication of some court of competent jurisdiction. That is where the cases coming before the Trade Commission go at last, and the commission is only an added and inoperative cog that produces nothing finally that will protect the person applying for guidance and protection. Neither does it protect the rights of the general public more than the Department of Justice now can. So I think this item ought to be struck out; and, on the recommendation of the Attorney General, if he needs more help, it ought to be added to his department. Let this commission continue its functions simply as an economic agent to collect information on which it can advise Congress from time to time, if Congress needs any further advice as to what further legislation should be enacted. They might go somewhat further, and there is probably some way as a correctional agent in which they can be useful in collecting evidence of improper practices that can be presented to the courts, to masters in chancery, or to the Attorney General or the proper department for prosecution in cases where there is unfair competition.

Why, this commission, Mr. President, can define "unfair competition" until the crack of doom and it will settle nothing. We will never know what unfair competition is in this country until the Supreme Court, sitting a few hundred feet from this body, shall have adjudicated that question, and then it is a good deal like defining what "fraud" is or defining what "equity" is. They will only define in particular what is fair or unfair competition in that case. There may be some general principles elucidated at last that will be a guiding light for those men who seek advice and who wish to conduct their business lawfully, but, beyond that, the only way to decide what "unfair competition" is at last is by the decree of a court. Like all the cases which have gone to the Supreme Court, there will be a difference of opinion when you come to apply them to actual cases with different facts than those which were before the court when the decisions were rendered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in my own time I trust I may be permitted to occupy two or three minutes in saying a word on this subject without exciting the petulance of the junior Senator from New Hampshire.

I voted against the creation of the Federal Trade Commission, because I believed it was an unnecessary addition to our system, and that it would be an expensive institution before we got through with it. It was established, and I have voted in every instance, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, for such appropriations as have been asked for the conduct of that commission. I voted for the appropriation contained in this bill; and I think that, under the circumstances, the commission having been created and being in existence, it is entitled to a fair trial, and that liberal appropriations ought to be granted to it until that fair trial has been made. Hence, Mr. President, it will not do for any Senator to say that because I voted against the creation of this commission I am hostile to the work of the commission, for that is not true.

However, I have failed to discover that the commission has accomplished anything of importance as yet. I have read such reports as have come from it, including the one that was presented to-day, and I could not discover for the life of me that any elucidation of any controversy that was of consequence to the people of the United States had been made. But, however that may be, the commission has been in existence only a little over a year, and further time ought to be given to it to determine how important and necessary it may be in the line of work in which it is engaged.

Mr. President, as to the amendment which has been offered by the junior Senator from New Hampshire I have only a word to say. The junior Senator from New Hampshire suggested that, if larger salaries were given to the lawyers of the commission, certain others drawing small salaries would of necessity be dismissed, because it was not proposed to increase the total appropriation. It has been the custom in this body for Senators to make appeals for those who are drawing small salaries and not for those who are drawing large salaries, and I was quite surprised to hear that suggestion made by the mover of the amendment.

I turn to the Congressional Directory, and on page 287 I find the paragraph "Federal Trade Commission," and I find under a subhead "Legal department" the following:

> Board of review: Charles H. McDonald, chairman; Raymond B. Stevens, chief examiner; John Walsh, special counsel.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. If Raymond B. Stevens is the one who is commonly reputed to be the author of the old Stevens bill on resale prices?

Mr. GALLINGER. He is. Raymond B. Stevens practiced law in New Hampshire for two or three years, and I believe his compensation amounted to about $1,500 a year. At the end of that time he pulled down his sign, wrote a letter saying that no honest man could practice law, and he went to raising potatoes on his little farm, and made a failure of that. However, Mr. Stevens is on this commission, and I am not finding fault with that. He may be performing good service, and I hope he is.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if the distinguished counsel of the Federal Trade Commission is right, I inquire whether it would not make a considerable cleaning out of the Senate, if that idea were carried out, for there are a number of lawyers here?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to make any attack upon anyone in connection with this matter. I am seriously going to ask a question, and that is if the amount provided by this bill is allowed, and the limitation that no official shall receive more than $5,000 a year is changed, I take it for granted that these three gentlemen, who are now put down as members of the legal department, can all be given $7,500 per year, and that any number of experts, special attorneys, special examiners, and special agents, who are enumerated in this paragraph, can also be increased to the amount of $7,500 a year.

If the proposition were to give $7,500 a year or $10,000 a year to Mr. Gregory, a gentleman whom I do not know, but who is vouched for here by eminent lawyers as being distinguished in his profession, I certainly should not object. My impression is, Mr. President, inasmuch as Mr. Gregory's name does not appear under the title of "legal department" in the Federal Trade Commission, that Mr. Gregory is employed without reference to this limitation of salary under the title of "special attorney" or some other title which is found in that provision. Lawyers in the Senate have stated that that would be entirely proper and feasible to do, and I assume that it is, and that this commission, if it needs the services of a lawyer more distinguished than anyone that they have in their service at $5,000 a year, can go outside and employ anybody to represent their interests at such compensation as they choose to pay.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say. I trust that the limitation may not be removed from the law, and at the same time I believe that the Federal Trade Commission is abundantly protected under the provisions of existing law, which allow them to appoint distinguished counsel at a compensation much in excess of $5,000 a year if they choose to do so. That is my judgment; and believing that, I do not think we are going to do any harm to the commission by rejecting the amendment, while I think we would do harm to the interests of the Government if we permitted that commission to appoint any number of lawyers that they might choose to employ at the salary named in the amendment. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, my distinguished colleague disclaims any intention to inject personalities into this debate, but he has injected personalities into this debate. He has evidently felt injured because Mr. Raymond B. Stevens, of New Hampshire, is acting as one of the assistants to the Federal Trade Commission, and he makes some aspersions on Mr. Stevens as a lawyer. I wish to say, for the benefit of the Senate, that Mr. Stevens was elected to the New Hampshire Legislature in 1908. He was then farming in the little town of Landaff. He appeared in the legislature, and it soon became evident that he knew more about the problems of taxation and other public questions than any other member of that body. He was elected again in the following year, and that year, with an overwhelming Republican majority in the New Hampshire Legislature, Mr. Stevens, a Democrat, was made chairman of the ways and means committee of the New Hampshire Legislature, a compliment that I doubt has ever been bestowed on any other man in the United States—to take a man from the opposition and, because he overtops all the men in your own party so much that he is worthy of it, make him chairman of the ways and means committee of your own legislature.

Subsequently the Republican governor of New Hampshire employed Mr. Stevens with Mr. Brandeis as special counsel in the litigation and controversies that were going on with the Boston & Maine Railroad, and here Mr. Stevens made an even greater reputation as a lawyer, and he was paid the sort of compensation that is customary for such distinguished services.

In 1912 Mr. Stevens ran for Congress on the Democratic ticket. He also received the nomination of the Bull Moose Party for Congress. On the day he was elected to Congress by a large majority in a Republican district he was also elected to the New Hampshire Legislature. He went to the New Hampshire Legislature and served through its entire session, when he was made chairman of the special railroad committee to handle the great railroad questions that were then pending. He did not complete his duties until some time about the 1st of May. Then he came to Congress, and the Sergeant at Arms handed him a check for a thousand dollars for his services.

Mr. Stevens took the check and indorsed it back to the Sergeant at Arms, and kept just $40 for the two days' service he had rendered, returning $960. That is the sort of man Mr. Stevens is. He committed the grave offense of running against my distinguished colleague for the Senate in 1914, and he committed the graver offense of causing my distinguished colleague to run some 8,000 votes behind his ticket. The regular Republican majority against the Democratic ticket was 12,000, but I think the majority of my distinguished colleague against Mr. Stevens was something about 5,000. It was in that vicinity; I have not got the figures exactly in my mind. From that time on Mr. Stevens has been a marked man, so far as my colleague is concerned, but that has not prevented him from performing very valuable service in Congress and as one of the counsel for the Trade Commission. I say that because it is due to Mr. Stevens. I should not have mentioned his name if my colleague had not made some flings against him.

Now, in order that the record may be complete, I will say that out of the two hundred or more complaints that have been made to the Federal Trade Commission, all have been adjusted, or are in process of adjustment, without recourse to regular proceedings, except five. There are now pending before the commission five cases in which the Federal Trade Commission is acting as party plaintiff. They are these: Federal Trade Commission against the Abbott Co.; Federal Trade Commission against Godin Bros.; Federal Trade Commission against the Circle Silk Co.—and I happen to know what that was about; it involved the question of whether misbranding silks is unfair competition; Federal Trade Commission against the Shredded Wheat Co.; and Federal Trade Commission against the A. B. Dick Co., the last case arising under the Clayton Act and involving the question of tying contracts.

Mr. HARDWICK. I beg the Senator's pardon. Are those cases pending now before the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; in which the Federal Trade Commission makes the complaint. It tries the case, takes the evidence, and decides the facts.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is not really a party plaintiff and still tries the case?

Mr. HOLLIS. It takes that form.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, that is merely a form, I think. The Federal Trade Commission acts judicially, does it not?

Mr. HOLLIS. The result will be that the parties complaining and the parties complained against will have a chance to introduce their evidence. The facts will be found——

Mr. HARDWICK. And the commission, instead of being a party plaintiff——

Mr. HOLLIS. Allow me to finish.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me finish my question, please, or I would rather not put it at all.

Mr. HOLLIS. Very well.

Mr. HARDWICK. The commission is not a party plaintiff, really, although it may be technically so designated.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have said so.

Mr. HARDWICK. The commission is the judge?

Mr. HOLLIS. I have said so.

Mr. HARDWICK. I thought the Senator said that the commission was the party plaintiff.

Mr. HOLLIS. I say that they are the party plaintiff on the record, and they are to decide the case. They make the complaint, and the name of the case is as I have stated. The complaining party makes his proof; the party complained against makes his proof; the Federal Trade Commission will render its decision and decide the facts and make an order. If that order is not obeyed, it will then apply to the United States court to enforce the order.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will yield just one more time, I will let him alone.

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Federal Trade Commission, then, is not both the party plaintiff and the judge, is it?

Mr. HOLLIS. It is the party plaintiff on the record, but it is really the judge.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. Nominally, it may appear that way; but really it is the judge, and it has nothing to do with prosecuting the case?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is very true, just as the Attorney General frequently brings proceedings at the relation of some private party. The suit is brought in the name of the Attorney General, who is the legal representative of the State or of the Nation, at the relation of some private party.

Mr. HARDWICK. But that is nominal only. Really, the Federal Trade Commission is the judge?

Mr. HOLLIS. That is what I said.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my colleague suggested that I disclaimed any purpose of introducing personalities into this debate. It is not my habit to do that. The Senator from Illinois propounded a question about Mr. Stevens and I stated one or two facts about him.

The truth is that Mr. Stevens was a failure as a lawyer in New Hampshire. Everybody knows that. That he made some reputation in conjunction with the Bull Moose Party in the legislature is true, and that he was elected to Congress by the combined votes of those two parties is likewise true; but the idea that that makes him a distinguished lawyer certainly would hardly be entertained by anybody who knows his record.

I care nothing about Mr. Stevens, however. He did run against me for the Senate and was beaten. My colleague, almost before he had his seat warmed in the Senate, standing over there, challenged me to run for reelection to the Senate, and he selected Mr. Stevens as my competitor. I had not any intention of being a candidate for reelection at that time; but under the challenge I did take the chance of running, and I got substantially as many votes as the two Republican Members of Congress from my State got combined. That I did not get as many votes as the governor got is simply due to the fact that the governor was supported by two parties and I only by one. Mr. Stevens also had the support of two parties and I only had the support of one. But when my colleague says that I ran 8,000 behind the governor he misstates the figures by just about 2,000, and I wish he would go to the record and correct the statement he has made.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say. I hope Mr. Stevens is doing good work for this commission. I do not think he is worth $7,500; I do not think he is worth $5,000 as a lawyer. I apprehend that if this change is made, however, Mr. Stevens will go on the pay roll at $7,500 a year, because there will be nothing to prevent it. Whether or not that is in contemplation I do not absolutely know, but I feel sure it ought not to happen.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I have here the vote cast in New Hampshire in the fall of 1914. I will put it in the RECORD:

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, reference has just been made by the two Senators from New Hampshire to the influence of the Bull Moose Party upon the election in that State in 1914. Inasmuch as that party yesterday became a reminiscence, I am impelled to remind the Senate that it was a formidable protest against modern Republican leadership and policy. It was born of the surrender of party machinery and control to power and privilege. Its platform declared that "the conscience of the people in a time of grave national problems has called into being a new party, born of the Nation's awakened sense of injustice." Its founders "dedicated themselves to the fulfillment of the duty laid upon them by their fathers to maintain that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, whose foundations they laid." It announced that "behind the ostensible government sits enthroned an invisible government, owing no allegiance and acknowledging no responsibility to the people," and that to destroy the invisible government was the first task of the statesmanship of the day. It charged that the Republican Party had deliberately betrayed its trust and the Democratic Party was fatally incompetent. Therefore, "unhampered by tradition, uncorrupted by power, and undismayed by the magnitude of the task, the new party offers itself as the instrument of the people to sweep away old abuses, to build a new and nobler Commonwealth."

This party signalized its purpose by the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt for the Presidency, albeit he had filled that great office for two successive terms. It waged a vigorous campaign and polled a popular vote far in excess of its Republican opponent. It was second only to the victorious Democracy and bade fair to become that party's only formidable rival. By action and assurance its membership had left the Republican Party for all time, but had taken with them all for which that party had been organized to accomplish and which it had abandoned.

No man can doubt the earnest purpose and integrity of the men and women who formed this new organization, nor the genuineness of the zeal and devotion which they brought to the support of their ticket. For their candidate they had all the enthusiasm and loyalty of the old crusaders. They regarded him as the embodiment of their own virtues and convictions, the man of the hour, invested with the duty and possessing the courage to restore the Republic to the custody of the people. They were not cast down by their first defeat. The sunshine patriot who joined them with the spirit of adventure had fallen by the wayside, but those of the faith were steadfast. With the militant spirit of 1912, they reassembled last June and again placed their standard in the old familiar hands. And he has cast it aside. Their idol is shattered and they are leaderless.

This great party, so auspiciously launched and so splendidly equipped, is a thing of the past. It has been destroyed by the man to whom its destiny was intrusted. He betrayed and then asphyxiated it.

The Behemoth of the Bull Moose is the greatest opportunist of the race. What he calls principles are belated impulses. They are not spontaneous, for they lag behind that popular sentiment which they pretend to create. What he calls convictions are the platitudes of political morality. They justify the sneer of Mr. Reed that he never saw a man so enthusiastic over the discovery of the Ten Commandments. What he calls loyalty is that blind devotion of the multitude who will follow whither he may lead, however tortuous the course. This man had the largest following of his generation. It was a political army which idolized its commander. But he has sought to deliver it over to its enemies, and he is himself a fugitive from Armageddon.

He has used his party solely for his own political advancement. He has mouthed their platform vociferously only when his political fortunes demanded it. He led his forces against the enemy with splendid courage four years ago and beat it to its knees. Hoping to command that enemy in 1916, he opened negotiations and parleyed unremittingly for a merger of the armies with himself as commander in chief. His efforts failing totally, he has unconditionally surrendered to his erstwhile foe and beseeches his troops to accept such clemency as may be offered. And this model Christian soldier has donned the old garb of Republican service, pronounced his adhesion to every practice he denounced in 1912, acknowledged the overlordship of the bosses he then repudiated, and is once more the votary of invisible government. History records no such apostasy of a statesman, no such betrayal of a great political movement by its acknowledged leader, no such surrender of an army by its commander.

Yet he may truthfully aver that he made upon his party the experiment of one of its conspicuous doctrines. He aided in its initiation and in the campaign which followed. He then referred it, with himself, to the final judgment of the old guard, which sometimes surrenders but never dies. He has now recalled it.

The referendum and recall was skillfully engineered by the second in command, Mr. George W. Perkins. This multimillionaire, whose vast fortune was gathered from the rich harvest of consolidation, whose seed was sown in the good old days of McKinley, whose associations are all with invisible government, and whose interests are inseparable from everything which the Progressive Party condemns, has from that party's inception been the connecting link between Mr. Roosevelt and the powers that prey. Through this association he long ago became dominant with the Progressives, who, curiously enough, saw no inconsistency in this unnatural and contradictory situation. He has had no purpose for three years other than to return the wayward Progressives to the old Republican fold. He has had the candor to say so. True, he hoped and endeavored to do so by placing Mr. Roosevelt at the head of the new consolidation, but he intended to do it anyhow. That he had the encouragement of Mr. Roosevelt is now apparent. That his purpose was not clear to the minor Progressive leaders is incredible. He has performed his task. Mr. Roosevelt is not the chief. He is a sympathetic prisoner, at liberty on his own recognizance, and the old machine is in the saddle to stay. It would not be fair to Mr. Perkins to compare him with Judas, for he is a much better man. If Judas, with the connivance of the Savior, had betrayed the apostles to their enemies, the analogy would be complete.

But, Mr. President, it is an old and homely proverb that you can lead a horse to the trough, but you can not make him drink. Your genuine Progressive, who turned his back upon the Republican Party for its departure from its ancient ways and who knows that it has neither repented nor returned, can not be delivered like a bond slave to a new master. He can not and will not stultify himself by turning like the dog to his vomit again. He denounced the Democratic Party in 1912 as fatally incompetent, but he knows better now. He sees many of his own principles upon the statute book in 1916 placed there by its legislation. He finds the Democratic platform of 1916 to be largely a transcript of his own, and he realizes that in this Republic two parties professing the same purposes can not endure. He contrasts the patient dignity and serene courage of Woodrow Wilson with the raucous clamor and selfish inconsistency of Theodore Roosevelt. He knows that Mr. Wilson's defeat means a long farewell to all for which Progressivism stands, and he will take his place and cast his fortunes with the cause of Democracy. He will there find a permanent and congenial home, undisturbed by the consuming ambitions of an opportunist leader, eager to secure his own advancement by promoting his party principles, and equally ready to betray them as his interests may require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the name of Mr. ASHURST, and he voted "yea."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, before this vote is cast there is a matter that I should like to understand definitely. I had the impression, from the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], that the amendment which he proposes will not, in the aggregate, increase the appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission, but will simply raise some and reduce others. Is that correct?

Mr. HOLLIS. It will not increase the aggregate a dollar, but it leaves to the——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, is this question open for debate now?

Mr. GALLINGER. There has been a response to the roll call.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call is in progress.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. As he is not in the Chamber, and I do not know how he stands on this question, I will withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). My pair, the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], not having voted, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]; but I am just informed that if he were present and at liberty to vote he would vote "nay" upon the pending proposition. I desire to vote the same way, and regard myself as released from my pair for that reason. I vote "nay."

The roll was concluded.

Mr. JAMES. I transfer the general pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], but I understand that if he were present he would vote as I would. I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is absent; but in view of the statement made by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TAGGART] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SAULSBURY (after having voted in the affirmative). I neglected to announce that although I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] I was at liberty to vote upon this measure, because he thought he would vote the same way as I, and told me so.

Mr. DU PONT. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] to the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 42, as follows:

So Mr. HOLLIS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLLIS. I stated at the outset that if any amendments were adopted increasing the appropriation I would have the amounts deducted. We have now added through my amendment $5,500 to the first paragraph, and I therefore move that on page 57, line 8, "$250,000" be stricken out and "$244,500" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that action has already been taken by the Senate on that.

Mr. HOLLIS. It was not done formally. It was done on the preceding paragraph. I am now talking of page 57, line 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been done.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have one other amendment to offer. In line 19, page 57, I move to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$20,000." In order that the total be not increased if this amendment is adopted, I shall ask to have "$15,000" in line 21 stricken out and "$10,000" inserted, because the commission feel that they can get along with $10,000 for fees and mileage, but they can not get along with $15,000 for rent. The Trade Commission has had quarters, largely cramped, in the building occupied by the Department of Commerce. It will be impossible for them to remain there longer. Their estimate of $20,000 is based upon a rental of 50 cents per square foot. That is the lowest charge, I am informed, paid by any department. The Secretary of Commerce pays 35 cents a foot for office space, but 19 cents is added for lighting, heating, and elevator service. The 50 cents a foot estimated was to include lighting, heating, and elevator service. The Interstate Commerce Commission pays from 85 cents to $1.10 a foot. It seems to me reasonable, since this amendment will not increase the sum total, that the commission should be allowed to have their estimate stand. I therefore submit the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 19, strike out "$15,000" and insert "$20,000."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I expressed my views regarding the creation of this Trade Commission, the powers sought to be conferred upon it, so fully when the bill was before Congress that I do not want now to take the time of the Senate to discuss further those questions. It is enough to say that the Senate and House of Representatives did create the commission, and did undertake to confer upon it the extraordinary powers that it assumed to exercise. I am not therefore inclined in the least to attempt to cut off liberal appropriations for this commission, because having been created I want to see it have full opportunity to demonstrate whether it is to be an effective instrumentality for good.

But, Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the remarkable character of the appropriation that is embraced in the $250,000 item. I call attention to it because I do not believe it is safe legislation. While I am not going to ask to change it I want to register my protest against it.

I wish to say by way of preliminary that on yesterday I found many economists in the Senate. It was proposed to vote just four times the amount named here in this one item, a little over twice the amount that is carried in the appropriation for this one board or commission. It was proposed to vote for the dependent families of soldiers a little over twice the amount carried by the appropriation for this one commission that we have been informed by the author of the commission, its minister, spokesman, and high priest, upon the floor of the Senate to-day has not yet really got into action.

When the bill to relieve the families of the gallant men who are going forth to fight the battles of the country was before the Senate we found many economists who were carefully counting the dollars of the Government and who were exceedingly anxious that not a single dollar should get away if peradventure it might land in the pocket of the indigent wife or child of a soldier.

Now, I call attention to the loose and easy way, the airy and fanciful manner, in which we can dispose of shekels for other purposes. Notice the language:

> For compensation, travel expense, and per diem in lieu of subsistence at the rate of $4, of such special attorneys, special experts, special examiners, special agents, clerks, and other employees as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying on the work of said commission; the travel expense and per diem in lieu of subsistence to the commissioners and other employees under their orders in making any investigation or upon official business in any other places than in the city of Washington; no salary shall be paid hereunder exceeding the rate of $5,000 per annum; $250,000.

Mr. President, under that bill the commission, if it sees fit, can pay every one of its employees $5,000 a year and $4 a day for subsistence. It does not need to employ a single clerk at a salary of less than $5,000 a year. It can employ any kind of man; it can employ any kind of lady it wants to and pay them $5,000 a year. The only limit is that it shall not spend more than a quarter of a million dollars in that particular way.

But there is appropriated in addition $154,080, and then there are three $15,000 items. I say that Congress, in my humble judgment, ought not to appropriate money in that loose way. There ought to be some limitation upon the number of attorneys. There ought to be some limitation upon the number of clerks. There ought to be some limitation upon the number of experts or alleged experts or investigators. There ought to be some limitation upon the salaries that are paid to these different classes of people. It is not a proper form of appropriation. It is a loose, reckless, and extravagant form of appropriation. If it is persisted in, it will, to use a very old and homely expression, "come home to roost."

It seems to me that the Federal Trade Commission, if it is in an experimental stage, ought to proceed somewhat slowly in the employment of help. It seems to me at least that Congress ought not to give them the right to employ as many $5,000 a year clerks as they want to. Under the bill as it is drawn they can hire an ordinary typewriter girl and pay her $5,000 a year. They could go out and get any of their relatives or friends or favorites and pay them $5,000 a year. That kind of appropriation it strikes me is indefensible, and I would move to cut the appropriation down and change it entirely except for the fact that it would be claimed that I was fighting the Federal Trade Commission.

But I want to make one reply to the inquiry of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. He asked the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] when he was on the floor whether it was possible that the Senator meant to say that the Federal Trade Commission was both the complainant and the judge in certain cases. If the Senator from Georgia will turn back to the bill and apply his very excellent legal mind to its phraseology, he will understand at once that that was the very purpose of the act; that the commission is expressly authorized to be prosecutor, to be complainant, to be judge, to be jury, to be everything.

Mr. HARDWICK. Executioner included?

Mr. REED. Executioner, except that before they can impose certain penalties they may have to go to the court, and even there their decision is taken as almost conclusive upon the court on all questions of fact.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon an interruption there——

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not want to delay this measure, because I am anxious to get back to the Post Office appropriation bill, but does the Senator take that language to mean that? I referred to the act this morning since the discussion. The Federal Trade Commission is only nominally the party complainant; it really occupies a judicial or quasi-judicial position.

Mr. REED. Oh, no. When the debates were on and we were creating this strange body it was expressly stated as one of the peculiar virtues of the organization that it engaged upon the business of the country, and having discovered where there was evil, it could file the charge it would bring the culprit before it; it would rectify the evil.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. I revive in the mind of the able Senator from Missouri that we were antagonists concerning the construction of the sentences, clauses, and phraseology of those provisions to which he is now alluding. But I ask the Senator now if he does not recall that we merely copied the provisions that apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission in their power to initiate charges of wrong and to prosecute them? I ask the Senator does he now think there is any different power in the Trade Commission than is conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission in similar undertakings?

Mr. REED. Oh, yes. I have tried to make it plain, in the numerous colloquys on the floor of the Senate, that the Federal Trade Commission, which its friends constantly tried to put under the wing of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is an entirely different body. The Interstate Commerce Commission is charged, after all, with what is largely a mathematical question. It ascertains the fair and reasonable cost or value of railroad property. It ascertains what rates must be paid in order to pay a fair income upon that property. It also has jurisdiction of a regulatory kind with reference to certain matters pertaining merely to the business of transportation. It is possessed of duties coming within a narrow compass, whereas this body in its jurisdiction is as extensive as the business of the country itself, and its right, if, indeed, the bill be sound, is to pry into every sort of deal between man and man so long as those deals have any relation to interstate commerce.

But I only threw in my remark to make clear what seemed to be a doubt in the mind of the Senator from Georgia that it was not only possible but that it was the fact that the Federal Trade Commission does have the right to initiate proceedings. I do not, however, make any point on that with reference to this bill. I simply made it in the interest of clearing up a matter that seemed to be left a little obscure.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator will allow me, addressing myself to the particular point he makes in the appropriation, may I ask the Senator is not the provision concerning the employment of these aids, lawyers, attorneys, likewise a mere repetition of similar provisions allowing assistants to the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. REED. I do not know; but if it is a repetition, then we are proceeding very loosely with the Interstate Commerce Commission. That body has the reputation for great virtue, and it may be that there have been certain powers conferred upon it and certain discretion that have been loosely conferred. I notice for some reason that the advocates of the Federal Trade Commission always try to run under the skirts of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I never found an advocate of the Interstate Commerce Commission seeking refuge behind the Trade Commission, and until that body shall have done something more than it has up to this day you will find no respectable division of the Government undertaking to get behind it and to put it forward as a type.

Mr. LEWIS. I may say, Mr. President, to the Senator my viewpoint has been that the reason why the Federal Trade Commission in the bill of its inauguration tried to conform to the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission was because that having been organized and having in many of its provisions been passed upon by the court, it established a precedent which was regarded as already ascertained as a legal case, and as being probably the only proper guide the commission had. That was really the reason for emulating the provisions of the interstate-commerce law. Such really was the intention when I, as a member of the committee, sought to formulate much of the Federal Trade Commission provisions after the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. REED. But, Mr. President, coming back to this method of appropriation, I do not intend to delay the Senate, but I make my solemn protest against this kind of appropriations. With all due respect to the Committee on Appropriations I hope that when the next bill comes before us it will be brought in here in a different form.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. As a matter of principle I think the Senator from Missouri is right about the bulk appropriations, but I ask him if it be not true that the practice that has been followed with respect to the Federal Trade Commission is a general practice, and many of the appropriations in this bill involve the same idea. The Interstate Commerce Commission is given a bulk sum. The Department of Justice is given a bulk sum, with no greater limitations upon its expenditures than are found in the appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. REED. Is not the Senator mistaken?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it is not fair for the Senator from Missouri not to attach some of the censure to other departments of the Government as well.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator is in error in regard to the Department of Justice.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let us see.

Mr. REED. Just one moment. It is true it will appear that way in this bill, but I ask the Senator if it is not true that the salary of substantially every Assistant Attorney General is fixed by some other statute, and the salaries of the United States district attorneys are fixed, the salaries of the United States marshalls, so while there may be a lump sum carried in the bill other sections of the law do specify the salary; whereas in the matter of the Federal Trade Commission with the exception of the commissioners themselves I think there is no statutory regulation.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is entirely mistaken, I will say.

Mr. CUMMINS. I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the point which I had in mind as to the Department of Justice. On page 135 we find a paragraph, of which I will read a part:

Enforcement of antitrust laws: For the enforcement of antitrust laws, including not exceeding $15,000 for salaries of necessary employees at the seat of government, $250,000.

Then, with respect to the Interstate Commerce Commission, I find, on page 54, the following:

To further enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce compliance with section 20 of the act to regulate commerce as amended by the act approved June 29, 1906, including the employment of necessary special agents or examiners, $300,000.

I might recite several other paragraphs of the same kind.

Now, the criticism of the Senator from Missouri is well founded. It is fundamentally wrong to pursue that practice, but I rose simply to call to his attention the fact that it is pursued, with respect to substantially every department of the Government.

Mr. REED. I think that a part of the Senator's statement is accurate; I think a part of it is inaccurate. I have already said the salary of nearly all the employees of the Department of Justice is fixed by law. There is always, of course, a lump appropriation to cover contingencies and to cover extra employees. I agree with the Senator from Iowa that we have been too loose in many of these appropriations. I think that probably the Senator from Iowa is accurate in citing the instance of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but again I say that is no argument for this kind of an appropriation. The fact that we have dealt loosely for some time with some other departments of the Government affords no reason for doing it again.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I heartily agree with the Senator, and we all agree, that there ought to be a general improvement in the method of legislation; but what strikes us as a little peculiar is why the Senator from Missouri sought out this particular appropriation as the subject of comment.

Mr. REED. The reason is that when I came into the Senate this item was up for consideration. I read it, and I read it with some degree of astonishment. I probably would not have noticed it had it not been for the effort to raise the salary to $7,500, which attracted my attention to the language.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me, the question——

Mr. REED. If you will let me finish—it struck me then, as it does now, that here is a new board being established. When we created that board there was a limitation upon the salaries that could be paid by it. It was provided that no salary should be more than a certain amount. I recall that, and I do not think my recollection can possibly be in error. Now, I come here and find an appropriation bill without any limitation except the $5,000 limitation, and it struck me that we were dealing rather generously and rather loosely with the proposition.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, because I thought the just estimate that ought to be put upon the work of the Federal Trade Commission might suffer somewhat by reason of the colloquy between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Georgia, I merely desire to ask the Senator from Missouri, in behalf of the Public Utilities Commission, if we have not such a commission?

Mr. REED. We have.

Mr. WALSH. Does that Public Utilities Commission have the authority to initiate just rates on its own account?

Mr. REED. I think it investigates the question of rates.

Mr. WALSH. If it finds that rates are presumably unjust it may proceed to correct them. In that case it would be in a certain sense complainant and judge at one and the same time.

Mr. REED. Yes, in one sense, yet not in the same sense as appears here, because, as I have undertaken to show, the question was entirely different.

I simply answered the question of the Senator from Georgia in the interest of the verities. There is no doubt the Federal Trade Commission can initiate, there is no doubt that it can then prosecute, there is no doubt that it can then adjudge. Therefore I did not say it should not have those powers. I wanted to leave it perfectly clear that they did have them. However, as to the propriety of it, that is another question, and I do not care to go into it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator is mistaken about some of the employees. There is the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which fixes the salaries of all clerks appointed under the civil service. I have been fighting these lump-sum appropriations for 10 years, and we in the committee have succeeded in taking them away in many cases. In the other cases we have asked that they submit a list of the officers and their salaries, so that we can provide for them. But here comes a department asking, say, $100,000 to do this and to do that, and we are not able to fix the salaries unless they send us a list. We had no list for this commission, but we expect to get it and to fix their salaries as their salaries ought to be fixed.

I am opposed to lump sums, and I am sorry there was no report to the Senate so that we could strike out these lump sums. But some lump-sum appropriations are necessary. That is the case where experts are employed; and you do not know, when you want an expert in the Interstate Commerce Commission or in this commission, what you have to pay him. You have to send and get him and to pay what he asks. There must be some lump-sum appropriations, but I agree with the Senator from Missouri that the salaries ought to be fixed in the bill.

Mr. REED. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that the Federal Trade Commission had no list to submit?

Mr. OVERMAN. I said that we have no list now. We have a list of the clerks provided for in the legislative appropriation bill. I understand that applies principally to the Bureau of Corporations, which, as the Senator knows, was transferred from the old Department of Commerce to the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator remember whether the salaries to be paid to the employees of the Federal Trade Commission were fixed in the bill creating the commission?

Mr. OVERMAN. That was fixed in the act. I think it is $10,000 that is paid to each member of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. REED. But not the salaries of the board—the salaries of their employees?

Mr. OVERMAN. Those were not fixed.

Mr. REED. Was it not stated that the salaries should not exceed a certain amount?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not recollect whether that was the case or not.

Mr. REED. I think it was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 21, strike out $15,000 and insert in lieu thereof $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a document giving a brief résumé of the recent activities of the Federal Trade Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BRIEF MEMORANDA OF RECENT ACTIVITIES OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

1. Standard Oil and gasoline: The investigation of gasoline prices has proceeded with remarkable rapidity and thoroughness. Public hearings have been held, and the interests of the public protected. Probably decrease in the price of gasoline. Report in a very short time.

2. Price of print paper: Investigation, pursuant to Senate resolution, being made into the price of print paper.

3. Increase in cost of anthracite coal: Under Senate resolution the Trade Commission is now investigating the price of anthracite coal to determine whether the increase has been justified by the increase in wages.

All three of the above are investigations that are conducted in a thorough and intensive manner, in the interest of the public.

Many more economic investigations are in progress.

Sherman law dissolution: In the Corn Products case, Federal Judge Hand, in a decision handed down Saturday, sustained the contention of the Government and referred the matter of the drafting of a decree of dissolution to the Federal Trade Commission, as master in chancery.

Conference rulings: These rulings are not new in Government activity. The Interstate Commerce Commission has pursued this practice since 1907, with the greatest success. It has resulted in relief to the business community, and has led to the effective administration of the law in an expeditious and speedy manner. The interests of the public have been protected, and the facilities of business have not been impeded. It was by reason of the success which the Interstate Commerce Commission had—having issued some 400 rulings in the last 10 years—that the Federal Trade Commission adopted this plan.

Informal complaints: Complaints of unfair competition are handled with a view to getting the speediest and best relief for the public. Many cases have been settled without going into the courts, saving, perhaps, the existence itself of some of the smaller competitors.

Formal complaints: Formal complaints have been issued, charging unfair methods of competition against three defendants. They are addressed to offenses such as the seduction of employees, bribery of employees, stealing of trade secrets, and other similar practices designed to lessen competition and tending to create a monopoly.

Both in its quasi judicial function and in the constructive, economic function, the Federal Trade Commission, inside of 15 months, has contributed substantially, as above briefly outlined, to the functions for which it was designed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I will not take the time to reopen the matter, but I will say that I had no idea that question was being put, and I do not think any other Senator had. The vote was taken under such circumstances that, although I was watching for it, I had not the slightest idea that it was to be taken then. I had intended to say something on the subject, and had a lot of material before me regarding it; but I will let it go, and we shall take the matter up in conference.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $500,000 made in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved August 1, 1914, for a building to install the Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, located and planned and of such a permanent character as will make it available and useful for military purposes of the United States after the close of said exposition and shall be of such general plan and design and in such location as shall be approved by the Secretary of War, is hereby reappropriated for the construction in said Presidio of San Francisco, Cal., of such permanent barracks and quarters and other buildings and repairs to buildings as shall be approved by the Secretary of War. All of said buildings shall be erected under the authority of the Secretary of War, by contract or otherwise as he may direct.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I desire to make the point of order against the amendment, that it is plain legislation. It is for an item entirely without estimate. Neither the Senate nor the Committee on Appropriations have any knowledge about it, except what is stated by the Senator from California from his seat in the Senate. The amendment is plainly subject to the point of order.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I do not think the point of order is well taken, for the reason stated, because I have in my hand an estimate transmitted by the War Department. It seems that the Committee on Appropriations met unexpectedly, and neither I nor any other Senator had an opportunity to present the several matters which interested us. We have therefore been relegated to the floor of the Chamber.

I desire to say that the Representative in the other House, sitting for the city of San Francisco, is the victim of an unfortunate accident, which has also prevented his activities.

This appropriation was made two years ago by the Congress appropriating $500,000 for the purpose of constructing a building on the Presidio of San Francisco for the joint uses of the military and the exposition. It was a matter very difficult to reconcile. Therefore the building was not constructed at all, although the military need was manifest. We have in the Treasury now the balance of that appropriation, because out of the $500,000 authorized, $50,000 had been used by and under the direction of the War Department for the entertainment of guests. So it is not a new appropriation. It is the reappropriating of an amount that has already been provided for this very purpose, and because it was not practicable to construct an exposition building that would also serve the purpose of the Army the money was not then employed.

As to the need of this building, I merely desire to say that the Presidio of San Francisco is the most important in many respects of all of our military posts. It contains 1,500 acres of land on the Bay of San Francisco within the city of San Francisco, which is there available for the Government. The condition of the buildings there is such as to constitute what might be called a national disgrace. I have here under date of March 3, 1914, a letter from Gen. Pershing, the general now at the front, who is perfectly familiar with this department, of which he was the commanding general, who writes:

1. A recent inspection of the barracks and quarters, known as the East and West Cantonments, now occupied by the Sixth and Twelfth Regiments of Infantry, has brought out the fact that these buildings are in such a dilapidated condition that they are almost beyond repair and should be removed, and new buildings erected in their stead as early as practicable.

2. The records show that these groups of frame buildings were hurriedly and roughly put up to accommodate the volunteer regiments, returning from and going to the Philippine Islands during the period 1898–1901. The buildings were never intended for permanent use in any sense and were constructed in the most temporary fashion, with the expectation that as soon as the emergency which prompted their erection should have passed the lumber in them would be used for other purposes.

3. The present tumbledown condition of these buildings can hardly be described—

And so forth. Gen. Pershing adds:

4. * * * I have never seen worse looking quarters for soldiers in all my experience in the Army. I visited many of the stations of troops abroad in Europe and Japan, and I have never seen anything like this.

5. The subject of providing proper buildings for the Infantry of the Presidio was first considered by the department commander himself, September, 1912, when he appointed a board of officers to thoroughly examine the buildings of the post and submit a report and recommendation as to the new buildings required. In its report the board recommended that all the buildings above referred to be condemned and destroyed as unserviceable, and recommended the construction of new and suitable barracks and quarters in their stead. This report was used as the basis of action on the part of the department commander.

6. Plans were perfected to carry out these very necessary improvements, and the whole scheme met with the approval of the War Department. But so far only one concrete barrack building to accommodate a battalion of Infantry has been erected, although about one year and a half have elapsed since the department commander invited attention to the urgency of their construction. * * *

7. New buildings are necessary and must be built within a year or two.

Congress did undertake in 1914 to appropriate money. The commanding general recommended the appropriation of $1,631,000, and the War Department allotted $800,000. The Presidio received for buildings $91,000 and for grounds $80,000, a difference between the allotment fixed by the War Department and the amount actually received of $629,000, which was diverted to some other posts. There was no appropriation made for the Presidio in words, but in the committee it was understood that he $800,000 should be allotted to the Presidio, and it was so understood by the War Department.

In answer to the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] I desire to say that I have in my hand, under date of May 16, 1916, transmitted by the Secretary of War, a statement as to the needs of this public work, with which I shall not cumber the RECORD by reading in extenso, but of which I will read the concluding part:

Should $450,000—

The amount asked for in this amendment—

be made available, it would be utilized in building two permanent concrete barracks like the one already existing, each to accommodate a battalion. Barracks of similar type, but smaller, could be built for a headquarters company and a band. It is thought that these battalion barracks would cost approximately $130,000 each. This is about 10 per cent more than the cost of the existing concrete building, owing to increased cost of material and labor. The headquarters and machine-gun company barracks would cost approximately $35,000 and $25,000. This would make the total cost of completing permanent accommodations for one regiment $320,000, leaving $130,000 which could be utilized to continue the permanent construction of barracks, quarters, storehouses, or any other necessary buildings as contemplated to complete this post along the general lines recommended by board convened by the department commander under date of August 26, 1915.

Should this work be done, it would not necessarily mean that the money now being spent to repair and remodel the present wooden barracks would be thrown away, for the reason that the old buildings could be retained and utilized for any possible concentration of troops. Should there be any material increase of the Army as the result of pending legislation—the old barracks could be utilized to good advantage. Owing to the heavy demands for funds to provide shelter for troops and animals on the Mexican border it has been necessary to utilize practically all the savings on work done at this post during the current fiscal year, and it is expected that the small balance now on hand will soon be required for the additional troops ordered to the border. Therefore the sum named above can be readily used to advantage to continue improvements at the Presidio.

This is signed by Henry G. Sharpe, brigadier general, Quartermaster's Corps, Acting Quartermaster General.

Mr. President, the conditions are extraordinary. When Congress appropriated $500,000 two years ago, with the expectation of having it used for a permanent military building in the Presidio, there was no such necessity as there is to-day. We have increased the number of our troops. The post of the Presidio is second, perhaps, only to that of Governors Island, the most important post in the country. The danger of this country is on the border and on the Pacific, and there must always be a concentration of troops there.

I have shown you that the quarters for the men are so bad that they have no life in them, nor can they stand up long, and they have been subjected to the condemnation of an expert officer, who says that never in his military experience, at home or abroad, has he seen such quarters for soldiers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is not a question at all as to whether the building is needed. What was the document which the Senator from California was reading, signed by Gen. Sharpe?

Mr. PHELAN. As I stated, the Representative representing San Francisco, Mr. KAHN, has met with an accident, and, therefore, could not present this matter to the House, and has handed me this document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Merely to enable the Chair to rule intelligently—not on the question of the right or the wrong of the proposition, not on the question of the necessity of the appropriation, but upon the point of order raised by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]—the Chair wants to know from what document the Senator from California was reading? Is it a document which has been filed with the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, it is a document which was sent to the committee of the other House through Mr. KAHN, who is the ranking Republican member of the Military Affairs Committee, by the private secretary of the Secretary of War. I will read the letter:

THE SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, May 16, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. KAHN——

The VICE PRESIDENT. That does not answer the question. The letter is not addressed to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, and the point of order is that no estimate has been made for the proposed improvement of the Presidio. The Chair is trying to ascertain whether or not there is an estimate in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I have the official Book of Estimates before me, and there is no word about this item. The law requires that the estimates shall go to the Secretary of the Treasury and be certified by him to Congress. That certification is before me, and this item is not alluded to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There can not be any doubt then that the——

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia allow me a few words before pressing his point of order?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am trying to save time. The amendment is so manifestly and plainly out of order that I can not see why the time of the Senate should be taken up in discussing it.

Mr. WORKS. It may be proper that I should say something about the conditions, and I should be glad to have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say also, before the Senator from California proceeds, that there is an estimate from the War Department for two million dollars and upward for the construction of barracks and quarters for soldiers. That has not been enacted into law, and that estimate from the War Department is in the Book of Estimates and has been submitted to us through the Secretary of the Treasury. It covers just such purposes as the one contemplated by the amendment of the Senator from California. Such items belong in the Army appropriation bill and not on this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] desirous of addressing the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. WORKS. Not at all, Mr. President. I only wanted to say a few words regarding the merits of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then it is the duty of the Chair to sustain the point of order.

Mr. WORKS. Of course if the Senator insists on the point of order, I am out of order undoubtedly.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I understand the Chair has ruled that the amendment at this time is out of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has so ruled.

Mr. PHELAN. I had construed the letter of the Secretary of War as being a recommendation. If it is not out of order, I shall seek confirmation of that and resubmit it to the Senate to-morrow. I desire to submit another amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, we might as well ascertain about these things first as last. The Chair does not believe under the law that a Senator can go and get an estimate and use it on the floor of the Senate in violation of the rules of the Senate. The Chair believes the estimate must go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to say that I was not intending to controvert the ruling of the Chair at all.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I offer another amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 126, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is authorized to expend in the purchase of such private holdings in the park as in his judgment are desirable for the better administration of the reservation, $50,000.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, stating that the most important grove of big trees in the Sequoia National Forest is imperiled by reason of the fact that the owners are about to cut the timber, and the only way the department has had to restrain the rapacity of the owners was to deny them a right of way through the reservation, and that is now conceded to be without authority of law. The private holdings will cost $70,000, of which $20,000 is to be subscribed by private parties interested in the preservation of the trees. Therefore this appropriation of $50,000 is asked for in the sundry civil bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. I have one more amendment which I desire to offer. I send the amendment to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 125, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "$700" and insert "$1,000," so as to read:

Yosemite National Park, Cal.: For protection and improvement, construction and repair of bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads other than toll roads; including, not exceeding $500 for maintenance and repair of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for use of the supervisor and employees in connection with general park work, not exceeding $1,000 for a motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicle for the use of the supervisor in inspection and other park work.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to that amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to offer, at the request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], the amendment which I send to the desk. The amendment was considered by the Committee on the Library and was approved of by them. In connection with it, Mr. President, I wish to have placed in the RECORD as a foreword a letter written by Col. Harts, the secretary and executive officer of the Commission of Fine Arts, to me as chairman of the Committee on the Library.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS,
Washington, D. C., May 9, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: A short while ago I received a memorandum from the clerk to the Senate Committee on the Library giving an extract from the minutes of the meeting of that committee held February 22 last, to the effect that a subcommittee had been appointed to draw up an amendment to the sundry civil bill appropriating $15,000 for the expenses of the Commission of Fine Arts. It has been a great satisfaction to the members of the commission to learn of this recognition of a situation that has become quite serious in connection with the proper and expeditious execution of their duties.

Since receiving this memorandum I have felt that I should place before your committee a statement regarding the commission and its work for consideration in connection with the proposed amendment, and I am therefore taking the liberty of submitting the following full and frank statement of facts. I should add that I am writing this letter without the knowledge of the members of the commission.

The National Commission of Fine Arts is now 6 years old, having been created by act of Congress approved May 17, 1910. This act marked a distinct step forward by the Government, since it was the first time that the Congress of the United States ever formally recognized the fine arts. It was also an evidence that the development of the National Capital, toward which Congress was making large annual appropriations, should, in the opinion of Congress, be carried on along broad, harmonious lines under the best expert advice. The Commission of Fine Arts constitutes the official body of expert advisers to the President, to Congress, and to the various executive departments and establishments in public matters where their advice as to artistic taste and good judgment are required.

The present membership of the commission comprises:

Charles Moore, chairman, of Detroit, Mich. Mr. Moore is chairman of the Detroit City Plan Commission, director of the Detroit Museum of Art, and an authority on civic improvement.

Frederick Law Olmsted, vice chairman, of Brookline, Mass., is considered the foremost landscape architect in this country, and is a member of the largest landscape architectural firm in the world. He is consulting landscape architect to many of the largest municipalities and the only surviving member of the Senate Park Commission of 1901 on the improvement of the park system of the District of Columbia.

Thomas Hastings, of the firm of Carrere & Hastings, New York City, is the architect of the New York Public Library and many other public and private structures in the United States.

Cass Gilbert, of New York City, is the architect of the Minnesota State Capitol, the Woolworth Building, and many other public and private structures in the United States.

Edwin H. Blashfield, of New York City, past president of the mural painters, is probably best known in Washington by his mural painting of the Library of Congress dome.

Peirce Anderson, of Chicago, Ill., was formerly a partner in D. H. Burnham & Co., the designers of the Union Station and post office in this city. He is now a member of the firm of Graham, Burnham & Co., successors to D. H. Burnham & Co.

Herbert Adams, of New York City, is the sculptor of the McMillan Memorial Fountain in this city and creator of many other works of art in this country. Mr. Adams is also president of the National Sculpture Society.

These eminent gentlemen receive no compensation for their services as members of the commission, being reimbursed only for actual and necessary expenses incurred by them in the fulfillment of their official duties, although the present prescribed rate of $5 per day for subsistence does not cover their necessary expenses. I know of no other organization anywhere where men of such eminent standing, reputation, skill, and professional ability are willing to give what amounts to important professional services without pay, purely from high-minded, patriotic motives.

As you know, under the organic act the scope of the functions of this commission embraces advising upon the location of statues, fountains, and monuments in the public squares, streets, and parks in the District of Columbia; upon the selection of models for statues, fountains, and monuments erected under the authority of the United States, and the method of selection of artists for their execution. The act excludes the Capitol Building and the Library of Congress from the jurisdiction of the commission.

The organic act further provides that the commission also advise generally upon questions of art when required to do so by the President or by any committee of either House of Congress. Under this authorization a number of Executive orders have been issued by the President since 1910, to the effect that plans for all public buildings and other structures within the District of Columbia to be erected under the direction of the Federal Government, and all questions of art with which the Federal Government is concerned, shall be referred to the commission before final action shall be taken by the officials in charge of such matters. The commission was further directed by such Executive order to advise the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds regarding the development of the large public park areas under his control; and that officer now uniformly consults the commission regarding details of designs in connection with such developments; in fact, the number of submissions from this office alone requires a large part of the commission's time at every meeting, and its cooperation and advice have been of inestimable value in raising the parks of Washington to a high standard. The President also requested the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to cooperate with the Federal authorities for the harmonious development of the National Capital by conferring with the National Fine Arts Commission on all such matters under their jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of the commission, in its advisory capacity, therefore now extends (excluding the Capitol and Library of Congress) over every public building, monument, piece of painting or statuary, and the like, in which questions of art are concerned and with which the Federal Government is in any way connected. This assures that the United States is getting absolutely the best artistic results for moneys appropriated for such purposes, and that nothing that is placed within the National Capital will work injury to the great plan for its beautification and development. It has been observed that the mere fact that there is a National Commission of Fine Arts with such supervisory jurisdiction already has served to raise the standard of works of art submitted for acquisition by the Government, for artists are exerting their best efforts where they know that their creations have to be passed on by the Federal Art Commission before they can be accepted by the United States.

The commission's work is of cooperation rather than of criticism. It aims to accomplish results by advising with officials of the Government, commissions, architects, sculptors, or other artists whenever modifications or changes in matters under consideration are deemed desirable. During the past year it has happened in numerous instances that the commission has been consulted from four to six times regarding details of the same project, and they now keep in touch with such matters from the time of the submission of the first preliminary designs until it has been completed and accepted by the United States.

The commission has rendered assistance to the President, to committees of both Houses of Congress, to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce, to the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds and the District Commissioners, to the Isthmian Canal Commission, and numerous congressional statue commissions charged by law with the erection of statues under Government appropriation. These matters include not only passing on the artistic qualities of paintings and models for statues, but upon the location of public buildings and monuments, upon problems of traffic, upon utilitarian features in the treatment of bridges, thoroughfares, plazas, parks, etc. Last year congressional committees alone referred bills covering 47 submissions to the commission, and this year that number will be exceeded.

Among other matters, it has advised against the purchase of numerous paintings which were inferior works of art, and which, if purchased by Congress at the sums stated in the bills for their purchase, would have cost more than the sum total of the commission's appropriations to date. It has repeatedly urged the omission of useless colonnades and other elaborations which seemed to be proposed for purely decorative purposes and tended to hamper the straightforward solution of practical problems. The commission's advice has almost invariably been in the direction of simplicity and thoroughness and against ornateness.

Prior to 1910, the Government, when considering the plans and models for any monument, had to spend many hundreds of dollars in each case for expert advice. It is probable that the saving in this item of expense alone has also been more than the sum total of the appropriations made for the commission during the time it has been in existence.

Congress appropriated $10,000 for the commission's first year's activities; this amount was practically all needed to establish the commission on a working basis. The second year Congress granted $8,800, and for the following three years $5,000 for each year; this amount was last year increased to $6,000.

The following table shows the work of the commission during the past five years:

Appropriation	$10,000	$8,800	$5,000	$5,000	$5,000

This year four official meetings have so far been held, with a total of 122 submissions considered. The influx of additional submissions has been so great that the commission must hold another meeting on May 15 next, despite the reduction of their available cash balance to such an extent that the members may have to bear part of the expense of attending this meeting themselves.

As typical of the number and character of submissions requiring the commission's attention at the meetings, I am giving the following as some of those already received for consideration at their next meeting:

The plans and design for the new Freer art gallery for Washington.
The plans and design for the proposed archives building.
Location and design for proposed new Aqueduct Bridge.
Working model of statue, and pedestal, of Lincoln for Lincoln Memorial.
Preliminary design for Meade Memorial in Washington.

Preliminary sketch design for Francis Asbury Memorial in Washington.
Preliminary design for Buchanan Memorial in Washington.
Passing on 34 models, with plans, received in Francis Scott Key competition.
Plans and studies for landscape treatment around Lincoln Memorial.
Limitation of building heights in the District of Columbia, by request of District Commissioners.
Numerous bills from committees of Congress, involving inspection of paintings and statuary offered for acquisition to the United States, and other questions of art.

Several years ago the chairman and vice chairman spent a strenuous week in the Canal Zone making a detailed examination of sites and plans for permanent structures of the Panama Canal, including advising regarding the layout of the then proposed new city of Balboa. This city has since been constructed along the lines suggested by the committee.

It will be seen from the foregoing that these items can not be passed upon without large expenditure of time and money, and the great amount of detail work incident to the disposition of the work before the commission throughout the year has necessitated an increase in the duration of its sessions from one day to two and three days, and in the correspondence and committee work and travel between meetings. Congress is stipulating more and more in enactments for the erection of monuments, public buildings, bridges, etc., that the plans and designs must bear the approval of the Commission of Fine Arts before work can be proceeded with. The demands on the members are now more than three times as heavy as they were during the first four years of its existence. During the month of March a committee of six members of the commission met at their own expense to dispose of a large number of submissions that required immediate attention.

The burden imposed by Congress upon the commission has become so heavy that the members can not carry it with the funds placed available for its work, and if these demands are to be met, additional funds will have to be provided. The commission expects to hold at least one meeting a month during the next year; it needs basic maps which have to be prepared, files of photographs for reference purposes, and other data on which intelligently to base recommendations, and they need additional clerical services to handle the large amount of detail work incident to submissions and to keep their records in shape. At present there is but one clerk to handle this mass of detail.

The original act did not provide for rent of quarters. It therefore became necessary to depend upon the courtesy of some Government department for the loan of spare space. An empty storeroom on the fourth floor of the Lemon Building was placed at their disposal by the Secretary of War, who, after a year, generously increased it by sufficient space to enable the commission to fit up a larger meeting room and a smaller room for records and files. This space is now very much overcrowded. When the commission is not in session their meeting room is used by a portion of the drafting force of the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds, necessitated by the crowded condition of the whole floor on which the commission have their quarters, while the smaller room is filled with files and other office equipment which have overflowed into the halls and the meeting room. The commission is at the mercy of the War Department in respect to this matter, and there is danger of the commission being made suddenly homeless when the space occupied by them is required by that department. I would urgently request your committee to include the words "and office rent," after the words "books of reference," in their appropriation, so that the form will read:

"Commission of Fine Arts: To meet the expenses made necessary by the act approved May 17, 1910, entitled 'An act establishing a Commission of Fine Arts,' including the purchase of periodicals, maps, and books of reference, and office rent, to be disbursed, on vouchers approved by the commission, by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, who shall be the secretary and shall act as executive officer of said commission, $15,000."

Very truly, yours,

WM. W. HARTS,
Colonel, United States Army,
Secretary and Executive Officer.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Chairman Committee on the Library, United States Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi, increasing the amount for the Commission of Fine Arts from $6,000 to $8,000. It is within the estimate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 81, line 8, after the words "books of reference," it is proposed to insert the words "and office rent"; and in line 11, to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$8,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is a little amendment which has been omitted. I send it to the Secretary's desk and ask for its adoption.

The SECRETARY. On page 78, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "$1.85" and insert in lieu thereof "$1.80."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 47, line 7, after the numerals "$30,000," it is proposed to insert:

The sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the construction of a permanent wagon and foot bridge across the creek at Internacion Avenue, at Nogales, Ariz., on land reserved by the United States for customs purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the item is not estimated for.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in response to that statement I wish to say that this item is not obnoxious to the point of order because it has been reported and moved by a standing committee of the Senate. Therefore it is not obnoxious to the point of order under our rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has it been reported favorably by a standing committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ASHURST. It has been, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, the point of order must be overruled.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I was not aware that that was the fact, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to offer an amendment, which I will state orally. On page 158 of the bill, line 5, I move to strike out the figures "$1,500" and insert "$1,800." That is estimated for in the Book of Estimates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 158, line 5, in the item for the Bozeman (Mont.) station, after the word "Superintendent," it is proposed to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$1,800."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I have other amendments which I desire to offer.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the salary of the superintendent at the Bozeman station is increased the salary of the superintendents at other stations ought to be changed all along the line. Under existing law they all get $1,500.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to offer another amendment. At the end of line 5, on the same page, I move to insert "foreman, $1,200." That is estimated for in the Book of Estimates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 158, at the end of line 5, it is proposed to add a semicolon and the words "foreman, $1,200."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before that amendment is voted on I want to ask the chairman of the committee if the amendment just agreed to, increasing the salary of the superintendent of the station at Bozeman, Mont., was estimated for?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That has not been voted on yet.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am endeavoring now to find out from the documents whether it has been estimated for. If it has been estimated for, I am not aware of that fact.

Mr. MYERS. It has been estimated for. I have the printed Book of Estimates before me, and it is in that book.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Is it in the printed Book of Estimates?

Mr. MYERS. It certainly is.

Mr. OVERMAN. While the amendment has already been agreed to, I desire to call attention to the fact that there are a number of other stations mentioned in the bill the superintendents of which are paid $1,500. I might cite the stations at Cape Vincent, N. Y.; Clackamas, Oreg.; Cold Springs, Ga.; and many others. The superintendent nowhere gets to exceed $1,500. Now, we are selecting out the superintendent at Bozeman and giving him $1,800, while the others only get $1,500.

Mr. MYERS. The others are not here asking for it, so far as I can see, and, as I have stated, it is estimated for. Furthermore, the amendment has been adopted.

Mr. HARDWICK. It might be well to make a motion to reconsider.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That amendment has not been adopted, has it, Mr. President?

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say that if the Senate wants to put on this bill every conceivable appropriation, when they are not willing to provide $50 a month for the families of soldiers, they can proceed as they are doing, but I do not think it will be possible for me to maintain such items in conference as are going into this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I asked the question of the Senator for the reason that there are quite a number of other stations the superintendents of which receive $1,500 under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They ought all to be raised if the one at Bozeman is raised.

Mr. GALLINGER. The salaries of all ought to be increased to the same level.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will state my further amendment. I move to insert at the end of line 5, on page 158, the words and figures, "foreman, $1,200." That is estimated for in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is an increase of salary.

Mr. MYERS. It is a new position that is very badly needed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator proposes to create a new position.

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir. The Department of Commerce have recommended it very strongly, and it is, as I have said, estimated for in the Book of Estimates. The position is needed. There is very great need of it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say, Mr. President, that, in view of the great emergency that now confronts the country, the committee declined to increase a single salary and authorized very few new positions. They did create perhaps three or four new positions, but they turned down application after application on the ground that the emergency confronting the country would not make it safe for us to be appropriating money in this way. Of course, it is nothing to me. The Senate can vote in the bill as many increases and as many appropriations as they see fit, but I warn the Senate that it is a very great work they are imposing on me to maintain in a bill of this sort of increases which may be asked for in a hundred other instances with just as much logic and force as in this case. I think the Senate ought to reject this amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will say, in reply to that that in these times when we are voting hundreds of millions and even billions of dollars for war purposes, I agree with the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] this forenoon, that we should not become so war mad as to entirely overlook and forget our internal domestic needs.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho, with pleasure.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask if the war conditions impose any extra burden upon this gentleman at Bozeman, Mont., whose salary has been increased?

Mr. MYERS. Well, he pays a part of the taxes that the war preparation increases; yes, sir; just as everybody in the country does.

Mr. BORAH. Then, as I understand, the increases the Senator seeks to bring about are for the purpose of enabling officers to pay their increased proportion of taxes?

Mr. MYERS. I am not asking anything for his wife; the appropriation is for him. I will submit my amendment, and ask for a vote on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to submit another amendment. I move to insert after the figures "$900," in line 6, on page 158, the words "two apprentice fish culturists, at $600 each." That is estimated for in the Book of Estimates, and is strongly recommended by the Department of Commerce as being absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of the Bozeman station.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not understand where the amendment is to come in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 158, line 6, after the words "fish culturist, $900," it is proposed to insert "two apprentice fish culturists, at $600 each."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. My clerk has just been looking up the matter in the Book of Estimates, but has been unable to find it. I should like to know from the Senator where it has been estimated for.

Mr. MYERS. I will find it for the Senator. On page 1015 of the Book of Estimates, under the heading "Bozeman, Mont.," in the last line under that heading is found the provision "two apprentice fish culturists, at $600 each, $1,200."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I know of no reason why this amendment should be agreed to. I suppose these fish culturists are much more important than the families of soldiers; and if the Senate so think, they can vote the amendment in.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, that argument glances off of me harmlessly, because I voted yesterday to take care of the families of the soldiers.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am talking about the appropriation, and not how anybody voted.

Mr. MYERS. At the same time I believe in taking care of our domestic and internal affairs. The Senator says he knows of no reason for this appropriation. The only reason is that the Department of Commerce recommends it and estimates for it, and says it is necessary. I submit the question on that statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MYERS. I submit a further amendment by adding to the section which treats of the fish hatchery at Bozeman, Mont., these words:

Fish-cultural station, Bozeman, Mont.: For extension of hatchery building, additional rearing ponds, and improvements to water supply at the Bozeman, Mont., station, to be available until expended, $5,000.

That is estimated for in the Book of Estimates, it is recommended by the Department of Commerce, and I believe it is reasonable and necessary.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I do not want to be criticizing the departments, but in candor I must say that if we followed all the estimates that come here from the departments the United States would be bankrupt in less than 30 minutes. I do not think that such an appropriation as this ought to be made at the present time, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. MYERS. My experience has been that the departments are much more careful in judging of what is necessary for the expenditures of the country than is the Congress. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 168, line 14, it is proposed to strike out——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That has been increased by $200,000.

Mr. PITTMAN. Do I understand that the $2,450,000 has been stricken out and $2,650,000 inserted?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It has.

The SECRETARY. On motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment. There is a provision in this bill appropriating $500,000 for the establishment of a plant for the manufacture of powder.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator moves to strike that out, I think it ought to go out. I agree to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is just what I rose for.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I simply want to save time by saying that I consent that it be stricken from the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move to strike out lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 on page 62. My information is that there has been no estimate made for this. There has been no suggestion, even, from the department that it should go in the bill. I think it ought to go out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, beginning with line 6, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Powder factory: For the establishment of a plant for the manufacture of powder on a site to be procured by purchase or condemnation, or in the discretion of the Secretary of War on any suitable site that may be tendered without cost to the United States, which he is authorized to accept, $500,000.

Mr. NORRIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Just a moment, Mr. President, and perhaps the Senator will not feel it necessary to take that time.

This provision came here from the House, and upon inquiry I can find no justification for it. It is not recommended by anybody, and nobody knows anything about it. It does seem that it ought to be fortified in some way before the appropriation is made. My only object in consenting to have it go out is because that is the only way in which it will get into conference. I will investigate it carefully, and if it is needed I shall certainly yield and let it go in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the recommendation of the House of Representatives is entitled to some consideration. I do not care to discuss it, because it is a question upon which every Senator, I suppose, has fixed convictions, as to whether we ought to have a powder factory. As far as I am concerned, I am in favor of the Government making——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that if it is needed at all it will go back. I am earnestly in favor of strengthening the armament of the country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All those in favor of the amendment——

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I should like to know what the form of the amendment is. I do not understand whether we are voting——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposes to strike out a paragraph found in the House bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I have asked for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, just one word. My purpose in moving to strike out this paragraph is that I have been informed—and I think my information is absolutely correct—that the Chief of Ordnance of the War Department has said that he knows nothing whatever about this provision; no estimate has been made for it and no recommendation was ever made to anybody to put it into the bill. It seems to me from reading it that there is a job somewhere in it. I think we ought to strike it out and let it go to conference; and upon inquiry, if it is found to be necessary, the conferees can reinstate it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the importance of having a powder factory, I think, has been sufficiently demonstrated by the experience of the Navy Department. They have succeeded in reducing the cost of powder to 25 cents a pound. The Government of the United States not long since paid four times that much for powder. Obviously, when we are preparing this country against contingencies that may arise, we ought to have powder, and we ought to have cheap powder, and we ought to have the Government of the United States prepared to furnish a part of the supply which may be necessary.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. OWEN. I yield; certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator perhaps is aware that the War Department built a powder factory before the Navy Department built one, and they have that powder factory in commission now, and it has been in operation for some years. Later the Navy erected one; and they together as the Senator said, have reduced the price. But I think we ought to depend upon the department that has the matter in charge for information as to the want of additional facilities of that kind.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wyoming a question? Is it not a fact that the War Department and the officers of the Army and Navy generally are averse to the Government ownership of these plants?

Mr. WARREN. I do not so understand. I think the Senator may be right in his inference in one direction. They believe that we should not undertake to manufacture at all times all the powder that the Government needs, because the patronage of the private plants is considered necessary in ordinary times to keep such plants manufacturing the kinds of powder that the Government is likely to want.

Mr. VARDAMAN. As I have gathered from the newspapers, the Navy and the Army generally are opposed to the Government ownership of plants of that character. I have great respect for the dignity of character and high sense of personal honor of the men of the Army and the Navy but as a rule those men have no more sympathy with the toiling masses of America than they have for the patient necessary ox.

Mr. WARREN. I hardly think that could be true. Let me say that the plant that the Army built in the first place was built in the form of one wing, and a plan was made for its enlargement to two or three or four or five times the original size. They only operated it eight hours a day, but calculated that in times of stress they could put on three reliefs and enlarge the output.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, unless there is some very strong reason for striking this out, whether it is the recommendation of the War Department or not, I think that it is justified, and that the House of Representatives have acted wisely in putting it in, and I should regret very much indeed to see it struck out.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, according to my recollection of what has heretofore transpired, there is not much mystery about that item. We devoted weeks here to the discussion of the question of establishing a plant for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen, the main purpose of which was to make powder for the naval and military activities of the country. It seems to me that this appropriation is the initial appropriation necessary to make that an effective project in our institutions. It is not quite so large as the amount authorized by the act directing the establishment of that plant. I think it authorized an appropriation of $30,000,000, but I can very readily see why this $500,000 would be necessary in making preliminary examinations and doing preliminary work in that general direction. As there are no particular words of limitation that would prevent its use in that way, I think it would be wise policy to leave it in the bill, so that we may have legislative assurance that the Congress intends to carry out the policy that we laid down when we included that important provision in the recent Army reorganization bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to agree to this item if there is no estimate for it and no suggestion from the department that it is needed or as to what is going to be done with it.

In the fortifications appropriation bill we have reported very large increases for the purchase and manufacture of ammunition. For instance, on page 4 of that bill we have increased the appropriations that the House made for the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals. We have increased the cash appropriation from $2,700,000 to $6,000,000, and we have increased the contract appropriation from $1,500,000 to $3,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a minute?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not understand the first part of the reading. Does that item include the manufacture of powder?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that mentioned there?

Mr. JONES. The word "powder" is not mentioned, but the word "ammunition" is mentioned—"for purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition."

Mr. NORRIS. That would not mean the establishment of a powder factory.

Mr. JONES. Why, they could do that at the arsenal. They can manufacture it at the arsenal if they have the necessary machinery with which to do it. Then there is another provision in this bill, on page 16, which reads as follows:

That appropriations in this act shall not be expended for powder other than small-arms powder at a price in excess of 53 cents a pound.

They can use this amount, or any part of it, as they see fit, for the manufacture of powder in our own arsenals. Then we have another item, as follows:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for seacoast cannon, and for modernizing projectiles on hand, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith, and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $3,000,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $3,500,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

That was passed in the House. So there is the provision of $6,500,000 that can be used by the Government officials in the manufacture of powder, if necessary. Of course this can be used for other kinds of ammunition, too.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not also a fact that every cent of that money can be expended without the manufacture of an ounce of powder?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. LANE. That is my point. There is nothing in there about powder, and they are not compelled to manufacture any.

Mr. JONES. They are not compelled to do it, but we authorize them to do it. In the case of this $500,000 item that is in the bill here, we do not compel them to spend that $500,000. We authorize them to do it, upon a site to be furnished. Then, here is another item in the fortifications bill:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for seacoast artillery practice, including the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $490,000.

Then, in another item on the same page, we increase from $400,000 to $480,000 the item for purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition, subcaliber guns, and so forth. So that we thought we were making full and ample provision on the subject—all the provision that was suggested by the department.

If a powder factory is needed, I am for it, as far as that is concerned; but it does seem to me that we ought to have some suggestion from some authoritative source that our other facilities are not sufficient; and, as was stated by the chairman of the committee, I have not heard any suggestion of the kind.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator will remember, also, that in the appropriation——

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. I addressed the Chair before the Senator from North Carolina rose.

Mr. OVERMAN. To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator from Mississippi addressed the Chair first.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if he knows anything about other appropriations in this bill? Evidently the House knew what it was doing when it put this one in the bill. There is no special explanation attached to any item of the appropriation that the House has made.

Mr. JONES. I am not suggesting that it did not know what it was doing, but it is perfectly plain that the Senate does not know anything about this item or what led to putting it in the bill; and it does seem to me that it might be a good idea to let it go to conference, as the chairman of the committee suggests, so as to get the information. Of course I do not know about every item in this bill; I will admit that; but there are a good many items in the bill that came over from the House that I do know about, and this is such an entirely new proposal——

Mr. VARDAMAN. This is a matter that has been discussed at great length throughout the length and breadth of the country, as well as upon the floors of Congress. I notice that the President said at Des Moines, on the 1st of February last:

> I have been urging upon Congress—I urged upon Congress before this war began—that the Government of the United States supply itself with the necessary plants to make the armor for the ships and to make the munitions for the guns and the men, and I believe, and confidently predict, that the adoption of measures of that sort will be part of the preparation for national defense; not in order, for it is not necessary, that the Government should make all the armor plate needed for the fleet or all the munitions needed for the men and the guns, but in order that it should make enough to regulate and control the price.

I do not think any harm could possibly come of this. I believe if it should remain in the bill, and the Secretary of War should carry out the purpose of the appropriation as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], good would result to the American people. If we are going into this business of expending the products of the Nation for preparation for war and the manufacture of munitions and guns, I think the Government ought to manufacture them, and make them as cheaply as possible. Cut out the profits and you will remove one of the potential inducements of war.

Mr. JONES. I agree entirely with the Senator in that respect. There is no disagreement between us at all.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. JONES. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Are the items which the Senator has read from the cost fortifications bill House items or Senate amendments?

Mr. JONES. A good many of them are House items. The Senate increase I called attention to first was from $2,700,000 to $6,000,000, and from $1,500,000 to $3,000,000. That increase was made by the Senate; but the item on page 5 of $3,000,000, and then $3,500,000 for contracts, is a House item. In other words, there is $6,500,000 there. Now, as I said, I agree with the Senator——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES. In just a moment. I want to set myself right, and I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi that I agree with the suggestion he makes. I agree with the suggestion made by the President in that speech, so far as those things are concerned, and it seemed to me that we were pretty well complying with the Senator's suggestion in the fortifications bill. We have also passed through the Senate, and it is now in the naval bill as passed by the House, provision for the construction of an armor-plate factory. We have also passed a bill for a nitrate plant to take care of the powder situation, not in the actual manufacture of powder, but for the principal ingredient in powder, so that it seems to me that we have been taking care of it pretty well. But if there is some one——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Now, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES. In just a moment. If there is some one who can suggest a good reason why we should have this provision in the bill in addition to the other, I will not oppose it for a moment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Now, if the Senator will yield to me for just a moment, I will say that I have been informed—if it is not out of order to make this statement—by a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives that this matter was put in the bill after mature consideration of the question, believing that the demand would be so great that the plants already owned by the Government could not supply a sufficient amount to control the price, and that it was put in by the House advisedly, after mature deliberation, for purposes which the Senator and I would both like to promote—to enable the Government to control the prices of powder and relieve itself from being the victim of the Powder Trust.

Mr. JONES. Has the Senator gotten any information to the effect that this $500,000 is sufficient to put up the plant and put it in operation?

Mr. VARDAMAN. This Representative advised me that it is. He says that the matter has been carefully considered in the House.

Mr. JONES. If that is the case, I certainly would have no opposition to it. My only reason for suggesting that it should be stricken out is that it may get to conference and that we may get this information. Of course, I think it is rather a doubtful policy for the Senate to proceed to act upon an important item, without having gotten any information itself, upon some information that may come to it from this Representative or that Representative, however eminently qualified he may be to give the information.

I want to say that I have the very greatest confidence in the Senator and his judgment and his ability and his knowledge with reference to the matter.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I just want to say, Mr. President, in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington, that the Senate ought to have some information.

It is its business to have information, but I do not think it would be doing violence to reason and sound judgment to indulge the presumption that if the Senate has no information of its own the House, a coordinate body, composed of men who are equally patriotic and intelligent, would not act in a matter of this character without adequate information, and that the House has acted in the interest of the American people.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, of course the Senator does not think I questioned their patriotism or their integrity or their honesty of purpose, or anything of that sort; but if the Senate were to act entirely along the line suggested by the Senator from Mississippi it seems to me we would be to a certain extent abrogating our functions. I think it is our duty to look into these matters somewhat and get some information about them; and I think it is no reflection on anyone in the other House, or upon the other House itself, that we should take the action that we have.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is only a reflection upon the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I shall be very glad to answer it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand the Senator from Mississippi to say that the House, or the committee in the House, had an estimate from the department as to the cost of this proposed powder plant?

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; I did not say that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Or as to the necessity for it?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I did not say that. I said I was advised by a distinguished Member of the House that he himself wrote that item in the bill, and that he wrote it for the purpose of increasing the capacity of the Government powder mills, so that the output might be sufficient to control the price of powder; that the supply from the mills already established would not meet the increased demand on account of the war.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, one further question. Does the Senator from Mississippi know whether or not the distinguished Member of the House who gave him this information had any suggestion or information from the War Department as to the cost or the necessity of this improvement?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not know. I did not examine the Representative as to that; but I do know that he is a man of a very high order of intelligence, and I can not imagine him playing the rôle of puppet under any circumstance.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no doubt about that. I know who the gentleman is to whom the Senator refers.

Mr. VARDAMAN. He is a very patriotic man, and it was not necessary for him to go to the War Department to find out the facts that he gave to me. The facts are known generally to all men.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the Senator from Mississippi whether he does not think it would be wiser and better to allow this item in the bill to go to conference, and let the Senate conferees investigate it and ascertain whether or not there is a necessity for this plant? The distinguished chairman of the Senate committee has assured the Senate that he will do that, and that, if there is a necessity for it, if the Chief of Ordnance or the Secretary of War or any other official connected with the department will say that it is necessary, the conferees will restore it. Now, what is the objection to that?

My objection to legislation of this character is that if we are to go out generally and write into this bill or any other appropriation bill an item making an appropriation of $500,000 to establish factories to make munitions, or to make percussion caps, or to make pistols or bowie knives, without any information from anyone or anywhere as to the necessity for it, we will be in a bad way before we get through. That is my objection. I have no objection to the establishment of this plant if it is necessary; I am in favor of it; but I do believe the Senate ought to have some information, some suggestion from somebody who does know whether or not it is necessary, before we enter upon legislation of this character.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is there not a very wide discretion given to the Secretary of War? Unless it were necessary, it would not be constructed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then why appropriate it?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Because I think it is going to be necessary. The emergency may arise, and I want the Government to be ready to meet it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then he ought to say so and ought to tell the Congress that it is necessary.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think it is going to be necessary, and I want it done. If the Government is to expend the enormous amount of money which I believe is going to be expended for munitions of war, I want the Government to take the profit out of war, because I believe that when that shall be done there will be fewer wars.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that to determine whether or not we shall have a powder factory is a legislative proposition. It is a policy that ought to be determined by the legislative branch of the Government.

I did not want to delay this bill. If the yeas and nays had been given when I requested them at first we would long ago have had the roll called, and this matter would have been disposed of one way or the other. But to my mind it is no objection whatsoever to this item to say that a Secretary of War or a Chief of Ordnance is opposed to it any more than we would let the Secretary of War or the Chief of Ordnance or the chief of some other bureau decide any other policy of government. The question involved in this item that the Senator from Alabama seeks to strike out by the amendment is whether or not the Government shall construct a powder factory.

I thought at the beginning and I think yet that every Member of each branch of Congress has his ideas on that subject, and he can vote them without any debate. It strikes me that the Government, being such an enormous user of powder, ought to establish this powder factory; that it ought to go into the business to an extent at least.

The items that the Senator from Washington has read, as I understand them, will not in a single instance provide for the building of a powder factory. In carrying out those items, or carrying out the instructions which are included in those particular appropriations, it would be, as I understand the items, impossible for the department to construct a powder factory.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. The department can do with that money whatever is necessary to manufacture its powder in connection with the different arsenals throughout the country. They probably could not go to a separate and distinct place and get a separate site to put up a factory.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. JONES. But, in connection with every Government arsenal, they can take that money and put in whatever machinery is necessary for the manufacture of powder.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, they test the powder, they test their ammunition; and I do not believe anyone could read any of these items and think for a moment that the officials of the Government, in carrying out those items, would construct a powder factory.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator, if he had charge of it, and those appropriations were enacted into law just as he has read them, whether he would feel it was his duty to construct a powder factory?

Mr. JONES. As I said, I would not feel that it was my duty or that it was my right to go and get a separate plant somewhere; but I would feel that it was not only my right, but, if necessary, it was my duty to put these in in connection with the arsenals of the country, as authorized by the bill itself.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator, with those items written into the bill, construct a powder factory under the conditions now?

Mr. JONES. I would do whatever was necessary in connection with the arsenals of the Government manufacturing ammunition.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think it would be necessary, in connection with the arsenals and the appropriations, to construct a powder factory?

Mr. JONES. It might be.

Mr. NORRIS. But would it? The officials of the Government would have to pass upon that question.

Mr. JONES. I do not know what the necessities might be.

Mr. NORRIS. There would not be any doubt about this. Here is a definite instruction.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, even under the language of the bill it is left to the discretion of the Secretary of War as to whether or not he will construct a powder factory out of this $500,000.

I do not remember the exact language of it, but that is what I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. The language that is sought to be struck out I would take to be a definite instruction. It would not make any difference what the Secretary of War thought about the advisability of such a policy; it would be a law, a policy decided upon by the legislative branch of the Government. I will read it:

Powder factory: For the establishment of a plant for the manufacture of powder on a site to be procured by purchase or condemnation, or in the discretion of the Secretary of War on any suitable site that may be tendered without cost to the United States which he is authorized to accept, $500,000.

If we pass that there is not any doubt that there would be a powder factory constructed.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. I believe under the appropriations that the Senator from Washington has mentioned no official of the Government would construct a powder factory. As I understand it, it is entirely different from the manufacture of munitions of war, such as guns and cartridges and shells; that that is an entirely different proposition from the manufacture of powder, and an authorization to do any of those things would not be an authorization to manufacture powder. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I wanted to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that if the items read by the Senator from Washington have any significance at least they foreshadow the probable necessity for increased facilites for the manufacture of powder and warrant some one having inserted in the bill in the House a provision providing for the establishment of a plant for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is a very good suggestion the Senator has made.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator. It seems to me, as the Senator from Minnesota has indicated, that those items having been put in the bill show that there is at least an idea that the Government of the United States is going to need to have the ammunition, and for that reason alone it seems to me if that is well founded, and I presume it is, that would be a sufficient reason for the providing of a powder factory by the Government itself. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say to the Senator that the item should, I think, be amended because it should provide that the Government may construct on property which it now owns. It would be foreclosed against this under the language as it is. I think the Senate is perfectly safe in allowing it to be cut out and to go into conference, because on that conference will be, as one of the conferees, the distinguished Member of the House to whom the Senator from Mississippi has alluded, and I know that those conferees, as well as the conferees who go from here, will, like every other Senator and Member, want to provide all the powder that this Nation requires and will surely arrange the item in conference either by the adoption of it as it reads now or with an amendment. Of course if it goes through exactly as it reads now it is not subject to amendment in conference. Hence the wish that it may be amended.

Mr. NORRIS. It would be a very easy matter for the Senate to amend it, and I believe the suggested amendment that the Government might build the powder factory on lands already owned by the Government would be a very good arrangement to adopt.

Mr. WARREN. It could not go into conference, however, unless we change the text of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. It is perfectly proper if we do not vote this out of the bill to adopt the amendment the Senator suggests.

Mr. JONES. I wish to say to the Senator, as I said a moment ago, that I would not think about making powder of the appropriation from which we could make ammunition, caps, cartridges, guns, and things like that. Gen. Crozier was before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of this bill, and we asked him especially in reference to that, and he said emphatically that the term ammunition included powder; that there could not be any question about that; and that it is the policy of the department to manufacture powder. As a matter of fact, we have a powder factory run by the Government at some place, I forget where.

Mr. LODGE. The factory is down at Indianhead.

Mr. JONES. As I said a moment ago, I believe we ought to manufacture our powder. I am inclined to think that we ought to manufacture all the powder that is needed for our guns if we can do it, but there is no suggestion from any source that anything of this kind is needed.

I wish to say to the Senator I am heartily in favor of Congress determining the policy with reference to these matters, but of course in determining that we need some information to show the necessity for a new item.

Mr. NORRIS. The only idea I have is that we are buying immense quantities of powder for the Army and Navy. We are not manufacturing powder enough.

Mr. JONES. We are buying, but to just what extent we manufacture the supply I do not know. Of course, I do not think that we ought to put the manufacturers out of business in view of possible contingencies. I do not think we ought to do anything to put out of business those who are manufacturing powder that we can use.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think we can put them out of business. They have more to attend to now with the war in Europe than they can manage. But, Mr. President, there are those who are opposed to the Government manufacturing its powder or any of its shells or guns or armor plate or anything of that kind. I am not complaining of that. I believe we ought to manufacture these things of which the Government is the principal customer. Whether we shall do it or not is a question for Congress to determine. Whether we have war or not there will have to be powder manufactured.

That, I think, is conceded by everybody. It is conceded also that in the little factory we have been operating we have practically cut the price of powder we had to buy in two, and we are spending millions now for powder.

As far as I am concerned, I am not finding fault with the man who is opposed to a powder factory, although I believe that we ought to have a Government powder factory and we ought to have a test vote on it. We ought to have a vote to go on record and decide the thing by a roll call.

It seems peculiar to me, Mr. President, that a great many of those who are in favor of such immense preparation for war, who are in favor of great programs of preparedness are immediately opposed to any preparedness if there is not some profit in it for some private manufacturer or corporation. I am in favor of the Government making its own powder because I believe to some extent at least it will take the profits out of war and will stop, at least to some extent, the propaganda in favor of big armament and expensive military preparation. That is not only true in our country, but it is true the world over.

Therefore, it seems to me that if a majority of the Senate thinks that it would be good for the country to build a powder factory we ought to leave this provision in the bill. This is a fair place to test it.

It is no answer to say that we are appropriating millions of money for the purpose of making cartridges and cannon and so forth and that by some possible construction of the law some official might make powder. This is a definite instruction to build a powder factory, whether we want it or whether we do not want it. If this item is not left in the bill we will not under any of the items that have been mentioned construct a powder factory.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator think if we have this item in the bill it would be better to have it for the enlargement of the present powder factory, to increase its facilities? Does not the Senator think we could get more out of the appropriation in that way?

Mr. NORRIS. My idea is that we ought to have more than one factory located in different sections of the country, so that in case of any emergency, if one should be destroyed, the other one would still be where we could utilize it.

Mr. JONES. Of course there is no provision in this paragraph as to where it shall be located. It might be located near the one already constructed.

Mr. NORRIS. I take it that no official would put one beside the other.

Mr. JONES. It strikes me it could be made more efficient by building an addition. I will merely say while I have the floor that any suggestion in reference to taking the profits out of the manufacture of this ammunition meets with my hearty approval. As far as that is concerned, I am in favor of it; and if there is any question about it, or if it is thought the Government really needs this plant to manufacture its ammunition, I would be heartily in favor of keeping the item in. The only reason why I suggested it might be cut out was to get the information. I do not know but that the information which has been given to the Senate is sufficient to warrant me, so far as I am concerned, in voting to retain the paragraph in the bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the item, in so far as it provides in a mandatory way for the establishment of a plant for the manufacture of powder and appropriates $500,000 for the purpose, ought to be kept in the bill; but I see no reason why the Government should be prohibited to construct a plant on land that is already owned by it. I think all the limitations as to the particular place at which it is to be located should be stricken out.

I move that the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] be amended by striking out all after the word "powder," in line 7 down to and including the word "accept," in line 10. It will then read:

For the establishment of a plant for the manufacture of powder, $500,000.

Otherwise the Government can acquire sites by purchase, condemnation, or by donation. It is entirely probable that the Government has an arsenal now in connection with which this plant might be established on land which the Government already owns.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will yield, I think the Senator's suggestion a good one. It is along the line of the suggestion made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. It would be better certainly to extend the discretion to build it on land now owned by the Government.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it occurred to me when the motion to strike out this provision was made by the Senator from Alabama, and when it appeared that no member of the committee was able to cite any authority for its insertion by the House, that some inquiry from the House Committee on Appropriations might elucidate the matter. I endeavored to communicate at once by telephone with the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations. I did not find him in, but I did find the clerk of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. Courts, who has long been with that committee and is familiar, of course, with the making of all the appropriation bills. I inquired of him if this provision in the bill was inserted upon the authority of any member, or how it came to be in the bill, and was promptly informed that it was inserted after the committee had taken testimony. Gen. Crozier appeared before the committee upon the subject. The substance of the testimony was that this Government plant would operate to save to the Government something like $4,000,000 in a period of five or six years, and for that reason this item had been inserted in the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, did the clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations state to the Senator who gave that evidence?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. He said that Gen. Crozier was examined at length by the committee upon the subject.

Mr. HARDWICK. Did he say Gen. Crozier said that?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will not say that he said Gen. Crozier said it, but he said the committee had arrived at the conclusion that it would result in a vast saving to the Government.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then the committee itself put it in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Of course the committee put it in, but they put it in after taking the testimony of Gen. Crozier.

I then took the pains to go to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and ask for a copy of the House hearings on this bill. I find that the House Committee on Appropriations took the testimony of Gen. Crozier on this subject and that it covers 10 pages. I have not been able in the brief time since I got it to read it all.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me just a minute, I am not asking the question in a critical way, but trying to get light. My recollection from reading the RECORD and the newspapers was that the department did not recommend this, neither Gen. Crozier nor anyone else, but that—it is purely a recollection—it was put in on the floor of the House by a vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not to take the time of the Senate to read the 10 pages of testimony given by Gen. Crozier, I am going to ask leave to have it printed, and I want to say this from my own investigation of the subject. I know that in the past 10 years the Government has purchased practically $25,000,000 worth of powder from private monopoly in this country, that it has paid all the way from 50 to 80 cents a pound, and it is the testimony of Government officials that we can manufacture that powder at between 30 and 40 cents a pound.

Mr. President, I can readily understand how Senators on this floor who are in favor of private manufacture of munitions of war, who are opposed to the Government engaging in any business, even to supply the Government with the things which the Government must use, would be in favor of eliminating this provision from the bill. It is entirely consistent with the position taken by Senators who were opposed to the Government appropriating money to build a nitrate plant for the manufacture of powder.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that I think it would be rather wise, as the Senate does not know how this item happens to come into the bill, to take a little time and put that testimony in the RECORD, so that the Senate may understand why it was put in, before the vote is taken on retaining it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am satisfied the temper of the Senate this afternoon upon this very amendment is such that it will be retained in the bill with the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, and I will just ask leave to print all of Gen. Crozier's testimony upon that subject in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? If not, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MANUFACTURE OF PURCHASE OF POWDER.

Gen. CROZIER. Picatinny Arsenal, you know, is our powder factory. In addition to being an establishment for the manufacture of powder, it is the storage place for ammunition and explosives in general. In the process of storage and issue, of course, there is a good deal of such work done as making up powder charges; that is, putting the powder in bulk into bags with the priming charges that go with it, making it ready for shipment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your capacity now?

Gen. CROZIER. The capacity now is about 6,000 pounds of powder a day.

The CHAIRMAN. Working how many shifts?

Gen. CROZIER. Working one shift and a fraction. Part of it is working three shifts. The plant is not balanced up so it can be advantageously worked at three shifts. Part of it can be, but other parts can not, because the output of the other part is too great for the part which can be worked three shifts. With a moderate addition to the plant it can be worked three shifts and the capacity increased from about 6,000 pounds a day to about 11,000 pounds a day.

The CHAIRMAN. What does it cost to manufacture powder there?

Gen. CROZIER. It costs, all told, counting overhead charges of all the kinds we have to count, about 39 cents a pound.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is cannon powder?

Gen. CROZIER. That is cannon powder; yes. Small-arms powder costs about 48 cents a pound.

The CHAIRMAN. Based upon estimates submitted this year, General, what annual output would you need?

Gen. CROZIER. The annual output would be about seven and a half million pounds. The statement can be made, I think, rather better with reference to the project that is in contemplation than upon the estimates just as they are submitted this year. The project contemplates the completion of the supply in four years; and considering the amount of supply needed and that length of time, the annual rate would have to average seven and a half million pounds.

The CHAIRMAN. And your capacity now is what?

Gen. CROZIER. Our capacity now is about 1,800,000 pounds.

The CHAIRMAN. And you can double that without very great cost?

Gen. CROZIER. We can pretty nearly double it. We can run that up to about 11,000 pounds a day with an expenditure between forty-five and forty-six thousand dollars. However, that would mean 11,000 pounds of new powder. As we go along, sometimes we find powder which is not satisfactory already made and which ought to be reworked. In order to rework it, we have to take the powder and grind it up and reduce it to a certain stage at which it corresponds to powder which is made from new material when it gets to that stage, and that requires additional machinery. Therefore if we are going to have an output of 11,000 pounds, of which about half, or something over half, is to be reworked powder, the necessary expenditures would run up to about $53,000 or $54,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. General, in figuring the cost of your powder, do you charge in the cost of making over powder such as you have just spoken of which does not come up to standard?

Gen. CROZIER. No; we have never figured that in.

Mr. SHERLEY. How extensive is it?

Gen. CROZIER. It is not very extensive, and we hope the necessity for it will diminish. There are things in connection with the manufacture of smokeless powder that have not been thoroughly thrashed out. Of course, you understand we are working this material up to its limit all the time. We are using the powder for the best there is in it. We are getting the most in the way of velocity out of the projectile that will correspond with what we think is the maximum pressure to use in the gun, and we do not have much margin. We do that because everybody else does it. If the enemy would take the risk of a small margin against us, we, of course, would have to take a corresponding risk against him. That being the case, small differences will sometimes carry us over the margin of safety. We occasionally find one of our powders is giving pressures higher than it ought to, and is not safe. We do our best to discover the reasons for it, and when we find the reason for it we do our best to find the cause of the reason why that should exist so we can remedy it in our manufacture. Although we have been reasonably successful in that matter, at the same time we are not perfectly successful, and nobody is entirely at the bottom of that subject.

Mr. SHERLEY. In figuring your cost, however, you do include rejections of powder in the process of making?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes; powder that is finished and is not up to the standard and has to be rejected, or which has to be rejected in any stage of manufacture, we make an allowance for.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the amount of powder which you subsequently determine to regrind appreciable in the sense that if carried into your cost accounts would vary to any marked degree what you state to be the cost of making your powder?

Gen. CROZIER. We have not carried it to a sufficient extent so far to cause it to affect the cost. Therefore the answer would be that up to the present time it is not appreciable; but, of course, we can not tell whether with an increase in production it might become so.

Mr. MONDELL. Is the condition you refer to to any considerable degree due to deterioration or a change in the powder after it is made?

Gen. CROZIER. There have been some changes of quality due to deterioration in storage. Powder will show a tendency to decomposition if in the manufacture certain purification processes have not been complete and there is left in the powder acid which has not combined chemically with the other materials of which the powder is composed, and there is what we call free acid, which promotes decomposition. Decomposition is also facilitated by the presence of heat and moisture. We have within comparatively recent years improved the quality of powder in that respect, both by improvements of manufacture, perfectionments of manufacture, if I may use that term, by which we get powder of great purity, and in addition we have added certain substances which have a tendency to increase the stability of the powder—that is to say, to reduce the tendency of the chemical components of the powder to decompose and reunite with other components, which constitutes deterioration of powder. However, that is only one of the causes of trouble. Another cause is that powder which is not at all decomposed sometimes exhibits irregularities of pressure.

Mr. SHERLEY. How long have you been making powder?

Gen. CROZIER. Roughly, I should say, for seven or eight years.

Mr. SHERLEY. You have recently used some of the powder of earliest manufacture?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir; we have been using it right along.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it up to the standard?

Gen. CROZIER. A great deal of it is up to the standard. Most of that which we have used since we commenced to put in that stabilizing substance I spoke of has remained up to the standard, so far as decomposition difficulty is concerned.

Mr. SHERLEY. It has shown no depreciation by virtue of age?

Gen. CROZIER. No, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. The trouble you spoke of a moment ago is a trouble which presumably exists in powder of private manufacture?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir; independently of age.

Mr. SHERLEY. This condition that confronts you is a condition that confronts the private powder manufacturers?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. Your powder is in no sense inferior to theirs?

Gen. CROZIER. I think not, although we have had a little more of this difficulty with the powder that we have made ourselves than we have had with that we have purchased. The first item of appropriation which I have submitted in connection with this arsenal is intended to contribute toward diminishing that difficulty. You see, in the manufacture of powder a very important process is the nitration of the cotton into guncotton. This powder is essentially guncotton, although we change its form from the form of cotton into the form of a solid substance, with which you are familiar. In nitrating it it is difficult to insure a uniform combination of the nitrogen with the cotton. The percentage of nitrogen in the cotton is apt to vary, and if it varies beyond a certain very narrow limit it varies the solubility of the cotton in a mixture of ether and alcohol preparatory to gelatinizing it and forming it into grains, and the presence of insoluble cotton in the resulting grains contributes to the irregularity, so to speak, and anything that promotes the uniform nitration of the cotton is valuable in a manufacturing way. By this apparatus and the means of housing it which I hope to get through this appropriation, we are expecting to increase the uniformity of nitration.

Mr. SHERLEY. Before we go into this item, as long as we are dealing with the basic subject, it is contemplated by the War Department to obtain in the course of four years 30,000,000 pounds of powder of all kinds?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. We are paying, or have been paying, for the powder we buy, 53 cents per pound for cannon powder, and 75 cents per pound for small-arms powder. The difference between this price and the cost of manufacture is in cannon powder 14 cents, and in small-arms powder 27 cents. In your hearing before the fortification subcommittee, I estimated that by an expenditure of $700,000 the arsenals would be in a position to make all of this powder, and that the making of it at those figures would represent a saving of something like $4,000,000. Is that accurate?

Gen. CROZIER. That results from the figures; yes, sir; and I have no reason to question the accuracy of them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, we could not get that maximum capacity immediately, so that it would represent a period of probably five or six years for the supplying of this total, assuming that we made it all. Now, in view of that very large saving, don't you think it desirable, even if we do not create a plant sufficient to make it all, that we should create a plant sufficient to make a very large part of the total?

Gen. CROZIER. If economy were the only thing to be considered, of course, there would be only one answer to the question, but there are other things to be considered. The plant which would enable us to meet our own four-year program would not enable us to meet our war-time necessities in the way of powder. We would have to go far in excess of our peace-time needs, if we were to meet war-time needs. Therefore, it is desirable for us to have in the country a powder-making capacity considerably greater than that which would correspond to peace-time needs, and I do not know of any way of having that capacity in the country except by giving private manufacturers a reasonable amount of patronage. Of course that leaves the question undecided as to what a reasonable amount would be, or what amount would be sufficient to keep the plants, if not in existence and up to a good capacity, at least with a knowledge of the art of powder making, so that they could expand on occasion. Now, I think that our peace-time appropriations will be such that if we were to give out to private contract only the orders for powder which are in excess of our capacity as it is at present, or as it would be if we increased the factory up there so as to make 11,000 pounds a day—that that would be no more than enough to accomplish the object I am speaking of.

Mr. SHERLEY. Let us figure on that a moment: If you increase your capacity to 11,000 pounds a day, you would produce an annual output of 3,300,000 pounds, which would leave 4,200,000 pounds of powder to be obtained by contract?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. That would be very much in excess of the amount that the Army obtained by contract in the old days when we did not make any powder.

Gen. CROZIER. Perhaps. I do not know about that; I do not remember those figures, going back to the time when we did not make any powder.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think you will find that in those days we did not have an annual purchase of 4,000,000 pounds of powder for the Army, but even waiving that, do you think that the du Pont people, who, with perhaps one exception now, are the only people prepared to make this powder, need, in order to insure their staying in the business, a contract with the Army for 4,000,000 pounds of powder annually?

Gen. CROZIER. Of course the larger the contracts you give them, the larger the proportion of plants they would keep in operation. That goes without saying. But you have omitted or only casually referred to the other powder-manufacturing establishment, so that the du Pont people would not get all of it, and there would not be enough business to keep both of them busy, although it would be to the interest of the Government to keep them going. Suppose you divided the orders equally between them, cutting this amount in half, that would mean only 2,000,000 pounds for each one, which would cut it down to a not very large capacity. There is another point in connection with it, and that is, that in addition to needing these private manufacturers for the purpose of simply getting their increased production in time of war, this subject is a progressive one, and we need to have people working on it and experimenting with it and trying to improve it. That ought to be going on all the time, and if we keep those powder companies in existence, working on the subject with the interest that would come from there being considerable profit in it, that effort would be stimulated all the time.

Mr. SHERLEY. They are not dependent by any means upon the Government of the United States for a market for this class of powder. They not only now, of course, are selling more than they can make, or they could sell more than they can make, but in ordinary peace times they have supplied considerable foreign orders. Is not that true of the du Pont people?

Gen. CROZIER. They have on this side of the ocean. I do not know how much they have actually sold, but they have been in relations with some other Governments, I know, and if they have not sold powder to them they have established powder plants for other Governments, out of which, I suppose, they have gotten their proper profit from the utilization of powder-making knowledge as well as from the sale of powder.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much money would it take to equip the Picatinny Arsenal for an annual output of 5,000,000 pounds of powder?

Gen. CROZIER. I have an estimate here to give it a capacity of 30,000,000 pounds, which I think would be what would be needed in the first year of a war in which we would use 1,000,000 men and in which we would increase the Army by another million men during the progress of the war, and that cost would be about $5,000,000, operating the factory on a three-shift basis. If you cut that down to 5,000,000 pounds, it would be about one-sixth of that, although we can not cut these things down exactly proportionately, but that will give you an idea of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is assuming that you were building a new plant, but you have got a plant now with an output of 1,800,000 pounds.

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. And you stated that by an expenditure of $53,000 you could bring that up to 3,300,000 pounds.

Gen. CROZIER. You do not mean 5,000,000 pounds in addition to that figure?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I mean a total output at Picatinny Arsenal of 5,000,000 pounds of powder.

Gen. CROZIER. That would involve a new plant capable of producing about 1,700,000 pounds—an entirely new plant.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is, if the old one is not capable of that additional expansion?

Gen. CROZIER. Three million three hundred thousand pounds would utilize all the expansibility of the production there. It would bring all the backward elements up to the forward ones, so to speak, so that the capacity for the 1,700,000 pounds would have to be an entirely new plant. That would be practically an extension, and I suppose that that entire new plant would cost something less than the cost of the plant as it exists now.

Mr. SHERLEY. You testified that the plant as it exists now stood you $750,000, and this addition would make it practically $800,000. I mean the addition of this $53,000?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir; practically $800,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, there are some economies, presumably, that you would get as the result of your experience. Could you build for $600,000 or $700,000 a plant that would give an additional capacity bringing it to 5,000,000 pounds?

Gen CROZIER. Yes, sir; and it ought to be better than that. I should say roughly that it ought to be built to-day for $500,000. I know that sum would make a very considerable impression on it.

The CHAIRMAN. If we were to provide for an additional capacity of 1,700,000 pounds of powder a year in any present plant, would it be desirable to provide that additional capacity at the Picatinny Arsenal or at some other place?

Gen. CROZIER. Of course, the consideration you would have to have in mind there would be the safety of the situation. Picatinny Arsenal is not as far from the seacoast as I would like to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. Is there danger from fire or destruction from explosions?

Gen. CROZIER. There is that, of course, although we scatter the elements of the factory so that a fire in one is not likely to be communicated to another; but, in addition to the danger of a raid and the danger of capture, when we are as near the seacoast as Picatinny Arsenal is, there is exposure to air raids, possibly from aeroplanes from shipboard, flying over the arsenal and dropping bombs on it, and I have no doubt that the ability to do that will improve as we go on.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the distance of Picatinny Arsenal from the coast?

Gen. CROZIER. It is about in the middle of New Jersey. It is about 1 hour and 10 minutes ride by fast train west of Hoboken.

The CHAIRMAN. On what road?

Gen. CROZIER. The Delaware & Lackawanna. I should say that if you were going to make a considerable enlargement, with a view to getting a capacity equal to our present capacity, or a considerable enlargement, you had better not put it at Picatinny Arsenal, but it would be better to put it somewhere else.

The CHAIRMAN. All these estimates as to the requirements in war time are based upon the needs of 1,000,000 men in the field, are they not?

Gen. CROZIER. The needs of a million men during the first year. We start in with 1,000,000 men, and then we would increase that Army as fast as we could, upon the supposition that we would get a second million men in by the end of year, with their original equipment and such expenditure as they could make in the war from the time they would be able to get into it.

The CHAIRMAN. You spoke of the desirability of manufacture in private plants in order to keep them going so that they could be expanded in time of war; have you any definite information as to the expansion of private plants in this country as a result of the present war?

Gen. CROZIER. We have had some information about that, and I think that I am safe in saying that the capacity of the private plants in this country at the present time is over one hundred times that of the Picatinny Arsenal.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean what is it now in comparison with their capacity prior to the time of this war?

Gen. CROZIER. Well, it is very much greater.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any definite information as to that?

Gen. CROZIER. I have information enough to enable me to answer the question, but I haven't it in mind now.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a plant in the neighborhood of Gloucester, N. J., near Camden, is there not?

Gen. CROZIER. There is one at Carneys Point, N. J.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is that?

Gen. CROZIER. Carneys Point is just opposite Wilmington, on the Delaware River. Gloucester is below Philadelphia, on the New Jersey side of the Delaware.

The CHAIRMAN. I am informed that prior to the war they employed about 2.000 men and that now they are employing 12,000 or 14,000 men.

Mr. SHERLEY. General, our plant has now cost us about $750,000, and it has an output of 1,800,000 pounds. Now, figuring that at 38 cents per pound, and, of course, it is worth more than that, because some of it is small-arms as well as cannon powder, it would represent an output value of $684,000, or pretty nearly as much as the total cost of your plant. I speak of that to show the very marked relationship between plant cost and output. There is probably no manufacturing concern that could show for the same investment so large an output of finished product. That is true, is it not?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. That being true, in view of the large quantities that we are to make, does not the economical side of it almost compel the Government into a very great increase in its output? It is not like a case where you would be tying up a great deal of capital in a Government plant, but you practically make a saving of your capital every few years.

Gen. CROZIER. That is true, as the figures go, but, as I have mentioned several times, it is very difficult to include all of the expense. I have stated to the committee before that we have started in on the manufacture of this powder practically without the necessity for experimentation. We came in with a well-established process, but the private manufacturer has not been able to do that. He had to make the expenditures necessary to develop the process. Of course, it is reasonable to suppose that he has gotten those expenditures back by this time. But we have not yet tested the influence of such competition as we can expect to get upon the restoration of peace from establishments in this country, and if we were to go into the manufacture of powder to a greater extent than would result from an improvement of our present plant we would be going counter to the principle, which, I think, is a good one, that the Government in the manufacture of its fighting material should restrict itself to an amount which would enable us to manufacture economically, and we would be going beyond that point for the purpose of securing the financial advantage resulting from cheaper manufacture.

Mr. SHERLEY. But here is a manufacture that has so developed since the European war as to amaze everybody as to the extent of the private output of this country. In view of that tremendously quick expansibility, do we need to be unduly worried as to what might overtake us in case of the outbreak of war? Would we not find almost immediately, both through Government and private enterprise, an ability to tremendously increase our output?

Gen. CROZIER. We would find it in a time which perhaps we might now call short; but we must remember that this war, which has promoted this increase of capacity, has been going on for a year and a half, and we certainly would not want it to be even six months before we could count upon a considerable increase of capacity over the Government's capacity.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand. But we are piling up this reserve of twenty-odd millions to take care of some of that time.

Gen. CROZIER. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The truth is that the bulk of the output of these plants is of powder for commercial uses.

Gen. CROZIER. The bulk of the output of the plants is explosives for commercial uses, but these plants are not now producing this powder for commercial uses.

The CHAIRMAN. These plants could turn out an output greatly in excess of any demand for governmental uses.

Gen. CROZIER. They can with part of their plants; they do, with a part of their plants, turn out an output of explosives very much greater than the Government calls for, but they do not turn out for commercial purposes practically any of the exact kind of powder which the Government uses.

The CHAIRMAN. But that part of the plant which deals with the manufacture of these commercial explosives could be readily adapted to the manufacture of the explosives that the Government requires.

Gen. CROZIER. That is only partially true. For instance, the commercial explosive in very common use is dynamite in some form. Now, dynamite has nothing to do with our smokeless powder at all. The only thing that is used in the manufacture of dynamite and in the manufacture of our smokeless powder is nitric acid.

The CHAIRMAN. Still it must be due to some extent, in view of the tremendous increase in the output, to the manufacture of powder for governmental purposes.

Gen. CROZIER. It is due to that to a certain extent and partly due to the personnel of these manufactories. They have the people who are sufficiently familiar with the processes to enable them, with little instruction from the men who are making the smokeless powder, to supervise the new plants which they have put in.

The CHAIRMAN. They have gotten many of those men from us, have they not?

Gen. CROZIER. Not these powder-making people; no. They have gotten one very valuable man from us; but, as far as powder making is concerned, I do not remember any others.

Mr. MONDELL. Are the commercial powders of the same general composition as our Army powders?

Gen. CROZIER. Some of them are of approximately the same composition as some army powders, but not of ours. They have nitroglycerin in some of them, and some others are made from wood pulp instead of being made from cotton.

Mr. BORLAND. In answer to the question of the chairman you said that the capacity of the private plants now was conservatively estimated at one hundred times the capacity of the Government plants.

Gen. CROZIER. That is to turn out a powder output for war purposes.

Mr. BORLAND. But you did not give any estimate of the relative capacity of the private plants before they made this expansion following the European war.

Gen. CROZIER. I said that I have in my office figures that about represented their capacity before the war and which I have at times given to this committee, I think, in my evidence on other bills, but I do not know that I have done it this year. However, I have not those figures with me now.

Mr. BORLAND. Do you recall approximately what that was, whether it was very much greater than our capacity?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes; it was considerably greater than our capacity.

Mr. BORLAND. Suppose we assume that the relatively small orders that we have given for powder for our Army had some influence in keeping these plants going, which seems to be a rather remote assumption in view of the fact that they were having a much larger output than we were——

Gen. CROZIER (interposing). Not so much larger in output, but a larger capacity; they were not using it all.

Mr. BORLAND. How can we assume that it is necessary to give a portion of the orders for the Army powder to these private plants when it appears that at the time of the outbreak of the European war their output was very much greater than ours and that since the European war it has expanded at least 100 per cent?

Gen. CROZIER. Oh, much more than that.

Mr. BORLAND. And has expanded within the relatively short time of a year and a half; possibly within a year. Why assume, then, that it is necessary for us to pay a higher price for powder purchased from the private manufacturers for the sole surpose of keeping their business going, so that we may have a potential expansion in time of war? In other words, would our small orders cut any figure after all?

Gen. CROZIER. Our orders, small as they have been—and, of course, we must include with them the Navy's orders, which have been larger than ours——

Mr. BORLAND (interposing). That would not materially increase it.

Gen. CROZIER. Those orders constituted the bulk of their business in military powders before the war, and such capacity as they have for the manufacture of military powder and such ability as they have to conduct that manufacture has resulted in the main from the patronage of the Government, although the Government patronage has not, in comparatively recent years at least, been as large as it had been in the past. They have not had a great deal of foreign business; they have had some, but not a great deal.

Mr. SHERLEY. At one time the reason they did not have it was because they had an international trust agreement whereby they agreed not to go into the foreign market.

Gen. CROZIER. I do not think they ever agreed to keep out of the American foreign market.

Mr. BORLAND. It appears that when they got a chance at the foreign business they were able to expand their facilities and expand them pretty rapidly.

Gen. CROZIER. Well, that is true; yes, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. And it may be they did not expand them before because they were not in the foreign market.

Gen. CROZIER. They were not excluded by that agreement, as I remember it; I have seen the agreement, but I do not remember its exact terms now; I do not think they were excluded from the foreign American market. With reference to that agreement, I think this ought to be said in justice to the powder companies. I find myself defending the powder companies a good deal because there is nobody else to do it. But here is the situation with reference to that agreement: On the face of it, it looks just like one of these combinations in restraint of trade by means of which the trade of the world is divided up among a set of people intending to preserve a monopoly, and that our people entered into an arrangement with people in Europe by which they would agree to give away to them improvements that they should develop over here, which, at first sight, would appear to be to the disadvantage of the United States, and would in other respects enter into relations with them which would be dictated by pecuniary interests and not by any very great infusion of patriotism.

However, that is not exactly a fair way of looking at it and is without any consideration of the facts. The facts are these: These people on the other side, owing to the greater stimulus that they get from their Government than our people get from our Government, developed these methods of manufacturing powder before we did; they were able to make smokeless powder before we were able to make it. Then the Ordnance Department, and I presume also the Ordnance Department of the Navy, demanded that grade of powder from our manufacturers.

Mr. BORLAND. Just there. How did the Government encourage them in making smokeless powder before our Government encouraged our manufacturers?

Gen. CROZIER. The foreign Governments encouraged their own manufacturers by patronizing them and did not stop at a limited amount of patronage.

Mr. BORLAND. What greater encouragement could be given for the manufacture of improved powder than by manufacturng it in our own Government plants?

Gen. CROZIER. Our Government started the manufacture of this powder after the best methods had been developed for making this particular powder; our plants were established after the methods of making the powder had been pretty well worked out, and we got those methods from our own private manufacturers.

Mr. BORLAND. Why is it not just as possible for the Government to encourage the improvement in powder in its own plants as it is to encourage its improvement in private plants?

Gen. CROZIER. It is just as possible, but I am speaking of the situation as it existed at the time this agreement was made, which was just about the time the manufacture of this powder on a large scale was inaugurated in this country. Our private manufacturers were then required by us to produce this powder or else were told that we would get it abroad; that we wanted the best powder; and that if they could not give it to us we would get it from people who could give it to us. Under those conditions they entered into this agreement with the foreign people. As a result of that they got information far more valuable than they could give. The knowledge of how to make this powder flowed over to this side in a greater stream than anything that flowed over to the other side.

Mr. BORLAND. Was it a part of that agreement that we should keep out of the German market and that the Germans should keep out of the American market?

Gen. CROZIER. I think that was a part of the agreement.

Mr. BORLAND. The manufacturers here were to keep out of the foreign markets in exchange for the secrets of manufacture?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes. This exchange of confidential information was very greatly to the advantage of our people, because there was much more that they had to get than they had to give. They went into that agreement for the purpose of being able to manufacture this powder of superior quality in this country, and in addition to what they gave in the way of promises to transmit information and keep out of the foreign markets my own opinion is that they had to pay a considerable amount of money.

Mr. BORLAND. In the present situation, with private manufacturers making a vast amount of material and having a pretty large foreign trade, do you not think we would be safe in making our own powder rather than buying it, and are we not pretty safe in manufacturing it in our own establishments and disregarding this idea of encouraging its manufacture in private plants?

Gen. CROZIER. I do not think it is safe, no; because the powder-making art is not going to stop at this stage; it is going to be a progressive art and an improving art. Moreover, if we were to do what you say and allow the powder-making industry to pass out of existence in this country, the military powder industry, we would be left then with only the Government plants, and I do not think there is the slightest prospect of enlarging those plants so as to meet the war necessities and holding them in reserve until there is a chance of war, which is, of course, what we are now talking about getting ready for.

Mr. GILLETT. If all of that were done would not our Government plants have to enlarge their corps so that they would have a sufficient corps of scientists and skillful men to keep abreast of other nations in making improvements, etc., which, as I understand it, we have never been obliged to do as yet?

Gen. CROZIER. We would have to go into the procurement of a personnel to a greater extent than we have gone thus far, and in addition, if we were to count upon an expansion of the Government's manufacture even of the powder we already know how to make we would lack the personnel engaged in kindred business which private manufacturers have to draw on.

Mr. BORLAND. Can we assume that in the future we are going to be able to get valuable secrets from foreign nations as to the manufacture of powder?

Gen. CROZIER. I think, Mr. BORLAND, that the European market for all military knowledge and ability will continue to be greater than our market, and I think that will have the natural effect in the future that it has had in the past of stimulating military improvement in Europe more highly than it is stimulated in the United States. Just let me remind you of some of the things we have gotten from the other side. This smokeless powder that we are speaking of is a copy. The built-up steel cannon is a copy; the small bore high-power rifle is a copy; the use of some of our high explosive bursting charges is a copy; the long recoil field gun is a copy; the latest improvement in the field-gun carriage, following after the long-recoil feature of the gun, is a copy; those constitute the principal features of our military constructions; we have gotten them all from the other side. We have a sufficiently skillful personnel here to adapt them and to seize on these ideas when they come out over there, and sometimes I think we improve on them. But in the main they have come from the other side because the stimulation is greater on the other side, and I do not see why that would not continue in the future.

Mr. BORLAND. Would not all of those things be adapted by our own munition makers under Government supervision, and could they not be as well adapted under our supervision as under the supervision of a private manufacturer who was engaged on Government orders? In other words, the Government's orders would be based on certain specifications?

Gen. CROZIER. Suppose we apply that question to the very subject we are talking about and suppose that at the time we were concerned about the introduction of the manufacture of smokeless powder the Government factory had been in existence, I do not think that with the hampering restrictions that surround Government officers in attempting to carry on the Government's business we would have been as well able to make arrangements to import that process over here as were the private manufacturers.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield the floor.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask the Senator from Washington to yield to me just a second.

Mr. JONES. I just want to read a paragraph of the testimony the Senator from Wisconsin referred to. I have it before me, and it will take but a moment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That will probably necessitate the reading of considerably more.

Mr. JONES. I think not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Before we go into this item, as long as we are dealing with the basic subject, it is contemplated by the War Department to obtain in the course of four years 30,000,000 pounds of powder of all kinds.

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. We are paying, or have been paying, for the powder we buy, 53 cents per pound for cannon powder, and 75 cents per pound for small-arms powder. The difference between this price and the cost of manufacture is in cannon powder 14 cents, and in small-arms powder 27 cents. In your hearing before the fortifications subcommittee, I estimated that by an expenditure of $700,000 the arsenals would be in a position to make all of this powder, and that the making of it at those figures would represent a saving of something like $4,000,000. Is that accurate?

Gen. CROZIER. That results from the figures; yes, sir; and I have no reason to question the accuracy of them.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. When the Senator from Alabama made the motion, I thought it ought to be adopted; but in view of the information disclosed on the floor of the Senate by this discussion I hope he will withdraw his motion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I made the motion on the assurance of the distinguished Member of the Senate that he had been informed during the discussion that Gen. Crozier had not recommended any such provision as this in the bill. I thought before we entered upon a policy like this we ought to have some information from somebody who is capable of giving it as to the needs of the Government. Therefore I made the motion. Now I am willing to withdraw it. I do not care if the Senate wants to build a powder plant or does not want to build a powder plant, I am in favor of the Government manufacturing its own powder. Perhaps the more plants of the kind we have the better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama withdraws the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It is not necessary that I should renew the amendment I just made. I insist on its being submitted to the Senate. It is to strike out the language which proposes to limit the place on which the plant shall be constructed. I think the Government ought to utilize any proper site it now owns for that purpose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator submit a motion?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I move to strike out the language I have heretofore indicated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Permit me to suggest to the Senator that the same object might be obtained by adding to the provision such terms as will permit it to be located on Government land if the Government owns property where the location would be suitable for the plant.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That would be a more amplified form of stating the same thing. I have not any objection to either form.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, does the Senator propose to strike out——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Permit the Chair to state that the Chair has recognized the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I did not understand that. I addressed the Chair, and thought that I had been recognized.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely wish to make a statement. I was requested to call up Gen. Crozier, who was before our committee, to ask him the question whether or not this item had been estimated for or recommended by the War Department in any respect. He said it had not been, that he had gone before the committee, as the hearing showed, and wanted to get a large appropriation for the arsenals to manufacture this material. I think probably he thought that we could manufacture the powder cheaper than could private concerns, and we made an appropriation for the Frankford Arsenal, and also gave him $6,000,000 in the fortification act. All I know and all I care about it is that he said to me that he had not estimated for this item, nor had any department of the Government done so.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I probably would not have to say anything about this matter but for some observations of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I take it that they were directed, in part, to myself. I opposed the erection of a nitrate plant for a very different reason from any involved in this controversy, because eight-ninths of that proposition was to manufacture something to be sold to the fertilizer manufacturers in times of peace by this Government. I have never in my life been opposed to the Government manufacturing its own powder; on the contrary, on more than one occasion, I have performed fully as valiant service as the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin ever did for that cause.

I doubt the wisdom of this provision for this reason: I do not think it is recommended by the War Department. I think we know that now; and the situation is this: We have a good many different arsenals already established, already bought, and already paid for, throughout the United States. One of them has for many years been in my own State. I believe the idea of the War Department is that without building a new powder plant it could probably manufacture the powder that it needs cheaper at some of the plants or arsenals it already owns; and I do not think the Senate of the United States ought to be swept off its feet and indorse a proposition like this, which the committee has not investigated and about which we seem to have no accurate information, simply because somebody is afraid he will be charged with opposing the Government manufacturing its own powder. There is no question like that properly or necessarily involved in this proposition.

As I understand the statement made by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], a member of the committee, and, I believe, also of the subcommittee that had this matter in charge, Gen. Crozier insisted that $700,000 could be used for the manufacture of all the powder that we might need for many years to come in connection with existing arsenals, and without the necessity to create another plant, and that this would save $4,000,000 to the Government. I do not think we can dispose of the question on any such basis as that suggested by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin. There is no question of private monopoly involved in this proposition, and no question of that sort ought to be suggested about it. It is simply a question of whether or not we ought to use arsenals that the Government already owns and has already paid for, or whether we are going to establish another one, buy another one somewhere else, and spend that much more money at a time when we need to devote all the money that we have and can get by any proper system of taxation for other and more important purposes.

I am willing, if we need another Government plant to manufacture powder, to establish it; but until it is shown that the existing plants can not be more cheaply utilized and can not be used so as to manufacture powder more cheaply than we could get it by establishing another plant, I think we ought to go a little slow about agreeing to this proposition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I want to say a word about the matter. I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I think it improves the paragraph. I understand the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has withdrawn his motion to strike out, although I was not here at the time he did so.

The fact, Mr. President, that we have provided in another act for the establishment of a nitrate plant is simply an argument for this provision, because this provision will afford a means by which to utilize the product of the nitrate plant.

The establishment of a powder factory on the Atlantic coast has been a great success and has saved the Government many hundreds of thousands of dollars in the extortionate prices which otherwise it would have had to pay for powder.

There ought to be one such establishment on the Pacific coast. The Pacific coast is a point of the country which is more directly involved, in my opinion, in many pressing international questions which will confront us in the near future than any other section; and it is that point—that portion of the country—which ought to be prepared and have the means of preparing. When this section is adopted, I am very much in hopes that, in connection with the nitrate plant which will probably be located at the site of some of the great water powers on the Pacific coast, there will be established a powder plant for the appropriate and consistent purpose of utilizing the nitrates there manufactured.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. HARDWICK. Before the question is put, I wish to say that I think the Senator is about to modify the amendment in a way that will meet all views. If the Senator from Arkansas will change his proposition so as to give the department the discretion either to establish a new plant or to enlarge the existing plants, it will meet the situation and allow the department to do whatever may be most advantageous.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think I quite fall in with the idea suggested by the Senator from Georgia, and I have no objection to adding, after the word "plant," in line 6, the words "or the enlargement of any existing plant owned by the Government for the manufacture of powder," and then to strike out the limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as modified.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be read, Mr. President, as now proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from Arkansas if, in his legal judgment, the amendment, without additional legislation, would permit the arsenal at Rock Island, Ill., to be utilized for the purpose of the manufacture of powder?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There is no limitation as to the locality. It is merely a command to the executive officer of the Government to establish a plant or to enlarge an existing plant now owned by the Government for the manufacture of powder. That, of course, would include the Rock Island Arsenal.

Mr. LEWIS. I merely wished to be sure that the amendment would not prohibit the use of the Rock Island Arsenal.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think it will not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, line 6, after the word "plant," it is proposed to insert the words "or the enlargement of any existing plant owned by the Government"; and in line 7, after the word "powder," to strike out "on a site to be procured by purchase or condemnation, or, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, on any suitable site that may be tendered without cost to the United States, which he is authorized to accept," so that if so amended the House text would read:

Powder factory: For the establishment of a plant or the enlargement of any existing plant owned by the Government for the manufacture of powder, $500,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was detained from the Senate this morning by business connected with the naval appropriation bill, and during my absence the paragaph on page 27 relating to the Boston quarantine station as it came from the House was stricken out and another paragraph substituted. I had no idea that any such change was contemplated by the committee and had no opportunity to appear before the committee in connection with it. I can but think that the committee was not aware of the facts in regard to it. This is not a request for a new appropriation for the establishment of a quarantine station at Boston. Under the act of 1893, section 8, it was provided:

That whenever the proper authorities of a State shall surrender to the United States the use of the buildings and disinfecting apparatus at a State quarantine station the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to receive them and to pay a reasonable compensation to the State for their use, if, in his opinion, they are necessary to the United States.

The quarantine station at Boston is built and maintained by the city, the city representing the State. This property was duly appraised by the Treasury officials and a contract was signed by the representatives of the Public Health Service, acting under the law of 1893, and the mayor of Boston that the Government should take it over for $150,000. It is the policy of the Government to take possession of these quarantine stations and centralize them.

The House provision simply furnishes the money to pay the contract which the Government has entered into under the law. Under those circumstances, it seems to me, the House provision ought to stand. It is a contract duly made in accordance with law and in good faith, and the sum of $150,000, after appraisal, was the amount agreed on by the city and by the United States.

I hope the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill will be willing to have the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered, and I move that the vote by which lines from 4 to 8, on page 27, were stricken out and lines 9 to 13 inserted be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment on page 27 was agreed to. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I have spoken to the chairman of the committee about it, and I hope the Senate will be willing to disagree to the amendment proposed by the committee, which I think was put in under a misapprehension.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I have submitted it to the chairman of the committee, and I understand it meets with his approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 161, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

For the completion of the Saratoga, Wyo., fishery station, including construction of buildings, ponds, improvement of water supply, and for equipment, $12,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, to be inserted after the word "fares" and before the word "Provided," on page 100, line 16, and ask the Secretary to read it. Then I will submit some remarks in favor of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 100, line 16, after the word "fares," it is proposed to insert:

That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be allowed a per diem in lieu of subsistence when engaged in field work or when traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia or when engaged on official business at their respective posts of duty at a rate of not exceeding $3 each.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the field-division force of the General Land Office, Department of the Interior, consists of men drawn from all over the country and detailed at divisional headquarters located in the various public-land States of the Union, and are engaged in the enforcement of the statutes relative to the disposal of the public lands to settlers and others, and to those protecting the public lands and timber from depredation. They are divided into three classes: 1, special agents; 2, mineral examiners; 3, timber cruisers.

With the exception of a few positions which are filled by personal appointment of the Secretary of the Interior most of the men are those who have entered the service from civil life and undergoing examination by the Civil Service Commission as to their technical qualifications, or those who have, during long and faithful employment in the General Land Office at Washington, D. C., or in the various United States land offices throughout the public-land States, and under the civil service, demonstrated their fitness for the work and have, by transfer, entered the Field Service.

As a rule, the special agents are lawyers, or specially qualified employees of the General Land Office, who have demonstrated an intimate acquaintance with the public-land laws and their tact and ability to handle people.

The mineral examiners are graduates of technical schools, for the most part, and have had considerable practical experience in mining engineering in private life, obtaining their appointments by competitive examination.

The timber cruisers are men who have had considerable practical experience in cruising timber and quarrying operations, being required to cruise and estimate quality, quantity, species, and value of the various timbers of the West and South, and likewise the nature, value, and adaptability to commercial building and construction operations of the various stone deposits of the public-land States.

It will be thus seen that the qualifications demanded of the Field Service employee are none too small and are such as to demand a high value in the commercial world. To one who is even slightly acquainted with salaries paid to skilled employees of the Government, and especially professional employees, it is needless to say that the Government standard is much lower than that of private employers.

It is customary to assign the employees to field divisions, under the supervision of a special agent, who is designated chief of field division. The field division headquarters are usually located in a central point of the district, usually the capital of the State, where the State limits coincide with the divisional limits, or, if not, then in a capital city convenient to the work. Thus the Helena field division comprises the State of Montana, and the headquarters are located at Helena, Mont. The Santa Fe field division has headquarters at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and comprises New Mexico and Arizona.

The men work out from the headquarters town, spending from one-third of the year to less at that place and the remainder of the time away from headquarters in the portion of the division at which their work is located. The time spent at headquarters depends to a great extent upon the amount of clerical work necessary in connection with their duties. The chief of the field division spends practically all of his time at headquarters. The special agent detailed as special agent in charge of hearings, who is a lawyer and tries the land cases, spends about one-third to one-fourth of his time at headquarters. The other employees spend usually about three months at headquarters while preparing reports and at such times that inclement weather conditions prevent work in the field. In a district such as the Helena field division, comprising the State of Montana, where the winters are long and the field season resultingly short, the time spent in the headquarters for those agents on permanent detail to this division may average a little more than that given, but that is about a fair statement as applied to the entire service. In this connection it may be stated that it is the policy of the General Land Office to maintain a smaller force in the Helena field division in wintertime than in the field season, the present force being about half of the force in the open field season.

The regulations of the office frown upon detailing men to divisions embracing the State from which they are appointed, and the detail of men to any one division is more or less temporary. Naturally many agents find it too expensive to establish their families at the headquarters town, because of this uncertain tenure of assignment and also because their work carries them away from the headquarters town the greater portion of the time. This means, with a great number of the men, that their families are left in the particular places they were living at the time of their appointment, all from the uncertainty of assignment to any one division, the other reasons stated, and the great cost of establishing homes and then breaking them up.

The men are aware of these conditions when they are appointed and knowing that they will be under a great expense, naturally look to see whether the appointment salary is sufficient to recompense them for working under such unfavorable conditions. The entrance salary, being usually $1,200 per annum, they find is not a large salary, when the qualifications demanded, the nature of the work, and the unfavorable conditions under which they work are taken into consideration.

However, they find that most of the appointments contain a reference to a per diem of $3 cash, which was, up to April 1, 1915, included in each appointment, the reference to the per diem usually being stated in the following or similar words:

Under this appointment, and in addition to the salary named, you are entitled to $3 per diem, in lieu of subsistence, and all actual necessary expenses of transportation, including necessary sleeping car fares, while on duty and engaged in the performance of official business, all of which, salary included, is payable from the appropriation for protecting public lands, timber, etc.

This meant an actual salary of $2,295, instead of $1,200, and a thorough consideration of the nature and difficulties of the work, while convincing the new appointee that the salary was none too high, and did not compare very favorably with salaries private concerns were paying for similar work, yet was sufficient inducement to accept, and under these conditions the great majority of the present force were appointed:

* * * Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, except when agents are employed in the District of Alaska they may be allowed not exceeding $6 per day each, in lieu of subsistence. (38 Stats., 45.)

The above is a recitation of that portion of the appropriation for the public lands, timbers, and so forth, 1914, which was in full force and effect when the appointment was made from which the above quotation was taken.

Many of the present employees of the Field Service accepted their positions under that understanding, considering the per diem as much a part of their recompense as was the salary, and from their knowledge of the conditions under which the men work, believed that the work under an assignment to one of the field divisions would be entirely field work, i. e., that all the time they were working, whether at the headquarters town or in the examination or investigation of public entries, they would be under a great personal expense, and an expense that would not vary whether at headquarters or at other places in the division, except at such few and far between places, where the cost of living was not high, unfortunately entirely too few in the State of Montana.

They worked under this understanding for a while. Those whose assignments took them into the States of Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho fund that, owing to the situation of these States, they being in a new and vast undeveloped domain, a few years back practically prairie and mountain, deserted except by a few ranchers and miners, but now rapidly being settled and developing into a great mining, farming, and stock-raising country, the cost of living was greatly in excess of that of the thickly settled regions of the East, South, and Pacific coast, from which the agents came. This was, of course, but natural in a newly settled country, but the agents realized that it would be difficult to have Congress provide one per diem for those public-land States where the cost of living was not so high and another for those States where the cost of living was great. They went on with their work, trusting that their superior officers would come to a better understanding of the conditions that caused the higher expense in these localities and would make salaries in proportion. Whether they have been disappointed in this hope need not be stated but may easily be inferred.

Great was their consternation when they were informed that the Comptroller of the Treasury rendered a decision, dated March 20, 1915, in which he held, construing the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act of August 1, 1914, section 13, and the appropriation for the protection of the public lands, timber, and so forth, therein, that the agents of the Field Service were not entitled to per diem while at headquarters. (21 Comp. Dec., 507). This decision went into effect on April 1, 1915, and since that time, although the men are under the same expense at the headquarters as at other places in their divisions, yet their loss ranges from practically $1,095 of the various chiefs of field division, $450 or thereabouts of the various special agents in charge of hearings, to amounts varying from $400 to $150 of the agents, depending upon their good or bad fortune in spending little or much time at headquarters.

This decision construed likewise the act of April 6, 1914 (38 Stats., 318), which provides:

On and after July 1, 1914, unless expressly provided by law, no officer or employee of the United States shall be allowed or paid any sum in excess of expenses actually incurred for subsistence while traveling on duty outside of the District of Columbia and away from his designated post of duty, nor any sum for such expenses actually incurred in excess of $5 per day; nor shall any allowance or reimbursement for subsistence be paid to any officer or employee in any branch of the public service of the United States in the District of Columbia unless absent from his designated post of duty outside of the District of Columbia, and then only for the period of time actually engaged in the discharge of official duties.

The first part of this act relates solely to reimbursement for subsistence, and the second part relates solely to employees of the various offices and departments located in the District of Columbia and to subsistence, and none of this act can apply to per diem employees, whether located in or out of Washington, D. C.

Section 13, sundry civil bill of August 1, 1914, provides as follows:

That the heads of executive departments and other Government establishments are authorized to prescribe per diem rates of allowance not exceeding $4 in lieu of subsistence to persons engaged in field work or traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts of duty, when otherwise not fixed by law. For the fiscal year 1916 and annually thereafter estimates of appropriations from which per diem allowances are to be paid shall specifically state the rates of such allowances.

This section does not apply to the Field Service of the General Land Office, inasmuch as it covers cases where no per diem has been fixed by law, and in the last analysis is simply an authorization of per diem to employees of the services mentioned whose work requires traveling, and for whom no specific per diem has been fixed by law. In other words, employees, who before this enactment would be on an actual subsistence basis, could by virtue of it be placed on a per diem basis of not exceeding $4 a day each, while actually traveling away from their designated posts of duty, and where no enactment of Congress in existence specifically fixed the rate of per diem to be paid them.

The appropriation for the protection of public lands, timber (38 Stats., 644), specifically provides a per diem and the conditions under which this per diem shall be allowed, and are by the words of said section 13 specifically exempted from the operation of that act. It may well be noted here that the wording of the appropriation for protecting public lands, timber, and so forth, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, is identically the same as that of the previous year, as herein quoted above.

However, and unfortunately, the comptroller, in his decision, took for granted the application of these acts to the appropriation for the protection of public lands without any discussion of their applicability to said act. It is possible that a discussion of the application of these statutes to the status of the Field Service employees would have clearly shown that they did not apply—at least the agents think so, after careful consideration of the various statutes and their application. Unfortunately, again, the department came out in a circular and announced that appeals should not be carried above the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office without their express permission.

The following year Congress passed the appropriation for protecting public lands, timber, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916. This contains the following provisions relative to per diem to field employees:

* * * Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation may be allowed per diem in lieu of subsistence, pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, at a rate not exceeding $3 each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, except when agents are employed in the District of Alaska, they may be allowed not exceeding $5 per day each in lieu of subsistence.

This act apparently, on its face, would afford some justifiable foundation for the aforesaid decision of the comptroller had same been based upon it, but it was not. However, it may well be stated here that the agents are in a position to show that the most reasonable construction of this act would not, upon second consideration, justify the application of section 13 of the previous appropriation act to this field force, and this is not said idly. As a matter of fact, there is now pending before the office a brief on these questions submitted by one of the men involved, an exhaustive and able one, touching not lightly upon the questions as did the comptroller's decision, but at detail and specifically, but this brief and appeal has not yet reached the Chinese wall of the Secretary's order above referred to, and it is problematical what fate it will have when it does endeavor to scale that wall.

On March 3, 1915, this last-mentioned appropriation act was passed. On March 20, 1915, the comptroller's decision was promulgated. On April 6, 1915, the Comptroller of the Treasury rendered a decision construing the same acts as were construed in his other decision. This latter decision relates to assistant supervisor of surveys and their per diem while at headquarters away from the District of Columbia. After discussing the question of whether or not there is sufficient legal authority to employ such officials, the comptroller proceeds as follows:

I am now confronted by a difficult situation. It is said that the supervisory work upon which these specially designated surveyors are engaged is essential to the proper conduct of the surveys of public lands and is of such character that it could not be done by the two supervisory officers specially provided for by law. Arrangements have been made and agreements entered into by the General Land Office in good faith and in the belief that said arrangements and agreements were in accord with the statutory authority. To suddenly terminate the present system would not only embarrass the Land Office but would seriously hamper the work of surveying the public lands. It is said that it would be difficult, if not impracticable, to secure the services of surveyors qualified for this supervisory work for the maximum compensation and allowance of a surveyor.

Why it appears so difficult to substitute new men for those surveyors detailed as assistant supervisors of surveys is hard to understand. Their work is of a technical character, and the various colleges and universities are turning out hundreds of engineers each year. In addition to that there are hundreds of practical surveyors engaged in the active practice of their profession throughout the United States, and many surveyors in the service eligible for promotion. Probably these reasons were explained to the comptroller orally, as he states in the beginning of the same decision. Dame Rumor states that pressure was brought to bear. That a glowing picture was painted of the possibility of the supervisors quiting work and leaving with their notes on the past season's field work in an unfinished condition, and necessitating the duplication of the work at great expense. Whether the old lady is true or not is not known. Suffice to say that the Field Service of the General Land Office did not adopt such tactics, although the General Land Office, acting under express authority of law, had entered into agreements and arrangements with the agents and other field employees to pay per diem "while engaged in the performance of official business," as shown by the appointment quoted in the beginning of this statement; although their work was of such character that it would be extremely difficult to break in new men, and practically every condition mentioned in the above quotation of the comptroller was present. We may go further and state without fear of successful contradiction that the contracts entered into by the General Land Office and the Field Service employees rested upon the law itself, and not merely in a belief that there was statutory authority, or an unfounded construction of the law, such as is intimated in the comptroller's decision in the case with the assistant supervisors of survey.

The decision goes on and discusses the policy of making such arrangements without express statutory authority. Mind you, this is not in relation to per diem, but actually in relation to the employ of assistant supervisors of survey, where the law only authorizes two supervisors of survey, and then proceeds as follows:

However, there is no reason to suppose that Congress would have refused or would refuse to make suitable provision for necessary supervision of surveys, and in view of the apparent good faith of the present arrangement and the injury to the service which may be done by its abrupt discontinuance, with no satisfactory substitute. * * *

So far this relates solely to the detail of men to act as assistant supervisors of survey, and the authority therefor presupposed, because Congress has not gone on record of refusing to give the authority (sic), and he proceeds:

I will authorize payments of per diems in lieu of subsistence to surveyors who have been designated assistant supervisors of surveys whenever they are actually on duty under their special designation, whether at their homes or official headquarters or elsewhere, until such time as you shall have had opportunity to secure some specific legislation on the subject from Congress. In no event will such authority extend beyond the life of appropriations now existent, unless such payment shall be specifically authorized by law.

Then follows the signature, and so forth, of the comptroller.

The statute authorizing the employment of surveyors, and so forth, that was in force at the time of this decision was the sundry civil appropriation bill of May 23, 1913 (38 Stats., 46), and the portion relating to the appointment, and so forth, of surveyors is as follows:

For surveys and resurveys of public lands. * * * The surveys and resurveys to be made by such competent surveyors as the Secretary of the Interior may select, at such compensation, not exceeding $200 per month each, as he may prescribe, except that the Secretary of the Interior may appoint not to exceed two supervisors of surveys, whose compensation shall not exceed $250 per month each, and except in the District of Alaska * * * and such per diem allowance, in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $3, as he may prescribe, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, said per diem and traveling expenses to be allowed to all surveyors employed hereunder. * * *

The wording of this per diem clause is not materially different from the appropriation for the same fiscal year of the Field Service of the General Land Office, which has been quoted herein. The difficulty that the comptroller was laboring under in the last-quoted decision, in part, was not as to per diem as much as to the authorization for designating assistant supervisors of surveys.

Without discussing at length the per diem feature, he, after arriving at the conclusion that the designation of such employees was not expressly forbidden by law, and that Congress would probably provide the authorization as soon as its attention was called to this necessity, simply stated, and without assigning any reason whatever, that he would honor, would authorize, payment of per diem in lieu of subsistence to the assistant supervisors of surveys whenever they were engaged in the performance of official business, whether at home, headquarters, or any other place their duties might take them. Verily the oral explanation to which he alludes in the preliminary part of his decision must have been convincing to him! Then, too, he states that this authorization would not extend beyond such times as Congress would have an opportunity to authorize the employment or designation of these officials.

It seems that the comptroller is subject to the criticism that in a matter financially serious to about 100 men of this service, not to mention the many others within the scope of his decision of March 20, 1915, he failed to discuss at length the application of the acts of April 6, 1914, and section 13, act of August 1, 1914, to men who are paid from appropriations which include a specific provision as to the payment of per diem, and in his decision of April 6, 1915, he assumed, as far as assistant supervisors of survey were concerned, that these acts did not apply. One or the other of these decisions is wrong; if the first was right, the second is an exhibition of "strong-arm work," and the failure to discuss the application of these laws is apparently purposely omitted. On the other hand, if the second decision is proper, then the special agents and other field employees are entitled to per diem while engaged in the performance of their official duties, as their appointments read. But unfortunately the agents do not get their per diem while at their field headquarters, and the comptroller has apparently made no effort to reconcile his conflicting decisions.

After the promulgation of the decision of March 20, 1915, the General Land Office issued to most of the men promotions. A very few were raised $20 a month, the bulk were raised $5 and $10 a month—a mere bagatelle, if it were intended to reimburse the men for the money lost. The appointments then were materially changed, usually reading about as follows:

To be allowed actual and necessary transportation expenses, including sleeping-car fare, and $3 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from headquarters on official business.

To those men appointed after March 20, 1915, no raises were made, for the reason that their appointments were originally made in the same words as were the appointments of those promoted, just quoted.

The facts simmered down are these: The men of the Field Service were appointed under the same contract as were the assistant supervisors of surveys—under the same arrangements. The comptroller holds that the latter are entitled to their per diem while at headquarters. Ergo, the men of the Field Service should likewise be paid per diem while at headquarters. Then, nominal promotions were made, undoubtedly, with the object of doing away with the contracts that the great majority of the men had—all of them, in fact, whose appointments were dated prior to March 20, 1915, the number appointed since March 20, 1915, being exceedingly small. Thus, when this procedure and the order forbidding appeals to the comptroller without express authority of the department, are considered, it is apparent that the only remedy the men have is congressional action, and, therefore, this amendment was introduced.

I believe, Mr. President, that this amendment merely provides simple justice to these field agents. The gist of the whole matter is that while they are in the field they are paid $3 a day for subsistence; but when they go to the division headquarters, like Helena, Mont., and spend three or four months there, they are still away from home, because they are outside of their place of residence, and they are allowed no subsistence.

I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am compelled to raise the point of order on this amendment, because it changes existing law, it is new legislation, and in the teeth of the opinion read by the Senator from the Comptroller of the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order must be sustained.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a suggestion from the Department of Justice. I have been out of the Chamber part of the time, and it is possible that this amendment has already been offered, but I am not sure. I therefore offer it.

On page 145, after line 6, I move to insert the following:

That the Attorney General, the Postmaster General, Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy are created a commission to make due inquiry and to report to Congress at its next regular session what supplies for the sole use of the Government can be produced at the United States penitentiaries; what equipment will be necessary therefor in each of said institutions; and the estimated cost thereof.

There is no suggestion of an appropriation, Mr. President. It only directs these four members of the Cabinet, in connection with our legislation with reference to the prisons, to gather certain information and furnish it to the Congress at the next session.

I am advised by the Attorney General that the work which the department has found for the employment of prisoners heretofore will be completed this fall, and that unless some other provision is made for their employment idleness will be the condition of the prisoners. This is merely a direction to these four members of the Cabinet to make an investigation of certain facts and furnish a report of their findings to Congress at the next session.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, as the Senator says, it is without any appropriation; but it is just plain, simple legislation, and I make the point of order that it can not be put on this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it gives them no authority at all. It simply requires them to furnish us information. I hope the chairman of the committee will not object to it. It simply authorizes them to furnish us certain information. We can pass a joint resolution of the Senate and House, if desired, and direct them to do so.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Let the Senator do it in that way. It does not belong on an appropriation bill. It is legislation, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I rather think it falls within the point. I submit it to the Chair for decision. Part of it is not general legislation.

I want to add that the provision was agreed upon by the members of the Appropriations Committee of the House. I had been working upon the subject with the Attorney General. My own connection with it grows out of the fact that one of the Government prisons is located in Atlanta, and I have given some investigation to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This seems to apply, however, to all the prisons of the United States, and covers the entire question. It creates a commission to investigate what supplies can be produced at the United States penitentiaries. It seems to cover the whole subject of prison labor. The Chair believes, therefore, that it is general legislation, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It explains itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 192 it is proposed to strike out, in lines 11 to 14, inclusive, the following language:

Nor shall there be paid to any such person during that fiscal year any greater rate of compensation than was authorized to be paid to persons occupying the same or like positions on the 1st day of July, 1915—

And to insert:

Provided, That the wage scale in effect for persons employed in the construction of the Panama Canal, or in the operation of the Panama Railroad, prior to April 1, 1914, shall not be reduced for persons employed in the construction, operation, or maintenance of the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad, and accommodations, services, and conditions of employment, including quarters, fuel, and electric current, shall continue and be supplied without charge as heretofore.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I do not like to raise a point of order on this amendment; but the committee considered it and refused to insert it in the bill, and it does seem to me that it is hardly justifiable for us to undertake to regulate wages in a bill of this sort.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It seems to me that inasmuch as this is tantamount to a reduction it is not regulating altogether. It is not increasing or multiplying.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. To save time, I am not going to make any resistance; but it will never live through a conference. The Senator knows that.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I trust the Senate may adopt it. The proposition is——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have not a word to say. The Senate can do as it pleases about it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. These employees have been receiving their regular wages, and they were entitled to rental, fuel, and electric light at the hands of the Government free.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will not raise a point of order if the Senator will not debate it. The Senate may act on it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I want to explain it to the Senate, so that I trust I may get a vote or two, or maybe more. The proposition is now to take from these wage earners their rental and their fuel and their light.

I ask the adoption of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, on page 99 I move to strike out lines 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 99 it is proposed to strike out all of lines 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, in the following words:

So much of the Agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1916 as authorizes the use of the Maltby Building and the buildings on the west side of New Jersey Avenue, between B and C Streets, NW., in Washington, D. C., by the Department of Agriculture is repealed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, under that act——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will not make a speech on it, it may go in. I do not care. Let us finish this bill to-night. If we keep on we will not finish the bill to-night.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If there is no objection to it——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not going to make any objection to it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; I ask for a vote on it, then.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before that is done I want to say a few words:

This building is now under the Interior Department, and directly under the jurisdiction of Mr. Elliott Woods, Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds. He assures me, and wishes me to assure the Senator from Colorado, that if this paragraph remains in the bill no disturbance of the existing condition will be made for a year, and that he thinks it is better to have it go in the bill.

That is all I care to say about it. I think the Senator from Colorado is unnecessarily exercised about the Maltby Building. Mr. Woods has now allowed certain parties connected with the Government to occupy it, and he proposes to have it so occupied for at least a year; so that we will have time in the future to look into it if that provision remains in the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say that that provision in the Agricultural bill prevented the tearing down of that block of buildings. We are now paying $600,000 in rents in the city of Washington. Those buildings are good for storage purposes, if for no other; but even if they were not good for any purpose it is better to retain them there than to tear them down, because then there would be facing on the park the most insignificant houses on the little street back of that, which would not be fit to face a beautiful park like this will be.

I want to say, Mr. President, that if this provision is repealed, and they are permitted to tear down those buildings, you will find that there will either be a great, high wall constructed to hide those buildings—which was suggested by one of the committee—and then the people on the other side of the street will undoubtedly object to it; or, if that is not done, you will find that an appropriation will be made for the purpose of buying the balance of the buildings down to First Street, which will involve the Driscoll Hotel and others.

Consequently, it seems to me that this provision ought to be retained until some suitable public building is placed there, if the present buildings are not used for other purposes, such as storage purposes, or occupation by some department of the Government. Does the Senator object?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not making any objection to anything. The Senate can put in the bill anything it wants, now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate more than a moment.

I move to strike from the bill the provision on page 131, beginning at line 5 and ending at line 28. I do this because I think if the United States Government is going to maintain colleges and universities in the District of Columbia, there should not be any discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; that a university should not be maintained because it is for white people, or because it is for black people, or because it is for yellow people. There is no more reason why the United States Government should maintain Howard University than it should maintain the other universities situated in this city. I think the American people have done enough for the negroes of the District of Columbia. For that reason I move to strike that provision from the bill. I expect this amendment to be defeated, but I want to serve notice now that in the future, so long as I remain in the Senate, I am going to do what I can to defeat this act of unwarranted favoritism.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi moves to amend by striking out that portion of the bill beginning with line 4, on page 131, and going to the bottom of the page. The Senator from Virginia moves to lay the amendment on the table. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to offer an amendment providing for the acquisition of a boat for the Coast and Geodetic Survey to take the place of one of the Coast Survey boats that has been condemned and destroyed. I send it to the desk and ask that it be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert after line 23, page 152, a new paragraph, as follows:

For acquiring a new vessel to take the place of vessels heretofore condemned, $320,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I have no doubt there is a strong call for that vessel and it is needed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very much.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. But we have dealt very liberally with the Coast and Geodetic Survey. We have been exceedingly liberal with them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I realize that fact. I know that the chairman of the committee and the subcommittee that considered the various items of the Coast Survey appropriations dealt very liberally with regard to those items, but those items have no connection whatever with the matter of this ship.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We made provision for the repair of the ships they have, and we omitted this from the bill purely in the interest of economy, thinking it could be postponed and it was not essential that it should be done now. But if the Senate wants to do it now, it is perfectly agreeable to me. I have no fight to make against it. We exercised our judgment, and we thought it could be dispensed with for the present and that the bureau could get along as it has; that it is a large item, and we felt the necessity for economy and omitted it; but we believe that it is an appropriation that will have to be made in the near future. If the Senate wants to make it now, it is for the Senate to say so. We left it out in the interest of economy, in what we considered the emergency conditions of our Treasury, but the Senate can dispose of it as it sees fit.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The statement the Senator from Virginia has made makes it unnecessary for me to occupy the time of the Senate in explaining it at any great length, but there are one or two features of it that I ought to mention in order to make the matter clear.

The work of the Coast Survey on the Pacific coast, including Alaska, of course, as everybody knows, is increasing. Instead of having the same number of vessels to carry on that work that they have had heretofore when it was less than it is now, they have a less number of vessels. The Gedney, one of their boats, has been condemned and this appropriation is urged by the Coast Survey, it is estimated for by the department, and I am very glad to hear the chairman of the committee say he will not resist it, although I understand his attitude upon it.

Mr. JONES. In connection with the amendment offered by my colleague, I simply want to ask that there may be printed in the RECORD the part I have marked from the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Boston that covers the situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Certain portions of our coast constitute veritable ocean graveyards because of submerged rocks. The entire coast of Massachusetts and, in fact, all the New England coast must be wire dragged in order to insure the safety of human life and commerce. At the rate at which the department has been able to do this work, owing to the inadequate appropriations provided, it will take many years to complete it, whereas the work ought to be done promptly. The appropriation for the Coast and Geodetic Survey Bureau heretofore has not been sufficient to permit the purchase of launches for wire-drag work, and as a result the bureau has been forced to hire launches each summer at a rental out of proportion to the value of the launch. In many cases the entire superstructure has had to be changed in order to adapt it to the needs of the bureau, and when the season is over the superstructure must be removed so that the launches may be placed in their former condition, to be returned to the owners—an expensive method of conducting the department.

The importance of this wire-drag work, which with great accuracy and at a very small cost discovers all obstructions in the territory dragged, is shown by the fact that recently at a point close to the entrance to the main shipping channel at Boston Harbor a mass of rock was discovered over which there were only 28 feet of water, whereas the old chart gave a depth of 43 feet. One such hidden obstruction in an important channel is likely to cause a loss to shipping and a loss of life greater than the expense of the annual upkeep of the entire bureau. Not more than three weeks before this obstruction was discovered a United States battleship, costing nearly $10,000,000, came into Boston Harbor over this course, where the water was supposed to be over 40 feet deep, and had the good fortune to miss hitting this rock.

At present the bureau has no vessel with which to carry on the survey of the Alaska coast line that is capable of doing work outside of protected waters. Last year the vessel which was in use was condemned by the steamboat inspectors and had to be abandoned. There is urgent need of an appropriation for a new vessel to replace the one condemned. In Alaska there are about 26,000 miles of coast line, only 3,000 miles of which have been surveyed, and as the only way to reach the ports of that country is by water, it follows that with 23,000 miles of shore line yet to be surveyed, it is very important that the survey work should be pushed.

In the past 15 years the average loss of vessels in Alaskan waters, due to lack of charts, has been 100 per cent a year more than the amount appropriated by the Government for survey work. The insurance premium on a vessel going to Alaska is very high because of the dangers encountered in using these waters, due to the failure of the Government to chart them. One vessel, costing $500,000, had to pay $100,000 insurance. The coastal waters of Alaska are becoming more and more important to the rest of the country. New England is dependent upon Alaska for about 75 per cent of the halibut which it concumes, and the fishing industry of that country is becoming of greater importance each year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask permission to put into the RECORD a letter from the Director of the Coast Survey in reference to this item.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT,
Washington, June 26, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MARTIN: Conforming with your request, I beg to submit the following brief statement relative to our estimates for a new vessel for the Pacific coast and Alaska and launches for wire-drag work, etc.

New vessel $320,000

The Federal Government has appropriated $35,000,000 for a new railroad in Alaska, and is making many other wise expenditures there, and as the only way to reach the ports of that country is by water, it follows, logically, that, with the 23,000 miles of shore line yet to be surveyed, we must have vessels and appropriations to carry on the work.

Meanwhile, I have figures from what I consider reliable sources showing that the losses in Alaskan waters for the past 10 years in vessels valued at $20,000 and upward have averaged $490,300 each year, or nearly three times the amount of money this bureau has available yearly for surveys of all kinds on the coasts of Alaska.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey vessel Gedney, 41 years old, was sold last fall, after being condemned by the Steamboat-Inspection Service. We have nothing to take her place. Without a new vessel the condition will be most unfortunate. With the enormous increase in commerce, Alaska and the Pacific coast need greater assurance of the safety of the waters. The supply should be increased and not decreased. We are only asking for a vessel to replace one that has been sold. The vessel in question will be, and all our vessels are, built after consultations with the Navy, emphasizing the fact that the Coast Survey vessels are available and useful in time of war.

5 launches for wire-drag work, etc $75,000

Under existing appropriations for wire-drag work there has never been sufficient money to purchase launches for this work. The result is that each year we hire the necessary launches under competitive bids.

While we make the best selection possible for launches for this work, these two results follow:

First. The type of launch needed for wire-drag work is the type used by fishermen, and we are in the market for them at the very time of the year when they are needed by the fishermen. From this it follows that, though the launches are hired under competitive bids, the amount of rental paid is out of proportion to the value of the launch.

Second. In nearly every instance, though the specifications call for launches suited as closely as possible to our needs, we often have to replace the entire superstructure to adapt them to our needs. When the season is over the rigging we have placed on them must be removed and the launches placed in their former condition to be returned to the owners.

The result is that we are, in rentals and adjustments, paying over and over again the value of these launches, while if money were available to build launches exactly suited to our needs there would not be this extravagant yearly outlay. Then, too, the time of our parties in securing these bids and making these changes each season would be saved.

I am, respectfully, yours,

E. LESTER JONES,
Superintendent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I have one or two amendments I desire to offer. On page 122, line 13, I move to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$50,000." This is estimated by the department. It is for the medical relief of the needy in Alaska. It is very much needed and is an act of humanity on the part of our Government in taking care of these people. I feel satisfied the chairman will not oppose it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am making no special contest, but I believe we have done amply for those people. I do not think the amendment ought to be adopted. The committee did not report it because they did not think it should be adopted, but there is no reason why I should antagonize it further than to express my deliberate judgment about it, that they can get along very well with what we have appropriated.

Mr. JONES. I simply want to say that the Senate has heretofore passed a bill appropriating $75,000 for this purpose; the House rejected it a time or two, but finally in the last bill they compromised on $25,000. The governor of Alaska recommends $125,000. The Legislature of Alaska has memorialized Congress very strongly and set out the deplorable condition of those natives.

While I am glad we have $25,000 I do know that under all the conditions there the Government neglects its duty toward the natives of Alaska in making the amount so small. I hope the Senate will adopt this amendment.

I ask that I may have printed in the RECORD in connection with it a quotation from the governor's report and also from the memorial of the Legislature of Alaska.

There being no objection the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Report of Governor of Alaska to Secretary of Interior, 1915, page 29.]

After continued efforts for several years to secure a medical appropriation for the natives, Congress was finally induced to appropriate $25,000 for the relief of the natives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916. While this is but a drop in the bucket, it is a step in the right direction, and it is hoped that Congress will see fit to increase this amount to a figure which will enable the Bureau of Education to cover the field in an effective manner. The appropriation of at least $125,000 annually is needed to establish a tubercular sanitarium and several hospitals at centers of native population, these institutions to be thoroughly equipped and situated at accessible places, together with the employment of a sufficiently large corps of physicians and nurses to make it possible to reach the greater part of the native population. A memorial to this effect was passed by the Territorial legislature, session of 1915, and it is imperative that Congress make ample provision for the medical relief of the natives of Alaska. The cause of the natives is not hopeless if provision for their relief be made at once.

ALASKA TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE—MEMORIAL RECOMMENDING $125,000 FOR MEDICAL RELIEF OF NATIVES.

House joint memorial 7a.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, do most respectfully represent that—

Whereas the native population of Alaska—Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts—has decreased 14.5 per cent during the period 1900 to 1910, according to reports of the United States census, and this decrease is largely due to diseases which prevail to an alarming extent among them; and

Whereas the Indians of the States have for years received adequate medical relief from the Government, while the natives of Alaska have not been provided for in this respect; and

Whereas the eradication of these diseases, not only for the preservation of the native races, but the protection of the white population, is desired and essential, especially at this time, when heavy immigration into the Territory is anticipated, due to the activities in connection with the construction of the proposed Government railroad and developments in other industries:

Resolved by the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, That we respectfully and earnestly petition the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, to appropriate the sum of at least $125,000 for the establishment of well-equipped hospitals in each division of the Territory, and thus provide a medical service for the natives of Alaska somewhat similar to the relief furnished to Indians of other sections of the United States; and be it lastly

Resolved, That a copy herof be sent to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and the Hon. James Wickersham, Delegate to Congress from Alaska.

Passed the house March 24, 1915.

EARNEST B. COLLINS.
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

BARRY KEOWN,
Clerk of the House.

Passed the senate April 17, 1915.

DAN A. SUTHERLAND,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

ALFRED E. MALTBY,
Secretary of the Senate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Territory of Alaska, ss:

I, Charles E. Davidson, secretary of Alaska, do hereby certify that the above is a full, true, and correct copy of house joint memorial No. 7a of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, passed at the second session thereof.

Witness my hand and the seal of the Territory of Alaska, affixed at Juneau, the capital, this 6th day of May, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.] CHARLES E. DAVIDSON,
Secretary of Alaska.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, in relation to this item I will say that the natives of Alaska in the interior and for that matter along the coast——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that I consent that the amendment may be adopted as far as I am concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, and in support of the amendment I submit a letter which I ask may be read after the amendment is read.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, at the end of line 27, add:

To exhume, transport to San Francisco, and reinter in the National Cemetery at San Francisco, the remains of Orman K. Osbon, late a private in the First South Dakota Infantry, also a private in the Thirty-sixth Regiment United States Volunteers (Col. J. Franklin Bell), and at the time of his death a teacher in the United States schools in the town of Bolinao, Province of Zambales, Luzon, Philippine Islands, $200, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. OVERMAN. I make the point of order on the amendment that it is not estimated for.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator withhold the point of order until the letter is read?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. I believe the Senator will then agree that it is a proper amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SERGEANT AT ARMS,
Senate of the United States, April 1, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
United States Senate.

SENATOR: My two sons, Orman K. and Wilson M. Osbon, enlisted in the First South Dakota Regiment in May, 1898, and went with it to Manila, P. I.

Wilson M. died of smallpox in Manila, February 14, 1899. The contagious disease which caused his death precluded the shipment of his remains across the country from San Francisco to South Dakota, but the War Department brought them to San Francisco and buried them in the National Cemetery.

Orman served in the South Dakota First until it was ordered home for discharge. He took his discharge in Manila and reenlisted in the Thirty-sixth United States Volunteers, Col. J. Franklin Bell, and served the full term of enlistment. He had learned both the Spanish and Tagalo (Philippine) languages, and during a part of his term in the Thirty-sixth was detailed to act as interpreter at Col. Bell's headquarters.

After the expiration of his second term he again entered Government service as a teacher. He had been a teacher in Dakota before the war, holding a first-grade State certificate. Because of his education, experience, and his knowledge of the native language he was very successful as a teacher. He was sent alone to Iba, the capital of Zambales Province, Luzon, where he built a nipa "shack" with his own hands and opened the first English school ever taught in the Province, with an initial attendance of 7 pupils. One year later he had an enrollment of 256 pupils in the day school and of 40 adults in a night school, and had a schoolhouse large enough to accommodate them, built by voluntary native labor, without one cent of expense to the Government. He had four assistants—two soldiers detailed from the Army and two Filipinos, one of whom he had taught his first English. He organized a celebration on July 4, with patriotic recitations and a flag drill by the children, and delivered an address himself in the Tagal language, which was warmly praised by the superintendent of education for the Philippines. Later he was sent to Bolinao to organize and develop the school there.

An insurrecto leader, named Manalang, had a band of "ladrones" in the mountains near Bolinao, who were harrassing and robbing the peaceful natives and threatening to raid and burn the town. Orman organized a company of 24 Filipinos to defend their homes. Lieut. Main, a former officer of the Thirty-sixth United States Volunteers, was in command of the native constabulary of the Province, with headquarters at Iba. Orman applied to him for arms and assistance. Lieut. Main gave him Mauser rifles for his company and sent two of his men to reenforce him. Manalang's band approached, threatening the town. Orman, with his company, the two constables, and an American ex-soldier named Prevost, went out to meet them, charged and drove them, but in the pursuit a volley fired from ambush killed my boy and one of the native constables.

Writing me of his death and burial, the priest of the Catholic church at Bolinao said:

"Señor Osbon was a good man. He was a good influence with our people. He did not call them 'niggers,' as Americans did, but treated them as fellow men. We loved Señor Osbon very much. We have buried his body in the Catholic cemetery and have put a cross over his grave, inscribed with his name, so you shall know where he lies if you would remove his body to the United States, which he loved so well."

I am myself a veteran of the War for the Union, as you, Senator, are aware. I enlisted on October 9, 1862, at 16 years of age, and was discharged August 2, 1865, "by reason of the end of the war." I served in Battery A, Second Illinois Light Artillery.

My second son, Wilson M., died at Manila 10 months after entering the service, but he had already been promoted from the ranks by Col. A. S. Frost for his efficiency and excellent record. Orman had served out two full enlistments, rendering conspicuous service at the engagement at Tarlac in Gen. MacArthur's second campaign. He also gave efficient service as a teacher and lost his life in gallantly defending his school. He was in Government service and, as the result proved, in as great danger as a soldier in the ranks when he was killed.

For corroboration of these facts, I refer to the records of the War Department; the records of the Insular Department of Education; Col. Alfred S. Frost, late colonel of the South Dakota First; Gen. J. Franklin Bell, formerly colonel Thirty-sixth United States Volunteers; Maj. Braden and Capt. Bell, late of the Thirty-sixth United States; and Lieut. Main, late in command of the native constabulary, Zambales Province, Luzon, P. I.

In view of all the facts, I feel that I am fairly entitled to have the remains of my son brought to San Francisco and buried beside his brother in the national cemetery.

Very respectfully, yours, O. M. OSBON.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator from North Carolina will not make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer an amendment that does not involve an appropriation, but is simply an inclusion of the Rock Creek Park and the Piney Branch parkway in the general park system of the District of Columbia, under the item relating to Government reservations. That ought to have been done long ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That point of order has not been urged against other items.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There must be a limit to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A few minutes ago I offered an amendment making the Attorney General, the Postmaster General, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy a commission to inquire into and report to Congress at the next session what supplies for the sole use of the Government can be produced at the United States penitentiaries, what equipment will be necessary therefor in said institutions, and the estimated cost thereof. The Senator from Virginia made a point of order upon it, but I understand now that he will let it go in.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that he waive the point of order as to both amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I feel constrained to make the point of order. I do it very reluctantly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LANE. I desire to introduce an amendemnt at page 85, line 6, by striking out "$35,000" and increasing it to the estimated amount which, if I remember, was $97,000. The money is to be expended for the making of topographic maps by the Geological Department. These maps are in great demand by the Army. There has been no topographical survey made of a great part of the country on a large part of the unprotected coasts of Oregon and Washington, and without these maps it would be folly to send a troop of our soldiers to protect the coasts. It is a worthy measure of preparedness, and I want to say for the information of the Senate——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will ask the Senator what is the amount.

Mr. LANE. The original amount.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Ninety-six thousand dollars.

Mr. LANE. Ninety-seven thousand dollars. Topographical surveys of that section have been made not by the United States of America but by foreign countries, and very accurately has it been mapped by them. Every pass on the coast, every roadway, and every means of access to that country has been mapped, but not for our use.

Mr. OVERMAN. We will agree to the amendment.

Mr. LANE. I thank the Senator for accepting it. It is necessary and useful. I then wish to offer another amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us see whether the Senate will agree to it. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. For the improvement of roads to Crater Lake in Oregon, that magnificent lake, for roads affording access into the region of the lake, there is appropriated $50,000. The estimate was for $100,000, and it is necessary in order to make the lake accessible to the people, many thousands of them who come to see this unique scenic wonder, that the roads be kept in a passable condition. Otherwise——

Mr. GALLINGER. About how many miles of road are there?

Mr. LANE. I think about 50 or 60 miles on one side and from 15 to 20 miles to good roads on the other side. We have a highway through Oregon from one end of the State to the other, the Pacific highway, and one road branches off from that, but as soon as the traveler gets out into the mountains upon one of the Government timber reserves he goes through a beautifully timbered country with as fine a park of timber as there is anywhere in the world, but he has to climb up and up through sand for 35 miles.

I have seen the largest and best automobiles stalled from being overheated, and compelled to lie by the wayside on account of the difficulty of getting up the long grade. We ought to keep the roads in that national park in fair shape so that the people can travel in and out of it in comfort. I am going to ask the Senator from Virginia if he will not accept the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am a little puzzled to know how the finest timber in the world grows in sand several feet deep.

Mr. LANE. It is a fine volcanic ash, I perhaps should have said, with some sand, but it is a material which under travel cuts down to the depth of several inches, while one climbs all the time steadily up hill. There is a rise of probably four or five thousand feet.

Mr. GALLINGER. There must be beautiful scenery there.

Mr. LANE. The scenery is beautiful, I assure the Senator.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The committee allowed $50,000 for this road. We have tried to economize some in this bill. It has already grown into great proportions. We have felt very sure that they could get along with this appropriation of $50,000, and that it ought not to be increased to $100,000. I hope the Senate will reject the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I propose to offer an amendment which involves a considerable appropriation, and before I send it to the desk I want to state the circumstances under which it is offered.

The survivors both of the Confederate Army and of the northern Army have organized an association to hold at Vicksburg in 1917 a celebration or memorial substantially like the celebration held at Gettysburg a year or two ago. They ask from the Government of the United States the same participation, care, supervision, and aid that we gave to the celebration or memorial at Gettysburg.

Earlier in the session I introduced a bill providing for the participation of the United States in the event and for the aid that was asked. It provided for an appropriation of $150,000. The bill was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. It was reported favorably and unanimously. It was passed unanimously by the Senate and is now in the House. There seems to be some difficulty with regard to securing consideration for the bill as an independent measure in the House on account of the congestion of the calendar there. It is therefore suggested that it be proposed as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill and it is very appropriately a part of that bill.

I introduce an amendment not in the terms of the bill, because the terms were condensed as much as possible, but in substance the same bill that was considered by the Military Committee and passed by the Senate unanimously and which is now in the House. The Committee on Appropriations, on account of the very great pressure which was upon them, did not give the time necessary to consider this matter.

With that statement I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, after line 21, insert:

For the care, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of Federal and Confederate veteran soldiers who served in the War between the States, 1861 to 1865, to enable them to unite in participation of a national reunion and peace jubilee to commemorate the victories and virtues resulting in the half century of peace and prosperity to the American Nation to be held in the national domain within the Vicksburg National Military Park, October 16, 17, 18, and 19, 1917, $150,000: Provided, That out of the said sum of $150,000 thus appropriated, no part thereof shall be available or expended for the purpose provided until after January 1, 1917.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I have been doing disagreeable things all day. The amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa brings every Senator's duty in conflict with a sacred and patriotic sentiment. I have carried my disapproval to-day to the limit. The Senate can dispose of this amendment as it thinks right, without a word of dissent, so far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Iowa who is to disburse this appropriation? Is it to be done through the War Department?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is to be disbursed through the War Department.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I merely want to say one word of approval of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. It would be very gratifying to me if the survivors of that unfortunate conflict, which drenched this land of ours with blood more than a half century ago, might be permitted to meet again under different circumstances on the battle field of Vicksburg, and there enjoy a friendly reunion. The effect would be far-reaching and healthful.

As I said, I am not going to delay the Senate to discuss the merits of the amendment. Suffice it to say that the Confederate veterans of the South and the Federal veterans of the North are very much in favor of the appropriation. They merit it and we should give it. There is no investment that yields so large a return as that which produces love and good fellowship among men. The war is over and the sooner the scars which it made upon the souls and bodies of the combatants are effaced the better it will be for the world. I hope the amendment may be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. On page 126, line 16, I move to strike out the sum of "$30,000" and to insert "$75,000." I will say that the amendment which I propose is less than the estimate submitted by the department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 126, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "$30,000" and to insert "$75,000," so that it will read:

Mount Rainier National Park, Wash.: For protection and improvement, construction of roads, bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads, $75,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, that is within the estimate. I had hoped, however, that these parks would be permitted to rest for a while, but there seems to be no limit to their demands. How much is allowed in the bill in this instance?

Mr. JONES. Only $30,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think the way that the appropriations for these parks are increasing they will soon cost more than the cultivated lands of the United States.

Mr. JONES. I merely wish to say to the Senator that there are only two parks in the country which bring in more revenues than does this park—the Yosemite Park and the Yellowstone National Park. I think more people go to this park than to any other, except those two; and, with a little additional improvement, we shall have many more people going through it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the park has been doing so well on a moderate appropriation, it seems to me it might get along a little longer. But the Senate can do as it sees fit. I have no argument to make on the matter one way or the other.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], I desire to offer an amendment, which the Senator from Oregon said he had submitted to the chairman of the committee and to which he understood the chairman would not make opposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington on behalf of the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 120, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

That hereafter there shall be covered into the appropriation established from time to time under the act approved March 12, 1914, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," the proceeds of the sale of material utilized for temporary work and structures in connection with the operations under said act, as well as the sales of all other condemned property which has been purchased or constructed under the provisions thereof; also any moneys refunded in connection with the construction and operations under said act.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. As that amendment will operate as an economy, I have no objection to it if the Senate sees fit to adopt it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I have submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, which I think he will accept.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 139, line 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That courts of the United States shall be open to seamen, without furnishing bonds or prepayment of or making deposit to secure fees or costs, for the purpose of entering and prosecuting suit or suits in their own name and for their own benefit for wages or salvage and to enforce laws made for their health and safety.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, that amendment is for the benefit of a class that is very helpless, and, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to see it adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations knows how earnestly I have cooperated with him in getting this bill considered. It is the one appropriation bill which must be passed before the end of the fiscal year. I say that for the reason that I had intended to move to strike out, on page 195, the provision relating to the so-called Taylor system, time-measure devices, and so forth, and to take the judgment of the Senate on that proposition. For the reason stated, I shall not now make that motion; but I want to say that in refraining from doing so, I do not want to have it understood that I approve of that provision in the proposed law. I opposed it in the committee, and if there were to be a vote to-day, if I voted alone, I should vote against it.

I will also suggest, Mr. President, that other bills are to come here containing the same provision, and at an opportune time I shall make the motion to strike it out and test the judgment of the Senate on the motion.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate, except for a very few seconds. I want to express my thanks to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] for his valuable and able assistance in the conduct of this measure in committee and on the floor of the Senate.

I want also to thank every member of the committee for the assistance rendered me. The bill had to be prepared and considered under peculiar circumstances; we were compelled to rush matters more than under ordinary circumstances would have been justifiable, but the exigency existed and we had to meet it. It was necessary to pass the bill before the 1st day of July. It has yet to go to conference, and it will take all the activity which we can exert to perfect it by the 1st day of July.

Now, just one or two more sentences, in answer to the criticism of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. Nobody realizes more than do the Committee on Appropriations the importance of discontinuing lump-sum appropriations; we have struggled to do so; but it has been found impossible to anticipate all the wants of the different departments, and it is necessary always to have some lump-sum appropriations.

In reference to the Federal Trade Commission, we went so far in the two last bills as to insert a provision requiring them to submit details as to their wants. We have gotten it in such shape as to be of very little assistance to them. I will not permit that to be taken as a criticism of the commission, because it was a new organization, and it was very difficult for them to foresee all the little details of the service and to provide by an estimate in advance in detail for every little appropriation that it would need. I want the Senate to understand that there is not a member of the Appropriations Committee who is not as much opposed to lump-sum appropriations as is the Senator from Missouri.

It is very easy to get up on the floor of the Senate and to indulge in latitudinarian criticisms of the actions of other people, but if the Senator from Missouri had had to frame this bill, I imagine he would have had just as much lump-sum appropriations in it as have we. At any rate, I want the Senate to know that we are struggling against these lump-sum appropriations. We have reduced them a great deal, and we expect to reduce them more hereafter; but it will always be impossible to eliminate them altogether. You can not anticipate all the wants of a great Government department, and you must, therefore, make some lump-sum provision for contingencies and unforeseen necessities. I merely wished to say this in order to put the committee right before the Senate after the criticism of the Senator from Missouri.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, in order to hasten the final stage of this bill I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by E. T. Taylor, jr., one of its clerks, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes, requests a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. ANTHONY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

PENSION APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15775, being the general pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15775) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, namely:

For Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $158,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately: And provided further, That all allowances made, or hereafter to be made, to medal-of-honor pensioners under the act of Congress approved April 27, 1916, shall be paid from the moneys appropriated for the payment of invalid and other pensions, and section 3 of the said act of April 27, 1916, is amended accordingly.

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1917, $65,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the committee, what amount of reduction does this bill carry as compared to the pension appropriation bill of last year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. This bill carries $6,000,000 less than the appropriation for the current year for the payment of pensions and $35,000 less for the payment of examining surgeons' fees.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to call up the conference report on House bill 7617, known as the good-roads bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to say, for the information of the Senate, that the bill as reported from the conference committee is exactly the bill as it passed the Senate. Only a few minor amendments have been made to the bill. I make this statement because this bill passed the Senate by a unanimous vote, and it is practically in the same shape as when it passed the Senate. I am anxious to get it off the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, submitting additional estimates of appropriations for public works, navy yards and stations, navy yard, Charleston, S. C., and naval magazines, St. Juliens Creek, Va., $1,040,000 (S. Doc. No. 475), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, submitting additional estimate of appropriation in the sum of $275,000 for the employment during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, of such civilian civil-service employees in addition to those authorized in the legislative appropriation act of May 10, 1916, as may be necessary to carry on the work of the Navy Department, etc. (S. Doc. No. 476), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by D. K. Hempstead, its Enrolling Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 391) for the adjudication and determination of the claims arising under joint resolution of July 14, 1870, authorizing the Postmaster General to continue in use in the Postal Service Marcus P. Norton's combined postmarking and stamp-canceling hand stamp patents, or otherwise, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 542) thereon.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13298) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to maks payments to certain Indians of the Rosebud Sioux Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, who were enrolled and allotted under decisions of the United States district and circuit courts for the district of South Dakota, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 544) thereon.

CROW INDIANS, MONTANA.

Mr. LANE. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably Senate resolution 212, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I will say that the resolution allows the Crow Indians of Montana to hold a council in regard to the disposition of their lands. It is indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior, and there should be no question concerning it. If I may be permitted, I will ask for the consideration and adoption of the resolution. (S. Rept. 546.)

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas the tribe of Crow Indians of Montana are in possession of a large tract of land in that State which it is desired by some to open to settlement to the whites; and

Whereas the Bureau of Indian Affairs is opposed to the opening of the said Crow Indian Reservation for that purpose; and

Whereas certain Crow Indians have respectfully requested that they may be allowed to hold a general council of all the members of that tribe, free from interference by either of the contending parties, in order to secure an unbiased opinion of the said Crow Indians upon the question of the disposal of their tribal lands: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby respectfully directed to permit the said Crow Indians to hold a general council of all the members of that tribe and to make provision that no person or persons who desire the opening of the reservation, nor members or officers of the Indian Bureau who oppose the opening of it, shall attend such council nor influence in any way the conduct of said council or its findings, and that permission to attend said council shall be freely granted to all members of the tribe of Crow Indians who desire to do so.

The preamble was agreed to.

R. 16460), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT RIPON, WIS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that there be published in the RECORD resolutions and proceedings of the common council of the city of Ripon, Wis., of the commercial club of that city, and certain signatures attached thereto renouncing an appropriation for a public building costing $75,000, and asking to have the same appropriated in aid of preparedness for defense.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have it printed in the RECORD?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD with the names attached.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LEAGUE OF THE CROSS CADETS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I am just in receipt of a telegram from a military organization in San Francisco consisting of young men, 1,000 strong, volunteering their services. Inasmuch as the battles of the Civil War on the Union side were fought by young men, and, according to Maj. Gen. Carter, of the total men enlisted, 2,778,000, less than one-quarter were over 21 years of age, I feel that this is a very valuable contribution that my State has made to the national defense.

The League of the Cross Cadets consists of young men between the ages of 18 and 21. They are as well drilled and equipped as any militia regiment. They are devoted to the flag under which they serve—the flag of their country. This evidence of their patriotism should fill every American with pride; and doubtless the record of their services, if called upon, will form a brilliant chapter in the history of their country.

I ask that the telegram, without objection, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 22, 1916.

Hon. J. D. PHELAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

First regiment League of the Cross Cadets, 1,000 strong, consisting eight companies, field hospital company, band, and full complement field and staff officers, offer services to Nation in a body and volunteers in event of necessity arising.

Col. JOHN L. FLYNN,
Callaghan Building.

ENGLE, N. MEX.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1843) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain right of way near Engle, N. Mex., which was, on page 2, line 2, after "Provided," to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall at all times have authority to determine the times, place, and manner in which said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. shall be permitted to take such water from said reservoir, and that all expense incident thereto shall be borne by said railway company: Provided further.

Mr. CURTIS. At the request of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON], I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL PARK, HAWAII.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9525) to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. KERN, and Mr. POINDEXTER conferees on the part of the Senate.

RECESS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m., Tuesday, June 27, 1916) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 28, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 27, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal Spirit, source of all things, continue, we beseech Thee, to strengthen, support, and guide us through the trials which now confront us as a people. Give to each of us the disposition to do promptly and faithfully whatsoever Thou dost require of us, and to bear with patience and fortitude whatsoever Thou dost impose upon us, that we may be truly Thine. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14484. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 13486. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. J. Res. 242. Joint resolution to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 8092. An act confirming patent heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sorrow of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM O. BRADLEY, late a Senator from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I report a bill making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations in the Military and Naval Establishments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes. (H. Rept. 852.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] reports an urgent deficiency bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16678) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS AFTER JUNE 30.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I also report, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, a bill extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of pensions under certain contingencies, namely, in case the appropriation bills are not enacted by the 30th of June, for 30 days. (H. Rept. 851.)

Mr. MANN. This is the customary resolution?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16677) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of pensions under certain contingencies.

Mr. MANN. Is this resolution reported from the committee?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; that was reported from the committee this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is this a bill or resolution?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want to consider it now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is to be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. It is ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

TRANSFER OF CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to dispense with the business on Calendar Wednesday to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure but that it might be desirable to transfer it to some day later in the week.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On to-morrow I hope to take up the urgent deficiency bill and this continuing bill.

Mr. MANN. When does this month end?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Friday is the last day of the month. The sundry civil bill, when it comes back, will probably have to be sent to conference, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] desires to take up the Military Academy bill on Thursday.

Mr. MANN. I think until the end of the month we ought to devote ourselves to anything that is necessary in reference to the appropriation bills, and we might also on Saturday, if that is necessary. But why not transfer Calendar Wednesday to Saturday, and if it is necessary to use Saturday for appropriation bills it can be dispensed with?

Mr. KITCHIN. We do not want to transfer Calendar Wednesday to Saturday. We may take up the revenue bill then. Why not transfer it to Thursday?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina expect to be able on Saturday to bring in his revenue bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. We are thinking about that. Why not make it Friday?

Mr. GARNER. Let us dispense with it to-day. I think that is the best thing.

Mr. MANN. All right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This week is a little unusual.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DRAFT OF THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House joint resolution 242, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. I also desire to ask for a separate vote on one of the amendments.

Mr. KEATING. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] a question. Is there anything reserved in that request about taking this resolution from the Speaker's table and so on?

Mr. HAY. I expect to ask for a separate vote on one of the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House joint resolution 242, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference——

Mr. HAY. Except as to the Senate amendment to section 2 of the resolution, upon which I will ask for a separate vote.

Mr. MANN. What the gentleman wants is to have unanimous consent to consider the Senate amendment now?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House joint resolution 242 and consider it at the present time. Is there objection?

Mr. KEATING. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker. Will this give us an opportunity to take a separate vote on the Senate amendment relating to the support of soldiers' families?

Mr. HAY. Yes. That is what I wanted to get at.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution and the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

Also, Senate amendment No. 1, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out all after "That" down to and including "that," line 6.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree to that amendment.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read amendment numbered 2, as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out all after "States" down to and including "hereof," line 11.

Mr. HAY. I move to disagree to that amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to find out what it is we are voting upon. We have voted upon one proposition as to which we had no information.

Mr. HAY. The Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; but it was a matter of striking out something, and no one has the bill before him.

Mr. HAY. I will ask the Clerk to read the language proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 1, line 8, all after the word "States" down to and including "hereof," line 11, which language reads as follows:

"Under the provisions of section 111 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, so far as the provisions of said section may be applicable and not inconsistent with the terms hereof."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves to disagree to that amendment.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read amendment No. 3, as follows:

Page 2, strike out lines 10 to 22, inclusive, and insert:

"SEC. 2. That when any member of the National Guard or the Organized Militia of any of the States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, or any member of the National Guard or Organized Militia Reserves, is called or drafted into the service of the United States under section 1 of this resolution and has a family dependent upon him the Secretary of War is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to excuse such person upon his own application, from the call or from the draft, and if drafted, upon a like application, to honorably discharge him from the service. The word 'family' shall include wife, children, dependent mother, father, sisters, or brothers under the age of 14 years: Provided, That when such person is excused from the call or draft, or discharged from the service, he shall be furloughed to the National Guard Reserve, unless in the discretion of the Secretary of War he is given a final discharge.

Mr. HAY. I move to disagree to that amendment.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read section 2 of the original resolution, which the Senate amendment strikes out.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be done.

The CLERK. The language stricken out is as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of War and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the purpose of maintaining, at a cost of not more than $50 per month, the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge therefrom, which family during the term of service of said enlisted man has no other income, except his pay, adequate for the support of said family; and the word "family" shall include wife, dependent mothers, fathers, and sisters, as well as brothers under the age of 14 years.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 119, noes 5.

Accordingly the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HAY. I move to disagree to all the other Senate amendments.

The other Senate amendments were disagreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. ANTHONY.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee on the Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of H. R. 16122, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. This bill was introduced as a substitute for the bill that was before the Judiciary Committee. It relates to the right of way of the Union Pacific Railroad. The bill was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands. The Judiciary Committee has had charge of the matter in two Congresses. I will say that I have consulted the Committee on the Public Lands, and this action is taken with their consent.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill so that the House will know what it is doing.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 16122) to amend the acts of July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864, and June 24, 1912, relating to the construction of a railroad from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, the legalizing of certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co., and more perfectly disposing of the excess portions of the company's right of way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that this bill be taken from the Public Lands Committee and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill (H. R. 13383), and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the conference report on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill and asks that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. When was the conference report presented?

Mr. FLOOD. Three or four days ago.

Mr. MANN. Has it been acted upon by the Senate?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. On Sunday I noticed, in reading the RECORD, that the conference report had been submitted to the Senate, but I can not find the page of the RECORD. Will the gentleman indicate where the conference report was printed in the RECORD?

Mr. FLOOD. In Saturday's RECORD, page 9920.

Mr. MANN. That is in the Senate. Where was it printed in the RECORD of the House?

Mr. FLOOD. It has not been printed in the House proceedings.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman can not call it up except by unanimous consent. I have no objection to acting on the conference report by unanimous consent.

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. I ask unanimous consent to consider the conference report and that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider this conference report, and he asks unanimous consent also that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection to either request?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13383) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year 1917 submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

No. 1, relating to the transportation of diplomatic and consular officers in going to and returning from their posts: Appropriates $50,000 for such expense at the rate of 5 cents per mile, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $125,000 for actual and necessary expenses of transportation and subsistence, including the transportation of household and personal effects, as proposed by the House.

No. 2: Appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $150,000, as proposed by the Senate, for emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service.

No. 3: Increases the appropriation for the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, from $17,000 to $22,500, as proposed by the Senate.

Nos. 4 and 5, relating to the boundary line, Alaska and Canada, United States and Canada: Appropriates $111,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $75,000, as proposed by the Senate, and provides for salaries and expenses of employees in the field and at the seat of government in the language proposed by the House instead of in the language proposed by the Senate.

No. 6: Strikes out the reduction of $10,000, proposed by the Senate, in the appropriation for the Pan American Union.

No. 7: Increases the appropriation for the International Radio-telegraphic Convention for the year 1917 from $1,000 to $2,500, as proposed by the Senate.

Nos. 8 and 9, relating to the International Joint Commission, United States and Canada: Appropriates $69,000, instead of $75,000 as proposed by the House and $70,000 as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $6,000, instead of $5,000 in the language proposed by the Senate, for services and expenses in connection with the preparation and examination of cases; and limits the subsistence expenses of the commission and secretary to $8 per day each as proposed by the Senate instead of $10 per day each as proposed by the House.

No. 19: Reduces the appropriation for relief and protection for American seamen from $50,000 to $40,000, as proposed by the Senate.

No. 20: Provides that so much as may be necessary of the appropriation for "Contingent expenses, United States consulates," may be expended for rent, as proposed by the Senate, instead of limiting the expenditure for rent to not to exceed 30 per cent of the officer's salary, as was proposed by the House.

H. D. FLOOD,
CYRUS CLINE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it proposed by amendment No. 18, providing for additional allowances to consular officers located in belligerent countries, to make permanent the salaries that will be fixed by the President, or only temporary, while the belligerent conditions continue?

Mr. FLOOD. Only temporary, while the high cost of living continues as a result of war conditions.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as soon as the war is at an end, or shortly thereafter, the salaries will revert to those now scheduled under the law.

Mr. FLOOD. That is the understanding.

Mr. STAFFORD. One further question: What was the reason for the conferees more than doubling the authorization for the consular building at Shanghai, increasing it from $150,000 to $355,000?

Mr. FLOOD. The House reported the $355,000 in two separate items. One of them was in order and the other was subject to a point of order. The $205,000 item went out on a point of order, and the Senate just put the two together.

Mr. STAFFORD. This merely carries out the original recommendation of the House committee?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 2986, the rural-credits bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the bill S. 2986, the rural-credits bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if the conference report has been acted on in the Senate?

Mr. GLASS. No; it has not. The papers are with the House.

Mr. MANN. I suppose we have time enough to-day to have some debate if gentlemen want to be heard.

Mr. GLASS. I had not apprehended that we would consume any more than an hour's time. I conferred with the conferees on that side, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], and we agreed that we would not require more than an hour's time.

Mr. MANN. Some gentlemen desire to be heard, and I suppose there is no reason why we should not take some time. I do not think we are pressed for time to-day.

Mr. GLASS. I do not imagine that we are pressed for time, but I do want to get through with it.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will agree to give us a little more than half an hour.

Mr. GLASS. If I was to consult my own opinion about it, I would give that side the entire hour. I do not want any of it, except to answer any questions that may be propounded after the statement shall have been read. It was agreed between the conferees on both sides that an hour would be ample time.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that is all the conferees wanted; but, inasmuch as we are not pressed for time as far as the House is concerned, some gentlemen on this side desire to be heard.

Mr. GLASS. How much time would be satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. I can not tell yet. I am not going to object to the request of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia that the statement be read in lieu of the report?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 844).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to provide for the investment of postal savings deposits, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"That the short title of this act shall be 'The Federal farm-loan act.' Its administration shall be under the direction and control of the Federal farm-loan board hereinafter created.

"DEFINITIONS.

"SEC. 2. That wherever the term 'first mortgage' is used in this act it shall be held to include such classes of first liens on farm lands as shall be approved by the Federal farm-loan board, and the credit instruments secured thereby. The term 'farm-loan bonds' shall be held to include all bonds secured by collateral deposited with a farm-loan registrar under the terms of this act; they shall be distinguished by the addition of the words 'Federal,' or 'joint stock,' as the case may be.

"FEDERAL FARM-LOAN BOARD.

"SEC. 3. That there shall be established at the seat of government in the Department of the Treasury a bureau charged with the execution of this act and of all acts amendatory thereof, to be known as the Federal farm-loan bureau, under the general supervision of a Federal farm-loan board.

"Said Federal farm-loan board shall consist of five members, including the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be a member and chairman ex officio, and four members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the four members to be appointed by the President, not more than two shall be appointed from one political party, and all four of said members shall be citizens of the United States and shall devote their entire time to the business of the Federal farm-loan board; they shall receive an annual salary of $10,000 payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses.

"One of the members to be appointed by the President shall be designated by him to serve for two years, one for four years, one for six years, and one for eight years, and thereafter each member so appointed shall serve for a term of eight years, unless sooner removed for cause by the President. One of the members shall be designated by the President as the farm-loan commissioner, who shall be the active executive officer of said board. Each member of the Federal farm-loan board shall within 15 days after notice of his appointment take and subscribe to the oath of office.

"The first meeting of the Federal farm-loan board shall be held in Washington as soon as may be after the passage of this act at a date and place to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"No member of the Federal farm-loan board shall, during his continuance in office, be an officer or director of any other institution, association, or partnership engaged in banking or in the business of making land-mortgage loans or selling land mortgages. Before entering upon his duties as a member of the Federal farm-loan board each member shall certify under oath to the President that he is eligible under this section.

"The President shall have the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill any vacancy occurring in the membership of the Federal farm-loan board; if such vacancy shall be filled during the recess of the Senate, a commission shall be granted which shall expire at the end of the next session.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall appoint a farm-loan registrar in each land-bank district to receive applications for issues of farm-loan bonds and to perform such other services as are prescribed by this act. It shall also appoint one or more land-bank appraisers for each land-bank district and as many land-bank examiners as it shall deem necessary. Farm-loan registrars, land-bank appraisers, and land-bank examiners appointed under this section shall be public officials and shall, during their continuance in office, have no connection with or interest in any other institution, association, or partnership engaged in banking or in the business of making land-mortgage loans or selling land mortgages: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to persons employed by the board temporarily to do special work.

"The salaries and expenses of the Federal farm-loan board and of farm-loan registrars and examiners authorized under this section shall be paid by the United States. Land-bank appraisers shall receive such compensation as the Federal farm-loan board shall fix and shall be paid by the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks which they serve in such proportion and in such manner as the Federal farm-loan board shall order.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall be authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as it may deem necessary to conduct the business of said board. All salaries and fees authorized in this section and not otherwise provided for, shall be fixed in advance by said board and shall be paid in the same manner as the salaries of the Federal farm-loan board. All such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees, and all registrars, examiners, and appraisers shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act of January 16, 1883 (vol. 22, U. S. Stat. L., p. 403), and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the President from placing said employees in the classified service.

"Every Federal land bank shall semiannually submit to the Federal farm-loan board a schedule showing the salaries or rates of compensation paid to its officers and employees.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall annually make a full report of its operations to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall cause the same to be printed for the information of the Congress.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall from time to time require examinations and reports of condition of all land banks established under the provisions of this act, and shall publish consolidated statements of the results thereof. It shall cause to be made appraisals of farm lands as provided by this act, and shall prepare and publish amortization tables which shall be used by national farm-loan associations and land banks organized under this act.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall prescribe a form for the statement of condition of national farm-loan associations and land banks under its supervision, which shall be filled out quarterly by each such association or bank and transmitted to said board.

"It shall be the duty of the Federal farm-loan board to prepare from time to time bulletins setting forth the principal features of this act and through the Department of Agriculture or otherwise to distribute the same, particularly to the press, to agricultural journals, and to farmers' organizations; to prepare and distribute in the same manner circulars setting forth the principles and advantages of amortized farm loans and the protection afforded debtors under this act, instructing farmers how to organize and conduct farm-loan associations, and advising investors of the merits and advantages of farm-loan bonds; and to disseminate in its discretion information for the further instruction of farmers regarding the methods and principles of cooperative credit and organization. Said board is hereby authorized to use a reasonable portion of the organization fund provided in section 33 of this act for the objects specified in this paragraph, and is instructed to lay before the Congress at each session its recommendations for further appropriations to carry out said objects.

"FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 4. That as soon as practicable the Federal farm-loan board shall divide the continental United States, excluding Alaska, into 12 districts, which shall be known as Federal land bank districts, and may be designated by number. Said districts shall be apportioned with due regard to the farm loan needs of the country, but no such district shall contain a fractional part of any State. The boundaries thereof may be readjusted from time to time in the discretion of said board.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall establish in each Federal land bank district a Federal land bank, with its principal office located in such city within the district as said board shall designate. Each Federal land bank shall include in its title the name of the city in which it is located. Subject to the approval of the Federal farm-loan board, any Federal land bank may establish branches within the land bank district.

"Each Federal land bank shall be temporarily managed by five directors appointed by the Federal farm-loan board. Said directors shall be citizens of the United States and residents of the district. They shall each give a surety bond, the premium on which shall be paid from the funds of the bank. They shall receive such compensation as the Federal farm-loan board shall fix. They shall choose from their number, by majority vote, a president, a vice president, a secretary, and a treasurer. They are further authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as they may deem necessary, and to fix their compensation, subject to the approval of the Federal farm-loan board.

"Said temporary directors shall, under their hands, forthwith make an organization certificate, which shall specifically state:

"First. The name assumed by such bank.

"Second. The district within which its operations are to be carried on, and the particular city in which its principal office is to be located.

"Third. The amount of capital stock and the number of shares into which the same is to be divided: Provided, That every Federal land bank organized under this act shall by its articles of association permit an increase of its capital stock from time to time for the purpose of providing for the issue of shares to national farm-loan associations and stockholders who may secure loans through agents of Federal land banks in accordance with the provisions of this act.

"Fourth. The fact that the certificate is made to enable such persons to avail themselves of the advantages of this act. The organization certificate shall be acknowledged before a judge or clerk of some court of record or notary public, and shall be, together with the acknowledgment thereof, authenticated by the seal of such court or notary, transmitted to the farm-loan commissioner, who shall record and carefully preserve the same in his office, where it shall be at all times open to public inspection.

"The Federal farm-loan board is authorized to direct such changes in or additions to any such organization certificate, not inconsistent with this act, as it may deem necessary or expedient.

"Upon duly making and filing such organization certificate the bank shall become, as from the date of the execution of its organization certificate, a body corporate, and as such, and in the name designated in the organization certificate, it shall have power—

"First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

"Second. To have succession until it is dissolved by act of Congress or under the provisions of this act.

"Third. To make contracts.

"Fourth. To sue and be sued, complain, interplead, and defend, in any court of law or equity, as fully as natural persons.

"Fifth. To elect or appoint directors, and by its board of directors to elect a president and a vice president, appoint a secretary and a treasurer and other officers and employees, define their duties, require bonds of them, and fix the penalty thereof; by action of its board of directors dismiss such officers and employees, or any of them, at pleasure and appoint others to fill their places.

"Sixth. To prescribe, by its board of directors, subject to the supervision and regulation of the Federal farm-loan board, by-laws not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its stock shall be transferred, its directors elected, its officers elected or appointed, its property transferred, its general business conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law exercised and enjoyed.

"Seventh. To exercise, by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business herein described.

"After the subscriptions to stock in any Federal land bank by national farm loan associations, hereinafter authorized, shall have reached the sum of $100,000, the officers and directors of said land bank shall be chosen as herein provided and shall, upon becoming duly qualified, take over the management of said land bank from the temporary officers selected under this section.

"The board of directors of every Federal land bank shall be selected as hereinafter specified and shall consist of nine members, each holding office for three years. Six of said directors shall be known as local directors, and shall be chosen by and be representative of national farm-loan associations; and the remaining three directors shall be known as district directors, and shall be appointed by the Federal farm-loan board and represent the public interest.

"At least two months before each election the farm-loan commission shall notify each national farm-loan association in writing that such election is to be held, giving the number of directors to be elected for its district, and requesting each association to nominate one candidate for each director to be elected. Within 10 days of the receipt of such notice each association shall forward its nominations to said farm-loan commissioner. Said commissioner shall prepare a list of candidates for local directors consisting of the 20 persons securing the highest number of votes from national farm-loan associations making such nominations.

"At least one month before said election said farm-loan commissioner shall mail to each national farm-loan association the list of candidates. The director of each national farm-loan association shall cast the vote of said association for as many candidates on said list as there are vacancies to be filled, and shall forward said vote to the farm-loan commissioner within 10 days after said list of candidates is received by them. The candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be elected as local directors. In case of a tie the farm-loan commissioner shall determine the choice.

"The Federal farm-loan board shall designate one of the district directors to serve for three years and to act as chairman of the board of directors. It shall designate one of said directors to serve for a term of two years and one to serve for a term of one year. After the first appointments each district director shall be appointed for a term of three years.

"At the first regular meeting of the board of directors of each Federal land bank it shall be the duty of the local directors to designate two of the local directors whose term of office shall expire in one year from the date of such meeting, two whose term of office shall expire in two years from said date, and two whose term of office shall expire in three years from said date. Thereafter every local director of a Federal land bank chosen as hereinbefore provided shall hold office for a term of three years. Vacancies that may occur in the board of directors shall be filled for the unexpired term in the manner provided for the original selection of such directors.

"Directors of Federal land banks shall have been for at least two years residents of the district for which they are appointed or elected, and at least one district director shall be experienced in practical farming and actually engaged at the time of his appointment in farming operations within the district. No director of a Federal land bank shall, during his continuance in office, act as an officer, director, or employee of any other institution, association, or partnership engaged in banking or in the business of making or selling land-mortgage loans.

"Directors of Federal land banks shall receive, in addition to any compensation otherwise provided, a reasonable allowance for necessary expenses in attending meetings of their respective boards, to be paid by the respective Federal land banks. Any compensation that may be provided by boards of directors of Federal land banks for directors, officers, or employees shall be subject to the approval of the Federal farm-loan board.

"CAPITAL STOCK OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 5. That every Federal land bank shall have, before beginning business, a subscribed capital of not less than $750,000. The Federal farm-loan board is authorized to prescribe the times and conditions of the payment of subscriptions to capital stock, to reject any subscription in its discretion, and to require subscribers to furnish adequate security for the payment thereof.

"The capital stock of each Federal land bank shall be divided into shares of $5 each, and may be subscribed for and held by any individual, firm, or corporation, or by the Government of any State or of the United States.

"Stock held by national farm-loan associations shall not be transferred or hypothecated, and the certificates therefor shall so state.

"Stock owned by the Government of the United States in Federal land banks shall receive no dividends, but all other stock shall share in dividend distributions without preference. Each national farm-loan association and the Government of the United States shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock held by it in deciding all questions at meetings of shareholders, and no other shareholder shall be permitted to vote. Stock owned by the United States shall be voted by the farm-loan commissioner, as directed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"It shall be the duty of the Federal farm-loan board, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, to open books of subscription for the capital stock of a Federal land bank in each Federal land-bank district. If within 30 days after the opening of said books any part of the minimum capitalization of $750,000 herein prescribed for Federal land banks shall remain unsubscribed, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe the balance thereof on behalf of the United States, said subscription to be subject to call in whole or in part by the board of directors of said land bank upon 30 days' notice with the approval of the Federal farm-loan board; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to take out shares corresponding to the unsubscribed balance as called, and to pay for the same out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Thereafter no stock shall be issued except as hereinafter provided.

"After the subscriptions to capital stock by national farm-loan associations shall amount to $750,000 in any Federal land bank, said bank shall apply semiannually to the payment and retirement of the shares of stock which were issued to represent the subscriptions to the original capital 25 per cent of all sums thereafter subscribed to capital stock until all such original capital stock is retired at par.

"At least 25 per cent of that part of the capital of any Federal land bank for which stock is outstanding in the name of national farm-loan associations shall be held in quick assets, and may consist of cash in the vaults of said land bank, or in deposits in member banks of the Federal Reserve System, or in readily marketable securities which are approved under rules and regulations of the Federal farm-loan board: Provided, That not less than 5 per cent of such capital shall be invested in United States Government bonds.

"GOVERNMENT DEPOSITARIES.

"SEC. 6. That all Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks organized under this act, when designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be depositaries of public money, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by said Secretary; and they may also be employed as financial agents of the Government; and they shall perform all such reasonable duties, as depositaries of public money and financial agents of the Government, as may be required of them. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall require of the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks thus designated satisfactory security, by the deposit of United States bonds or otherwise, for the safekeeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with them, and for the faithful performance of their duties as financial agents of the Government. No Government funds deposited under the provisions of this section shall be invested in mortage loans or farm-loan bonds.

"NATIONAL FARM-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

"SEC. 7. That corporations, to be known as national farm-loan associations, may be organized by persons desiring to borrow money on farm-mortgage security under the terms of this act. Such persons shall enter into articles of association which shall specify in general terms the object for which the association is formed and the territory within which its operations are to be carried on, and which may contain any other provision, not inconsistent with law, which the association may see fit to adopt for the regulation of its business and the conduct of its affairs. Said articles shall be signed by the persons uniting to form the association, and a copy thereof shall be forwarded to the Federal land bank for the district, to be filed and preserved in its office.

"Every national farm-loan association shall elect, in the manner prescribed for the election of directors of national banking associations, a board of not less than five directors, who shall hold office for the same period as directors of national banking associations. It shall be the duty of said board of directors to choose in such manner as they may prefer a secretary-treasurer, who shall receive such compensation as said board of directors shall determine. The board of directors shall elect a president, a vice president, and a loan committee of three members.

"The directors and all officers except the secretary-treasurer shall serve without compensation, unless the payment of salaries to them shall be approved by the Federal farm-loan board. All officers and directors except the secretary-treasurer shall, during their term of office, be bona fide residents of the territory within which the association is authorized to do business, and shall be shareholders of the association.

"It shall be the duty of the secretary-treasurer of every national farm-loan association to act as custodian of its funds and to deposit the same in such bank as the board of directors may designate, to pay over to borrowers all sums received for their account from the Federal land bank upon first mortgage as in this act prescribed, and to meet all other obligations of the association, subject to the orders of the board of directors and in accordance with the by-laws of the association. It shall be the duty of the secretary-treasurer, acting under the direction of the national farm-loan association, to collect, receipt for, and transmit to the Federal land bank payments of interest, amortization installments, or principal arising out of loans made through the association. He shall be the custodian of the securities, records, papers, certificates of stock, and all documents relating to or bearing upon the conduct of the affairs of the association. He shall furnish a suitable surety bond to be prescribed and approved by the Federal farm-loan board for the proper performance of the duties imposed upon him under this act, which shall cover prompt collection and transmission of funds. He shall make a quarterly report to the Federal farm-loan board upon forms to be provided for that purpose. Upon request from said board said secretary-treasurer shall furnish information regarding the condition of the national farm-loan association for which he is acting, and he shall carry out all duly authorized orders of said board. He shall assure himself from time to time that the loans made through the national farm-loan association of which he is an officer are applied to the purposes set forth in the application of the borrower as approved, and shall forthwith report to the land bank of the district any failure of any borrower to comply with the terms of his application or mortgage. He shall also ascertain and report to said bank the amount of any delinquent taxes on land mortgaged to said bank and the name of the delinquent.

"The reasonable expenses of the secretary-treasurer, the loan committee, and other officers and agents of national farm-loan associations, and the salary of the secretary-treasurer, shall be paid from the general funds of the association, and the board of directors is authorized to set aside such sums as it shall deem requisite for that purpose and for other expenses of said association. When no such funds are available, the board of directors may levy an assessment on members in proportion to the amount of stock held by each, which may be repaid as soon as funds are available, or it may secure an advance from the Federal land bank of the district, to be repaid with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, from dividends belonging to said association. Said Federal land bank is hereby authorized to make such advance and to deduct such repayment.

"Ten or more natural persons who are the owners, or about to become the owners, of farm land qualified as security for a mortgage loan under section 12 of this act, may unite to form a national farm-loan association. They shall organize subject to the requirements and the conditions specified in this section and in section 4 of this act, so far as the same may be applicable: Provided, That the board of directors may consist of five members only, and instead of a secretary and a treasurer there shall be a secretary-treasurer, who need not be a shareholder of the association.

"When the articles of association are forwarded to the Federal land bank of the district as provided in this section, they shall be accompanied by the written report of the loan committee as required in section 10 of this act, and by an affidavit stating that each of the subscribers is the owner, or is about to become the owner, of farm land qualified under section 12 of this act as a basis of a mortgage loan; that the loan desired by each person is not more than $10,000 nor less than $100, and that the aggregate of the desired loans is not less than $20,000; that said affidavit is accompanied by a subscription to stock in the Federal land bank equal to 5 per cent of the aggregate sum desired on mortgage loans; and that a temporary organization of said association has been formed by the election of a board of directors, a loan committee, and a secretary-treasurer who subscribes to said affidavit, giving his residence and post-office address.

"Upon receipt of such articles of association, with the accompanying affidavit and stock subscription, the directors of said Federal land bank shall send an appraiser to investigate the solvency and character of the applicants and the value of their lands, and shall then determine whether in their judgment a charter should be granted to such association. They shall forward such articles of association and the accompanying affidavit to the Federal farm-loan board with their recommendation. If said recommendation is unfavorable, the charter shall be refused.

"If said recommendation is favorable, the Federal farm-loan board shall thereupon grant a charter to the applicants therefor, designating the territory in which such association may make loans, and shall forward said charter to said applicants through said Federal land bank: Provided, That said Federal farm-loan board may for good cause shown in any case refuse to grant a charter.

"Upon receipt of its charter such national farm-loan association shall be authorized and empowered to receive from the Federal land bank of the district sums to be loaned to its members under the terms and conditions of this act.

"Whenever any national farm-loan association shall desire to secure for any member a loan on first mortgage from the Federal land bank of its district it shall subscribe for capital stock of said land bank to the amount of 5 per cent of such loan, such subscription to be paid in cash upon the granting of the loan by said land bank. Such capital stock shall be held by said land bank as collateral security for the payment of said loan, but said association shall be paid any dividends accruing and payable on said capital stock while it is outstanding. Such stock may, in the discretion of the directors, and with the approval of the Federal farm-loan board, be paid off at par and retired, and it shall be so paid off and retired upon full payment of the mortgage loan. In such case the national farm-loan association shall pay off at par and retire the corresponding shares of its stock which were issued when said land-bank stock was issued. The capital stock of a Federal land bank shall not be reduced to an amount less than 5 per cent of the principal of the outstanding farm-loan bonds issued by it.

If the application for membership is accepted and the loan is granted, the applicant shall, upon full payment therefor, become the owner of one share of capital stock in said loan association for each $100 of the face of his loan, or any major fractional part thereof. Said capital stock shall be paid off at par and retired upon full payment of said loan. Said capital stock shall be held by said association as collateral security for the payment of said loan, but said borrower shall be paid any dividends accruing and payable on said capital stock while it is outstanding.

"Every national farm-loan association formed under this act shall by its articles of association provide for an increase of its capital stock from time to time for the purpose of securing additional loans for its members and providing for the issue of shares to borrowers in accordance with the provisions of this act. They may be exchanged into registered bonds of any amount, and reexchanged into coupon bonds, at the option of the holder, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"SPECIAL PROVISIONS OF FARM-LOAN BONDS.

"SEC. 21. That each land bank shall be bound in all respects by the acts of its officers in signing and issuing farm-loan bonds, and by the acts of the Federal farm-loan board in authorizing their issue.

"Every Federal land bank issuing farm-loan bonds shall be primarily liable therefor, and shall also be liable, upon presentation of farm-loan bond coupons, for interest payments due upon any farm-loan bonds issued by other Federal land banks and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of such other land banks; and every such bank shall likewise be liable for such portion of the principal of farm-loan bonds so issued as shall not be paid after the assets of any such other land banks shall have been liquidated and distributed: Provided, That such losses, if any, either of interest or of principal, shall be assessed by the Federal farm-loan board against solvent land banks liable therefor in proportion to the amount of farm-loan bonds which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment.

"Every Federal land bank shall by appropriate action of its board of directors, duly recorded in its minutes, obligate itself to become liable on farm-loan bonds as provided in this section.

"Every farm-loan bond issued by a Federal land bank shall be signed by its president and attested by its secretary, and shall contain in the face thereof a certificate signed by the farm-loan commissioner to the effect that it is issued under the authority of the Federal farm-loan act, has the approval in form and issue of the Federal farm-loan board, and is legal and regular in all respects; that it is not taxable by National, State, municipal, or local authority; that it is issued against collateral security of United States Government bonds or indorsed first mortgages on farm lands at least equal in amount to the bonds issued; and that all Federal land banks are liable for the payment of each bond.

That whenever any Federal land bank or joint-stock land bank shall receive any interest, amortization, or other payments upon any first mortgage or bond pledged as collateral security for the issue of farm-loan bonds it shall forthwith notify the farm-loan registrar of the items so received. Said registrar shall forthwith cause such payment to be duly credited upon the mortgage entitled to such credit. Whenever any such mortgage is paid in full said registrar shall cause the same to be canceled and delivered to the proper land bank, which shall promptly satisfy and discharge the lien of record and transmit such canceled mortgage to the original maker thereof or his heirs, administrators, executors, or assigns.

"Upon written application by any Federal land bank or joint-stock land bank to the farm-loan registrar it may be permitted, in the discretion of said registrar, to withdraw any mortgages or bonds pledged as collateral security under this act and to substitute therefor other similar mortgages or United States Government bonds not less in amount than the mortgages or bonds desired to be withdrawn.

"Whenever any farm-loan bonds or coupons or interest payments of such bonds are due under their terms they shall be payable at the land bank by which they were issued in gold or lawful money, and upon payment shall be duly canceled by said bank. At the discretion of the Federal farm-loan board, payment of any farm-loan bond or coupon or interest payment may, however, be authorized to be made at any Federal land bank, any joint-stock land bank, or any other bank under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"When any land bank shall surrender to the proper farm-loan registrar any farm-loan bonds of any series, canceled or uncanceled, said land bank shall be entitled to withdraw first mortgages and bonds pledged as collateral security for any of said series of farm-loan bonds to an amount equal to the farm-loan bonds so surrendered, and it shall be the duty of said registrar to permit and direct the delivery of such mortgages and bonds to such land bank.

"Interest payments on hypothecated first mortgages shall be at the disposal of the land bank pledging the same, and shall be available for the payment of coupons and the interest of farm-loan bonds as they become due.

"Whenever any bond matures, or the interest on any registered bond is due, or the coupon on any coupon bond matures, and the same shall be presented for payment as provided in this act, the full face value thereof shall be paid to the holder.

"Amortization and other payments on the principal of first mortgages held by a farm-loan registrar as collateral security for the issue of farm-loan bonds shall constitute a trust fund in the hands of the Federal land bank or joint-stock land bank receiving the same, and shall be applied or employed as follows:

"Every Federal land bank, or joint-stock land bank, shall notify the farm-loan registrar of the disposition of all payments made on the principal of mortgages held as collateral security for an issue of farm-loan bonds, and said registrar is authorized, at his discretion, to order any of such payments, or the proceeds thereof, wherever deposited or however invested, to be immediately transferred to his account as trustee aforesaid.

"RESERVES AND DIVIDENDS OF LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 23. That every Federal land bank, and every joint-stock land bank, shall semiannually carry to reserve account 25 per cent of its net earnings until said reserve account shall show a credit balance equal to 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of said land bank. Whenever said reserve shall have been impaired, said balance of 20 per cent shall be fully restored before any dividends are paid. After said reserve has reached the sum of 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock, 5 per cent of the net earnings shall be annually added thereto. For the period of two years from the date when any default occurs in the payment of the interest, amortization installments, or principal on any first mortgage, by both mortgagor and indorser, the amount so defaulted shall be carried to a suspense account, and at the end of the two-year period specified, unless collected, shall be debited to reserve account.

"After deducting the 10 per cent or the 2 per cent hereinbefore directed to be credited to reserve account, said association may, at its discretion, declare a dividend to shareholders of the whole or any part of the balance of said net earnings.

"The reserves of farm-loan associations shall be invested in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"Whenever any farm-loan association shall be voluntarily liquidated a sum equal to its reserve account as herein required shall be paid to and become the property of the Federal land bank in which such loan association may be a shareholder.

"DEFAULTED LOANS.

That if there shall be default under the terms of any indorsed first mortgage held by a Federal land bank under the provisions of this act, the national farm-loan association or agent through which said mortgage was received by said Federal land bank shall be notified of said default. Said association or agent may thereupon be required, within 30 days after such notice, to make good said default, either by payment of the amount unpaid thereon in cash, or by the substitution of an equal amount of farm-loan bonds issued by said land bank, with all unmatured coupons attached.

"EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION.

"SEC. 26. That every Federal land bank and every national farm-loan association, including the capital and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section 11 and section 13 of this act. First mortgages executed to Federal land banks, or to joint-stock land banks, and farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act, shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

"Nothing herein shall prevent the shares in any joint-stock land bank from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares, in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the State within which the bank is located; but such assessment and taxation shall be in manner and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in section 5219 of the Revised Statutes with reference to the shares of national banking associations.

"Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of Federal and joint-stock land banks and national farm-loan associations from either State, county, or municipal taxes, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

"INVESTMENT IN FARM-LOAN BONDS.

"SEC. 27. That farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act by Federal land banks or joint-stock land banks shall be a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds, and may be accepted as security for all public deposits.

"Any member bank of the Federal Reserve System may buy and sell farm-loan bonds issued under the authority of this act.

"Any Federal reserve bank may buy and sell farm-loan bonds issued under this act to the same extent and subject to the same limitations placed upon the purchase and sale by said banks of State, county, district, and municipal bonds under subsection (b) of section 14 of the Federal reserve act approved December 23, 1913.

"EXAMINATIONS.

"Said examiners shall be subject to the same requirements, responsibilities, and penalties as are applicable to national-bank examiners under the national-bank act, the Federal reserve act, and other provisions of law. Whenever directed by the Federal farm-loan board, said examiners shall examine the condition of any national farm-loan association and report the same to the farm-loan commissioner. They shall examine and report the condition of every Federal land bank and joint-stock land bank at least twice each year.

"Said examiners shall receive salaries to be fixed by the Federal farm-loan board.

"DISSOLUTION AND APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVERS.

"SEC. 29. That upon receiving satisfactory evidence that any national farm-loan association has failed to meet its outstanding obligations of any description the Federal farm-loan board may forthwith declare such association insolvent and appoint a receiver and require of him such bond and security as it deems proper: Provided, That no national farm-loan association shall be declared insolvent by said board until the total amount of defaults of current interest and amortization installments on loans indorsed by national farm-loan associations shall amount to at least $150,000 in the Federal land-bank district, unless such association shall have been in default for a period of two years. Such receiver, under the direction of the Federal farm-loan board, shall take possession of the books, records, and assets of every description of such association, collect all debts, dues, and claims belonging to it, and, with the approval of the Federal farm-loan board, or upon the order of a court of record of competent jurisdiction, may sell or compound all bad or doubtful debts, and, on a like approval or order, may sell all the real and personal property of such association, on such terms as the Federal farm-loan board or said court shall direct.

"Such receiver shall pay over all money so collected to the Treasurer of the United States, subject to the order of the Federal farm-loan board, and also make report to said board of all his acts and proceedings. The Secretary of the Treasury shall have authority to deposit at interest any money so received.

"Upon default of any obligation, Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks may be declared insolvent and placed in the hands of a receiver by the Federal farm-loan board, and proceedings shall thereupon be had in accordance with the provisions of this section regarding national farm-loan associations.

"If any national farm-loan association shall be declared insolvent and a receiver shall be appointed therefor by the Federal farm-loan board, the stock held by it in the Federal land bank of its district shall be canceled without impairment of its liability; and all payments on such stock, with accrued dividends, if any, since the date of the last dividend shall be first applied to all debts of the insolvent farm-loan association to the Federal land bank and the balance, if any, shall be paid to the receiver of said farm-loan association: Provided, That in estimating said debts contingent liabilities incurred by national farm-loan associations under the provisions of this act on account of default of principal or interest of indorsed mortgages shall be estimated and included as a debt, and said contingent liabilities shall be determined by agreement between the receiver and the Federal land bank of the district, subject to the approval of the Federal farm-loan board, and if said receiver and said land bank can not agree, then by the decision of the farm-loan commissioner, and the amount thus ascertained shall be deducted in accordance with the provisions of this section from the amount otherwise due the said national farm-loan association for said canceled stock. Whenever the capital stock of a Federal land bank shall be reduced the board of directors shall cause to be executed a certificate to the Federal farm-loan board showing such reduction of capital stock, and, if said reduction shall be due to the insolvency of a national farm-loan association, the amount repaid to such association.

"No national farm-loan association, Federal land bank, or joint-stock land bank shall go into voluntary liquidation without the written consent of the Federal farm-loan board, but national farm-loan associations may consolidate under rules and regulations promulgated by the Federal farm-loan board.

"STATE LEGISLATION.

"SEC. 30. That it shall be the duty of the farm-loan commissioner to make examination of the laws of every State of the United States and to inform the Federal farm-loan board as rapidly as may be whether in his judgment the laws of each State relating to the conveying and recording of land titles, and the foreclosure of mortgages or other instruments securing loans, as well as providing homestead and other exemptions and granting the power to waive such exemptions as respects first mortgages, are such as to assure the holder thereof adequate safeguards against loss in the event of default on loans secured by any such mortgages.

"Pending the making of such examination in the case of any State, the Federal farm-loan board may declare first mortgages on farm lands situated within such State ineligible as the basis for an issue of farm-loan bonds; and if said examination shall show that the laws of any such State afford insufficient protection to the holder of first mortgages of the kinds provided in this act, said Federal farm-loan board may declare said first mortgages on land situated in such State ineligible during the continuance of the laws in question. In making his examination of the laws of the several States and forming his conclusions thereon said farm-loan commissioner may call upon the office of the Attorney General of the United States for any needed legal advice or assistance, or may employ special counsel in any State where he considers such action necessary.

"At the request of the executive of any State the Federal farm-loan board shall prepare a statement setting forth in what respects the requirements of said board can not be complied with under the existing laws of such State.

No examiner, public or private, shall disclose the names of borrowers to other than the proper officers of a national farm-loan association or land bank without first having obtained express permission in writing from the farm-loan commissioner or from the board of directors of such association or bank, except when ordered to do so by a court of competent jurisdiction or by direction of the Congress of the United States, or of either House thereof, or any committee of Congress or of either House duly authorized. Any person violating any provision of this paragraph shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

"Any person connected in any capacity with any national farm-loan association, Federal land bank, or joint-stock land bank, who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, or credits thereof, or who without authority from the directors draws any order, assigns any note, bond, draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, or who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of such association or land bank with intent in either case to defraud such institution or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual person, or to deceive any officer of a national farm-loan association or land bank or any agent appointed to examine into the affairs of any such association or bank, and every person who with like intent aids or abets any officer, clerk, or agent in any violation of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both.

EDMUND PLATT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, the statement just read from the desk explains in detail the changes, both major and minor, made in the House bill by the conferees. I shall be very glad to answer any question that may be asked.

Mr. HOWARD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Was the power for making loans by joint-stock banks increased beyond the operation within the State by the conferees?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; to one contiguous State.

Mr. HOWARD. As a matter of fact, the word "contiguous" is used in the conference report. Contiguous States would mean that if a State was bounded by four States the joint-stock bank would operate in five States.

Mr. GLASS. No; only in one contiguous State. It was agreed that the joint-stock bank be permitted to make loans in one other contiguous State.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain to me or to the House why that change was made about the operation of the joint-stock banks and why the conferees agreed to that provision?

Mr. GLASS. Because it was represented that it was very desirable in making loans to follow the regular course of trade, which frequently takes the direction of territory not embraced in the State where the bank is located.

Mr. HOWARD. I thought one of the central elements entering into the negotiations of mortgages was that the State laws in relation to conveyances, recording, title, and so forth, would be the same, and that it was an essential part of this bill that these joint-stock banks should be confined to a particular State.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, I will say that the Senate bill gave the land banks the right to operate in all contiguous States, but the House conferees insisted on confining the operation to one other contiguous State, and it was agreed upon as a matter of compromise.

Mr. PHELAN. I call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to page 18.

Mr. HOWARD. I have had my attention called to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I notice in the report that you have agreed to the Senate provision that the amount of money that may be loaned to a farmer has been reduced to 50 per cent instead of 60 per cent.

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman to explain to the House why that reduction was made.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of compromise. The Senate accepted the provision in the House bill for 20 per cent to be loaned on improvements, which was not a provision in the Senate bill, and the House conferees agreed to reduce the amount that could be loaned on the land from 60 to 50 per cent, as originally proposed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the gentleman think that in the long run it would have been better to have eliminated the improvement feature and make the loan 60 per cent of the value of the land, in order to enable a man who owned land with no house on it to borrow money for improvements?

Mr. GLASS. The House conferees would have been willing to retain it at 60 per cent, but the Senate conferees objected, and we had to yield some of our preconceived notions.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. On page 31 of the report and statement I see that the House accepts the Senate provision that simple interest shall be paid on defaulted payments at the rate of 8 per cent.

As I understand the situation in many States, 8 per cent is usurious. The total amount that can be charged legally in some States is 6 per cent. Therefore, certainly the United States could not collect a usurious rate of interest, and would not wish to do so.

Mr. GLASS. Mr Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that the Senate bill provided that the charge on defaulted payments should be 10 per cent. It is not in the nature of interest, but in the nature of a penalty. The House insisted that it should be only 6 per cent. The Senate conferees held out, and we compromised at 8 per cent. It is in the nature of a penalty, and not in the nature of an interest charge, and therefore would not be subject to the laws of usury.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman refer me to the page in which that is covered?

Mr. GLASS. It is on page 31 of the statement.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I mean in the bill.

Mr. GLASS. It is subsection 9 on page 14 of the report.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. As soon as I am through with the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does not the gentleman think that under the terms that are set out in that subsection that would be usurious? The statement therein made is definite:

> Every borrower shall pay simple interest on defaulted payments at the rate of 8 per cent per annum.

If that is a payment of 8 per cent per annum on anything, it does not make any difference whether it be on the principal or on the defaulted interest.

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman will observe that it is as the result of a "covenant" entered into when the loan is made, just as contracts are made in States with usury laws against a certain rate of interest.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes; but does not the gentleman know that there are States in the Union where even by contract you can not make a binding agreement to pay as much as 8 per cent? It is not merely a matter of contractual rights, but it is usurious when you go as high as 8 per cent, and you can not contract to do that which is in violation of law and which is usurious on its face. It seems to me that the United States Government should not write a law which carries into effect at once an illegal effort to do that which is against the law in several States of the Union.

Mr. GLASS. I can only say to the gentleman that the lawyers among the conferees discussed that very thoroughly, and came to the conclusion, in which the laymen concurred, that it was not contrary to the usury laws.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will this House have to vote down the conference report in order to restore the 60 per cent appraisement?

Mr. GLASS. I would think so.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Is there no way to get at that question without voting down the conference report?

Mr. GLASS. I am not as familiar with parliamentary practice as I could wish to be, but my information is that there is no way of reaching that question without voting down the report.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks it would be possible to restore the 60 per cent provision if this House should vote down the conference report?

Mr. GLASS. I do not. The House conferees contended for the House view of all these matters. I do not think it would be possible.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks it would impair the chances of the passage of this bill if the House should vote down the conference report in order to get a vote upon that question?

Mr. GLASS. I do. I do not think there is any probability of the Senate yielding on that question.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman then thinks that the friends of rural-credits legislation should vote for this conference report?

Mr. GLASS. I undoubtedly do. I think we have the best bill that we could get—a marvelously good bill, all circumstances considered.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Virginia will permit, I would like to say in that connection that most of the foreign systems limit the amount to 50 per cent, and most of those which now grant more than that limited it to 50 per cent at the beginning, and subsequently some of them raised the limit to 60 per cent. I think that after this system gets working, if it is found that the appraisals are being made properly, it is not unlikely that Congress may increase it to 60 per cent; but, with the situation as it is now, the Senate yielded on a great many matters and showed a splendid spirit of fairness. I think if we want rural-credit legislation we ought to take this bill as it is.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Of course that is a very important part of this bill. Does not the gentleman know that that is very important to a man who wants to buy a farm, who has not much money to invest? Of course. I can appreciate the fact that where you simply want to borrow money on a farm, it does not make so much difference about the per cent, but if a man wants to buy a farm, you can only borrow from the Government through this bill 50 per cent of the appraised value of the land and 20 per cent of the appraised value of the improvements thereon. If he could get 60 per cent of the value of the land and 20 per cent of the improvements it would enable the man who had a little money to become the owner of a farm.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to my friend that we traversed all of those arguments and we urged the position of the conferees on the part of the House. Gentlemen lose sight of the fact that in a large part of the United States the farm improvements constitute a very considerable percentage of the valuations, and the Senate yielded to us in the matter of the 20 per cent on farm improvements, and we agreed to fall from 60 to 50 per cent on lands.

Mr. TRIBBLE. But the gentleman must concede that in the South a large part of the value of property is in the land and not in the improvements, and that the 20 per cent will not amount to much. About all we could get out of it would be 50 per cent.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but we could not pass a bill that would adapt itself solely to the South.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I appreciate that; but the gentleman referred to the fact that there were parts of the United States where the improvements constitute the greater part of the value of the farm.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and, therefore, we had to reach a compromise conclusion. That is what we have done, I will say to my friend; and when the system develops itself, if there are any modifications necessary we will be able to make them.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. On page 31 I find this in the statement:

> The Senate agrees to the House provision that the interest rate on mortgages negotiated before the first issue of farm-loan bonds may be determined in the discretion of the land bank.

I will ask the gentleman what is the limitation as to interest?

Mr. PHELAN. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. FINLEY. I prefer to have it from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

Mr. PHELAN. All right.

Mr. GLASS. Well, the gentleman is asking for information, I take it, and my colleague from Massachusetts is one of the conferees and had particular charge of that item, and he will give you the information.

Mr. FINLEY. Well, if the gentleman from Virginia does not know——

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman from Virginia knows, but I happen to have in mind the matter of which the gentleman speaks. The limitation is 6 per cent. There is no mortgage loan that can be negotiated at a higher rate than 6 per cent. Now the Senate bill had no provision in reference to what could be done, and in order to make the bill harmonious that provision had to be put in.

Mr. FINLEY. No rate of interest can be charged by a Federal bank or a joint-stock land bank except 6 per cent?

Mr. PHELAN. That is the maximum limit, 6 per cent, and in some cases the maximum would not be 6 per cent, because the banks can charge only 1 per cent above the rate in the bonds issued.

Mr. FINLEY. Have not you enlarged the exemptions and privileges given to the joint-stock land banks in this report?

Mr. PHELAN. I think not, except that we allow joint-stock banks to loan in one particular State outside of the State in which their principal office is located. Outside of that, offhand, I do not recall of any extra power we have given to the joint-stock banks. As a matter of fact, the House conferees obtained from the Senate the acceptance of a provision that joint-stock banks could not loan money at a rate higher than 6 per cent. That is not in the Senate bill, so we have cut down the Senate bill in that respect.

Mr. FINLEY. That is the limitation in the present conference report?

Mr. PHELAN. It was in the House bill and remains in the conference report; yes.

Mr. FINLEY. So the gentleman is of the opinion that no additional privileges have been granted to joint-stock land banks?

Mr. PHELAN. Nothing I can recollect at this moment. If there is anything, it is not of any importance. On the other hand we have insisted on continuing provisions which have limited joint-stock banks.

Mr. FINLEY. In what respect?

Mr. PHELAN. Why, the Senate had no provisions relative to the power of local taxation on the real property of joint-stock banks, and we have that provision in.

Mr. FINLEY. That will necessarily be a very small percentage of the assets of the joint-stock land banks?

Mr. PHELAN. I was not commenting on that; I was commenting on some of the changes made in the Senate bill.

Mr. FINLEY. In other words, they have no real estate except the real property they take over?

Mr. PHELAN. They may have real estate in which they do business.

Mr. FINLEY. A bank building, and so forth?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman from Virginia will permit, I want to go back to the State business. Page 18 of the report has the following proviso:

> Provided, however, That no loans shall be made which are not secured by first mortgages on farm lands within the State in which such joint-stock land bank has its principal office, or within some one State contiguous to such State. Such joint-stock land banks shall be subject to all other restrictions on mortgage loans imposed on Federal land banks in section 12 of this act.

Now, the proposition I asked originally of the gentleman from Virginia was: Could not, so far as the negotiation of a particular loan was concerned, a joint-stock land bank under that provision do business in five States? Now, the reason for my believing that is true is that my judgment is the reference to the particular security given to the joint-stock land bank which has its principal office or place of business in one State; for instance, I believe that bank in Georgia could take securities from Alabama, Tennessee, South Carolina, and Florida.

Mr. PHELAN. It was not so intended, and I think it would be interpreted to confine the limitation of one bank to two States.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman think that that reference is to any particular security there rather than to the State?

Mr. PHELAN. No; I do not.

Mr. HOWARD. Who will determine the State where these securities shall be accepted of this joint-stock bank?

Mr. PHELAN. The bank itself can determine that.

Mr. HOWARD. If it can determine that, why can not it determine in how many States the bank will take farm mortgages?

Mr. PHELAN. Because just as soon as it makes a selection that ends it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to my colleague of the conferees, Mr. HAYES, of California.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, if it is allowable, I would like to yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] is recognized.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, Mr. GLASS, has called up for consideration the report of the committee of conference on the bill known as the rural-credits act. We are now nearing the final passage of an act in which the agricultural population of the United States has taken an earnest and intelligent interest.

I have given careful attention to the bill as finally reported from the conference committee. I believe it provides, under a fair trial, a successful and workable system, and I congratulate the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and his colleagues upon the result of their labors.

The first citizens of this country were farmers. Under Washington, the farmer, they won our independence, established a free Government, and, while maintaining good will toward all, they won from other nations our freedom from entangling alliances; they preserved the integrity of the Union.

The farmers as pioneers, seeking homes in new and distant portions of the continent, carried the flag steadily westward and added vast areas to the national domain. In practically every section of what is now the United States the occupancy of the soil by our farmers was the deciding factor when contesting with others for the ownership of disputed areas.

For nearly a century and a half they have provided us with subsistence and raiment, filling our hearts with gladness. Their sons and daughters, leaving the farms, have promoted the welfare and prosperity of towns and cities, trade and manufacture, in a measure far greater than their comparative numbers would suggest. In public office and positions of private trust, in peace and war, they have served our country with great fidelity.

Science and invention have materially increased the comforts and opportunities of residents of towns and cities. The tendency is increasingly to go to the city. Man likes the companionship of his fellows. While conditions of country life have been improved by the telephone, rural free delivery, parcel post, and better roads, they do not yet equal those of the city with street cars, paved streets, lights, definite hours of work, social, and numerous other advantages.

The business man in the city has had provided for him by law, custom, and private enterprise, certain and adequate sources from which he could secure the capital needed at any time for financing his business. The business man in the country is not so circumstanced. That provision be made so that he can obtain the capital he needs upon terms on which he can afford to borrow and consistent with the excellent security he has to offer is one of the most important and pressing national problems of our age.

The business man in the city makes profit not only from his own capital but from the surplus capital of others. His income is steady. His crops mature several times each year. If he can create a demand, he can increase his output indefinitely and his profits accordingly. The merchant and manufacturer have opportunities which the conditions of the farming business do not afford.

THE BUSINESS OF FARMING.

The farmer, like any other business man, needs capital with which to operate his business. Before a tract of land becomes productive many things must be done to and upon it. It must be cleared, fenced, tilled, drained, and so forth. Houses, barns, stock, implements, and equipment are necessary. It demands continual labor and expenditures. The return upon the investment is dependent upon the annual journey of the earth around the sun, producing successive seasons and yearly crops. No other business is so dependent for its returns upon the solar system, whose movements can not be hastened. For this reason the farmer needs money upon long time, or, at least, he should have the right to so obtain capital. Long-time money must bear a low rate of interest or it causes a burden too great to be borne. In order to prevent an accumulation of obligation, he should have the right to make payments at regular intervals to reduce his indebtedness gradually and to pay the principal sum in full whenever he desires.

THE PUBLIC INTEREST.

Every nation, as far as possible for it to do so, should be self-sustaining—able to provide for its people in any exigency, however great. The fundamental necessities of mankind are few, and among those of greatest importance are food and clothing. These latter are the product of the farms. A growing country needs a continually increasing food supply. Our population in the last 15 years has increased about 15,000,000, and while our food supply in cereals, fruits, vegetables, and so forth, has so far fairly kept pace with the growth of population, the number of food animals has diminished by some 18,000,000. Formerly we had vast areas in a public domain available for homes and suitable for growing crops and raising stock at a comparative low cost, from low-priced land, and the question of food supply was not a vital one. There are still areas of public domain upon which homes may be established, but more labor and money are needed for their development than formerly, especially when such lands must be irrigated. With the value of land steadily increasing, accompanied with a growing tax burden, with an increasing cost of farming operations, and because of the destructive ravages of many pests, the cost of producing food and clothing is also increasing. There is a growing tendency on the part of the younger generation to leave the farm and go to the larger centers. Our urban population is increasing and our rural population decreasing. More than two-thirds of our people do not raise their own subsistence. The whole people have an immediate and permanent interest in the welfare of the farmers. Some one will ask, "What is the matter with the farming business?" The reply is that farming is a business without an adequate supply of capital available on terms on which the farmers can afford to borrow. The conditions of their business being so very different from that of other business men, it is necessary that we provide in this country a system of rural credits adapted from the experience of European countries to meet the situation.

COST OF LIVING.

The number of pounds of cereal and meat foods per capita is decreasing, although it fluctuates from year to year. Each farm must furnish food for an increasing number of persons, or, to state this in another way, the average number of acres of improved land per capita is decreasing. For these reasons our people have begun to realize the danger that lies in the increasing prices of food. Either methods must be adopted by which the food supply may keep pace with the growth of population or our people must lower their standard of living. Earnest efforts have been made to solve this problem by the adoption of scientific methods of agriculture and stock raising, promoted by public and private organizations and propaganda. But scientific agriculture needs capital. We have lagged behind many of the countries of Europe in the recognition of this fact and in providing the means by which the needed capital may be obtained. The purpose of the rural-credit system is to provide the remedy. It is an acknowledgment that our farmers can make wise and beneficial use of capital, and that they have been hitherto handicapped by a faulty and inadequate system. The success of rural-credit systems abroad and the immaterial losses under them "clearly indicates that the high rates of interest that the farmers in this country must pay is due not to any inherent weakness in their credit but to the lack of properly organized facilities for making their credit negotiable."

EXPERIENCE ABROAD.

Nearly all the great nations of the world have some form of rural credits. It would be interesting and profitable to discuss them in some detail, but the time at my disposal will not permit. The result of their experience is to prove the unvarying benefits of such legislation. No nation that has such a system would abandon it and every nation not now having rural credits and to whom agriculture is at all important is preparing to adopt an appropriate system.

In this country we have only to accept the verified results of European experience and adapt them to our conditions. Our area is many times greater than that of any European State, while our population is very sparse as compared with theirs, although greater in the total. Nor has our agricultural population had the experience in cooperative work of that of many European States, but the high intelligence of our farmers makes it certain that what other peoples have done well they can, I believe, improve upon with experience.

As an instance of the value of rural credits, if we take Germany as an illustration—in which case I happen to have exact figures—we find that prior to the beginning of the present great war, on an area not as large as Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, she was producing 90 per cent or more of the subsistence of her population of 67,000,000 people, which is two-thirds that of the United States. Doubtless the statistics of other nations having rural-credits systems would show much the same results. No one disputes the value of the system. The only question is by what means or methods we shall establish it in this country. And any system that may be adopted must—

First. Provide adequate funds, so that all qualified to borrow may obtain loans;

Second. Enable borrowers to obtain loans readily at the least possible expense of administration;

Third. Make loans for long terms of years, at the option of the borrower;

Fourth. Provide for their repayment on the amortization plan, with the right to make advance payments;

Fifth. Make loans at the lowest possible rates of interest; and Sixth. Provide that farmers in any section of the United States may readily and conveniently obtain the money they need.

THE PROBLEM STATED.

By a rural-credit system is meant an arrangement under which very large sums of money can be made available for the use of the agricultural population of the United States. It involves several great problems. Among these are—

First. How can the vast sums needed be obtained and how repaid?

Second. By what means can these moneys be loaned to farmers with the least cost of handling and made equally available in all sections of the country?

Third. What amounts can be loaned to any borrower and how can repayment be secured?

Fourth. What length of time shall the loans run?

Fifth. How shall the rate of interest on loans be determined?

Sixth. What kind of an organization is necessary to transact the business?

Seventh. Shall the loans be made through the Treasury Department or through an organization specially created for this work?

Eighth. What responsibilities shall the Government assume?

Ninth. On what conditions shall loans be made?

The pending bill attempts the solution of these problems, and I say "attempts" with no intention to speak disparagingly of this bill. We have had no prior experience to form any judgment upon in this matter. The legislation is new, so far as this country is concerned. I sincerely trust the system proposed in the bill will accomplish the results we desire.

There are some features of the proposed system concerning which I have serious doubts, and which experience, I believe, will demonstrate the necessity of changing. But I believe it should be given a thorough and fair trial.

Under the bill money is to be obtained by organizing farm credit and making it mobile by selling bonds based upon mortgages. Public and private corporations have made their faith and credit the basis of bond issues and successfully disposed of billions of their securities upon favorable terms. There is no reason to believe that bonds based upon farm mortgages will not make very desirable securities when issued under proper conditions.

Twelve special agencies, known as farm-land banks, to be located where they can readily serve the farmers, will make loans through the medium of local associations of farmer borrowers or directly, as circumstances may determine. It is expected that the loans will be made chiefly through the local associations. While the machinery provided may at first appear to be somewhat complex, the endeavor has been to reduce it to the minimum consistent with efficiency and promptness in accomplishing its work, in order to reduce the cost of operations to the lowest practicable amount.

Any farmer who holds good title can borrow up to 50 per cent of the appraised value of his land for general agricultural purposes and to 20 per cent of the value of insured improvements of a permanent character. The loan is to be repaid on the installment or amortization plan, and the amount to be paid in any year on the principal sum of the loan will depend upon the length of time the borrower desires the loan to run.

Loans must run for not less than 5 years nor more than 36 years, at the option of the borrower. At any time after the expiration of five years the borrower may make advance payments, and may reduce the principal sum gradually by payments in addition to the amortization payments or extinguish it at once, as he may choose.

It has been said that no farmer would borrow for 36 years. The long period is provided, not for the purpose of placing farmers in debt for a long period but to leave the length of the term entirely with them and give them whatever time they may require in making repayment. Any borrower, complying with the terms of his loan, need not fear foreclosure.

Since the money to be loaned is to be obtained from the sales of bonds, the interest rate will depend upon the rate of interest the bonds sell for. Since this plan of securing the funds was determined on I have given a great deal of study to the problem of making the bonds the most attractive securities in the market, so that they will find a wide market, bear low rates of interest, and thus make the rate of interest paid by the farmer as low as possible. I believe the provisions relating to bonds should be amended, as I have elsewhere indicated, to reduce the rate of interest.

The Government, through the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to subscribe the initial capital stock of the 12 land banks; through the Federal farm-loan board to see that the system is safely, effectively, and economically administered, that the land banks are properly conducted, to determine the rates of interest, and that the issues of bonds are properly made.

I can not at this time enter into a detailed discussion of all the sections of the bill.

There are provisions also for the organization of joint-stock banks, which, under conditions similar to those described briefly above, will make loans to farmers, issue bonds, and conduct their business under Government supervision. The joint-stock banks are entirely separate from the farm-land banks and have no connection with them in any way whatever.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS.

The farming business is limited to yearly crops. These crops are not certain to mature even when planted with the greatest skill and care, but are dependent on good planting, growing, and harvesting seasons in their infinite variety and upon the extent of the harmful activities of hundreds of pests. The farmer's income each year is dependent upon agencies which are in whole or in part entirely beyond his control. What he does produce is essential to the existence of mankind. That he should go on producing is absolutely necessary. He should be enabled to increase the quantity and improve the quality of his output. Although he markets about $10,000,000,000 worth of products yearly, when this is distributed among some 6,500,000 farmers and there is deducted from each man's share his necessary operating expenses, taxes, and other costs, the annual income is entirely too small to compensate him fairly for his intelligent enterprise, constant labor, and long hours. Moreover, the Nation has an abiding interest in who shall own and operate its farms. It would be a most wholesome condition if every farm were operated by its owner or by some one who could in a reasonable time become the owner. Such owners should always be American citizens, or those who will in due time become citizens, and of the general stock of our people. The farmer is not asking for anybody's charity. He has the best security in the world in productive real estate, which can not be stolen, embezzled, burned, or dissipated. It can always be found and in a fixed place. It has an intrinsic value for general productive purposes which modern scientific methods in agriculture can readily determine. It is a property which, if asked, will yield a steady return.

FARM LOANS.

In view of the public interest in the products of the farm, it is necessary that whatever agency is created should be a governmental agency, to the end that any question of making the system a profit-making enterprise may be eliminated. It should be operated at cost and the organization should be so devised that its operation will be at minimum cost. The system in a comparatively short time will be handling hundreds of millions, or even billions, of loans. It is obvious that it must be constituted to stand this enormous strain and be at all times sound and solvent. A weak system could never obtain the vast sums of money needed nor provide the low rate of interest on loans upon which the success of the system largely depends.

The amount of mortgage loans on farms has been stated to aggregate from $4,000,000,000 to as much as $6,000,000,000. A great proportion of these mortgages will doubtless be refunded when the rural-credit system is put in operation. In addition, there will be some billions of new loans negotiated in time.

From the best information available it appears that the average rate of interest is at least 3 per cent higher on farm loans than it should be if farm credit was properly organized and mobilized. That would mean that the farmers are paying from $120,000,000 to $180,000,000 excess interest charges. The rates of interest vary widely over the country. Even if the rural-credit system only saved the excess interest to the farmers, it would mean the salvation of a great many of them. But it will do a great deal more.

Another vital matter is that at present only a very small proportion of farmers can secure loans for periods of years. The money is not available. No means have hitherto been provided by which farm credit could be organized and sold on the market in the form of securities or in any other way be mobilized.

I should like for it to be remembered in these remarks I am now making that I have in mind the bill pending before Congress, as it is evident that whatever system is now provided will be along the lines of this bill. While it does not in a number of ways meet my approval and there are certain changes I think ought to be made, I believe it should be given a fair and impartial trial and amended as experience proves advisable, as previously stated. If I had been writing a bill with a free hand, I should have presented a plan different in several respects from the one proposed in this bill. But it is evident that no other plan could be adopted at this time. Some legislation on the subject is imperative. Therefore it has seemed to me to be my patriotic duty to render what service I could to making the system the best possible under the plan proposed. Experience will demonstrate wherein it should be amended.

The farmers are asking for legislation that will enable them as a general body of business man to take advantage of their combined credit and to mobilize it. This has been done for business men of other occupations, who can secure short-term loans from banks and other institutions created and regulated by public authority, or long-term loans by the sales of stocks, bonds, or other forms of security to the investing public, under provisions of law. The disparity of opportunity in securing capital is shown by the following figures: Out of a total of $21,000,000,000 of loans and investments made by the banks the 6,500,000 farmers have secured only about $2,250,000,000, and the banks' loans to farmers on mortgages is only about $550,000,000 of this latter amount. The banks have invested many billions in railroad, private corporation, and municipal securities. And by far the greater proportion of their investments have been the moneys of their customers. Why, then, have not the banks and other investors loaned vast sums to the farmers? Because the credit of the farmers has never been organized in such form as to make it available to the investing public. Banks which receive deposits repayable on demand can loan but little of such moneys for a long period of years. They must invest them in loans that can be turned into cash within a short period, that they may meet the demands made upon them. Their solvency and continuance in business depends upon their so doing. Depositors would cause any bank which could not meet their demands to be closed. But if the credit of the farmers is mobilized and evidenced in the form of securities, as is the credit of public and private corporations, such securities will be purchased by banks and other investors in the ordinary course of business, and these bonds, by reason of the solid security behind them, will become very attractive investments and will sell readily in the general market at low rates of interest; that is, the farmers will be able to sell their credit for vast sums of cash and so provide the large amounts of capital they stand in need of for the improvement, development, and betterment of their farms, the amelioration of their conditions, and the increase of their incomes. The conditions under which they can afford to borrow will have been met, which are that the loan be for such a period of years as will enable the farmer to make the investment provide for its own repayment and a profit to himself, that the principal be repaid on the amortization or installment plan, and that the rate of interest be low. It will also provide a source from which any qualified borrower can obtain the money he needs readily as a matter of business and not of favor.

WHEN SHOULD A FARMER BORROW?

I do not anticipate that our farmers will take advantage of any opportunity and borrow simply because they can, but that they will act discreetly as business men and borrow for productive use. The general principles of farm borrowing may be stated as follows: Loans made for the purpose of refunding existing mortgages or other indebtedness at lower rates of interest or on more favorable terms, or both; new loans for increasing the productivity of the farm in any way, the returns from which will pay the interest, the administration charge, and the amortization payments of the loan and also yield the farmer a substantial profit for his enterprise; and loans for improving the farm as a home. At what time and for what particular purpose he will borrow will depend upon the judgment of the borrower.

JOHN DOE AND MARY ROE.

John Doe and Mary Roe, living with their parents on adjoining farms, have been "keeping company" for some time and have concluded to be married. John's father has promised him 40 acres adjoining the Roe farm when he is married, and Mary's father will give her 40 acres next to this. This will give the young people 80 acres of land, some in cultivation, some uncleared, some needing drainage or other improvement. There are no buildings, orchards, or improvements on the land except fences. While the old folks have not made John and Mary promise to live on the land, it is understood that it was given to them for the purpose of making them a home. John and Mary have no desire to sell the land, but wish to farm it. Prior to the wedding they plan the new home. They will need a house and furnishings, barn, silo, windmill, other buildings, farm implements, and stock. Mary has made quilts, wool and feather mattresses, tablecloths, and things of this sort, and has some kitchen utensils, a cow, and some pigs. John has a team and wagon, a few farm implements, two cows, some hogs, and $300 in the bank. They are young people of the modern time and, although sensible and reasonable in what they think should be put on their farm, they desire comfort and convenience before they are too old to enjoy or care for them. Older brothers and sisters have gone to the towns, where they have pleasant homes, and are doing well. After consulting with their parents, the carpenters, and merchants, they find they will need about $1,800 more in order to construct a neat, modern house, with modern equipment and furniture, put up a good barn and other buildings, and purchase necessary implements and stock.

How shall they obtain the money, this additional $1,800? John finds that the bank will loan them $1,800 on first mortgage, for five years, at 8 per cent per annum. If the loan is to be paid in full at the end of five years, they will have to pay $360 of the principal and the accrued interest each year and this with taxes, costs of operating the farm, living expenses, and maintenance charges, is more than they can pay. They might renew the loan, but the burden is greater than the industry can bear. They must consider the possibility of sickness, or poor crops, and the likelihood of losing their farm as has happened in many instances. Regretfully they consider the advisability of selling their land and removing to a town.

At this juncture John becomes interested in the rural-credits system to see if it may furnish a solution of their problem. He finds that they can obtain a loan for 36 years, if desired, with the right to pay off the loan in whole or in part at any time after five years; that the rate of interest will be low; the cost of administration, taking the entire period into consideration, will be a fraction of 1 per cent per annum; that he can pay the principal in small yearly payments on the amortization plan; and that the yearly payments for interest, operating expense, and amortization being small, they can undoubtedly pay them and have a profit for themselves.

He also makes an important discovery—that his total aggregate payments for interest, operating expenses, and amortization under the rural-credits system will be about what he would pay for interest alone under the short-term loan system; that is, what he would pay as interest under the short-term loan system will pay under the rural-credits system not only the interest but the principal and all other charges.

John and Mary marry and stay on their farm. They have found a way to obtain the capital they need on terms under which they can afford to borrow it.

"Stay on the farm" rather than "back to farm," is important to the country.

SOUNDNESS OF THE LEGISLATION.

Under our form of government, legislation providing the use of governmental agencies to be constitutional must be general in its application and not confined to a class. The opportunities must be open to all and the benefits derived be general. Any citizen can avail himself of rural-credit opportunities under the conditions prescribed, and legislation which promotes the welfare of the farmers by enabling them to increase their production and furnish subsistence and clothing for all others certainly produces universal benefits.

GOOD LAWS.

A few years ago a number of us who were Members of the House, and mostly members of the Committee on Agriculture, undertook the passage of a series of acts for the promotion of the welfare of farming and the farmer: First, the regulation of grain and cotton exchanges to eliminate gambling and illegitimate speculation, which caused great losses to farmers by the establishment of prices lower than would have prevailed normally. The enactment of this legislation is in process of completion and will be followed up. Second, the establishment of a Bureau of Markets, which has been accomplished. Its purpose is to secure a proper distribution of products so that they will be sent where needed and not to markets already supplied, thus eliminating scarcity in some markets and surpluses in others; to bring the producers and consumers closer together, enabling the farmers to get more for the products and the consumers to pay less for what they buy by avoiding excessive or unnecessary profits to middlemen; and to find or create new markets. Third, by a system of agricultural extension to make available in a practical way the certain results of scientific investigation and experiment, so that the farmers by decreased labor and at less expense may obtain increased production of improved quality, for his own good and that of all the people. This likewise has been enacted into law and appropriations made for the work. Fourth, a rural-credits system, which is now pending before Congress. There are other items in this program, part of which have received legislative consideration, and all of which will be given diligent attention.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

Any discussion of the rural-credits question that did not take into consideration the benefits the farmer's wife may derive from it would be incomplete. She works long hours at a variety of tasks. In comparison with her city sister, her hours of leisure, amusement, and reading are few but well employed. If anyone is entitled to the great title of soldier of the common good, she is that soldier. She has cradled the infancy and taught industry, righteousness, love of country, thirst for knowledge, respect for law, and love of justice to more patriots, statesmen, inventors, scientists, ministers, lawyers, soldiers, and stalwart men and honorable women in every vocation than any other class of women. It is said that she has given the country more than 75 per cent of its successful brains. Hers is an imperishable honor. The mother of the family is generally the center of the home. The home life grows up around her personality. Invention, enterprise, and capital have provided conveniences for the city wife that have liberated her in large measure from the burdens of the housekeeping. Under the rural-credits system, capital will be provided by which the country wife will have suitable conveniences to diminish her hours of labor and give her wider opportunity for the exercise of her womanly talents and the enjoyment of life.

HOW LOANS WILL BE MADE TO FARMERS.

I. Farm-land banks will make loans to farmers by two methods: First, organizations of borrowers, known as the local associations, will submit on behalf of their members applications to borrow the amounts desired by each farmer, specifying the purposes for which the moneys are to be used. Each farm will then be appraised by appraisers designated by the association whose members desire to obtain loans, and by the appraisers of the bank to determine what amount can be loaned upon it. When a loan has been approved, a mortgage will be taken for the amount and the money paid to the borrower through the local association. The territory in which each of the 12 banks can make loans will be designated by the farm-loan board. Second, in places where no local associations exist, or it is impractical to form them, loans will be made through designated agents by each bank to farmers. The details of the process for making loans will be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board by means of rules and regulations they are authorized to make and which will be furnished to any farmer after the system is organized and ready for business, so that at present I am able only to outline the general features. I understand it is the purpose of the bill to provide only the machinery absolutely necessary to make the system effective and safe and as readily accessible as possible to borrowers and to reduce the operating expenses to a minimum.

II. The joint-stock banks, which are entirely independent of the above-described system, will make loans direct to farmers under proper rules and regulations.

OBLIGATIONS ASSUMED BY THE BORROWERS.

Each borrower will obligate himself to pay the interest on his loan, which shall not exceed 5 per cent per annum; also an operating charge of not to exceed 1 per cent per annum, and I hope and believe that the percentages actually paid will be much less; he will also pay each year an amortization payment, the amount of which will be determined by the length of time he desires his loan to run, and may be as low as 1 per cent.

If a farmer borrows through a local association he will put up 5 per cent of the face of his loan to be invested in the stock of the land bank and will receive dividends upon this stock as earned. He can pay this 5 per cent in cash or can have it included in his loan. He will likewise be liable for an additional 5 per cent of the face of his loan. The purpose is to secure the proper conduct of the local association in making recommendations for loans and appraisements through its appraisal committee. When a farmer pays his loan the amount invested in stock is repaid to him and all liability ceases.

It can not be too strongly urged that the proper and economical administration of all parts of the system will be of great advantage in securing low rates of interest, low cost of operation, and in obtaining moneys to be loaned to farmers.

Borrowers who make loans through designated agents from the land banks will put up the 5 per cent for investment in the stock of the land bank, but will not have the additional 5 per cent liability described above.

Borrowers from the joint-stock banks will have such obligations as the regulations may provide, but as these banks are private institutions under Government supervision, it is not possible for me at this time to describe their operations more definitely.

CONCLUSION.

Legislation providing a system of rural credits is not proposed as a special favor to the farmers. Merchants, manufacturers, and other business men have long had provided for them by law means of mobilizing their credit in the form of securities the sales of which enable them to obtain the funds they need for the conduct of their businesses. Without proper legislation authorizing this, business generally would have languished. Enterprises of great pith and moment would never have been undertaken. Railroads would not have been constructed. Manufacture and industry would have been limited to small undertakings. Public corporations would have been without funds for the improvements necessary to their growth and the needs and comfort of their peoples. Rural credits recognizes the right of the farmers to such legislation as will afford them similar opportunities to develop their industry, to effectively use the intelligence that characterizes them, to improve the conditions and conveniences of farm life, and to provide us all with food and raiment. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, in order to have a clear understanding of the land-credit institutions created by the Federal farm-loan act, it is necessary to have a knowledge of the various propositions which have come before Congress with official indorsement. With these propositions in mind we are better prepared to comprehend the institutions created by the above act, to appreciate their merits, to point out their defects, and to make suggestions for their improvement in the future. A study of the rural-credit institutions to be brought into existence by the Federal farm-loan act may be made under the following general heads:

I. The bill recommended by the United States commission which went abroad to study rural credits.

II. The bill reported by the subcommittees on rural credits, Sixty-third Congress.

III. The bill reported favorably to the Senate by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, Sixty-third Congress.

IV. The bill reported by the Joint Committee on Rural Credits authorized by the Sixty-third Congress to report to the Sixty-fourth Congress.

V. The Federal farm-loan act and the fundamental principles and chief characteristics of the new land-credit institutions established thereby.

VI. Defects in these institutions.

VII. Suggestions for their improvement.

I.

THE BILL RECOMMENDED BY THE UNITED STATES COMMISSION WHICH WENT ABROAD TO STUDY RURAL CREDITS.

Congress took the initiatory step toward rural-credit legislation on the 4th day of March, 1913. On this date the President was authorized to appoint a commission to go abroad and study the rural-credit systems of European countries. This commission was appointed; it went to Europe, made its investigation, submitted its report to Congress, which included a carefully prepared land-credit bill. This bill was introduced in both Houses of Congress and referred to the Committees on Banking and Currency. It provided for the establishment of a new system of land credits in the United States, embodying the fundamental principles which characterize the land-credit institutions of Europe. Private joint-stock land banks were chosen as the corporate instruments to have the exclusive ownership, control, and management of these institutions. These joint-stock land banks were modeled after our commercial banks. They were to have no altruistic purpose and were to be placed under no special obligation to serve the farmers of the United States or to promote the prosperity of agriculture. They were to be under the supervision but not under the control of the Federal Government. The farmers were to have no part in their management. Their organization was to be a voluntary matter depending entirely upon private initiative. It was altogether a matter of doubt, uncertainty, and conjecture as to how many of these banks would be organized, where they would be located, how much capital they would have, and what amount of credit they could extend.

II.

THE BILL REPORTED BY THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON RURAL CREDITS, SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

The commission bill was referred to the Banking and Currency Committees of the two Houses. These committees appointed subcommittees on rural credits. The subcommittees held joint hearings and considered the subject jointly. The commission plan was rejected. A new bill was prepared and introduced in both Houses of Congress. It proposed to divide continental United States, excluding Alaska, into 12 districts and to establish in each district a Federal land bank, to be operated through local associations to be known as national farm-loan associations.

It will be seen that Congress at that time had two distinct plans before it. One was the joint-stock land bank plan; the other was the 12 Federal land banks plan, with auxiliary local farm-loan associations. For a time there was a spirited contest between the advocates of these two plans. Finally a compromise was reached by which both plans were to be embodied in one bill. As an expression of this compromise what is known as the Hollis bill was prepared and introduced in the Senate. Another notable feature of this compromise was the agreement to eliminate from the subcommittee bill the "Government-aid" feature, which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to purchase in any one year an amount of farm-mortgage bonds not in excess of $50,000,000. This form of Government aid was not seriously advocated thereafter. The compromise measure, near the close of the Sixty-third Congress, was reported favorably to the Senate by its Banking and Currency Committee as a substitute for the subcommittee bill.

III.

THE BILL REPORTED FAVORABLY TO THE SENATE BY THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY, SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

The joint-stock land banks of the Senate committee bill did not differ materially from those proposed in the commission bill. The chief feature of these banks have already been outlined. The Federal land banks and the farm-loan associations of the Senate committee bill were in the main the same as had been proposed in the subcommittee bill. The Federal land banks with their auxiliary farm-loan associations as proposed in these two bills, were in some important respects a great improvement over the joint-stock bank plan presented in the commission bill. First, their organization was made a certainty. This was accomplished by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, for the United States, to subscribe for any portion of the minimum capital stock required for each of these banks which should not, within a certain time, be subscribed by the public. Second, the entire continental United States, excluding Alaska, was to be included within the 12 Federal land banks district, and thus the advantages and benefits of these institutions were to be brought within the reach of the farmers of every State in the Union. Third, the credit of the 12 Federal land banks was unified and strengthened by a provision which made each Federal land bank financially responsible for the bonds issued by all other Federal land banks, thus equalizing, to a large degree, the credit of these banks and enabling them to make loans at practically uniform rates of interest.

These bills, however, had some serious defects, among which the following may be mentioned:

First. The Federal land banks and the farm-loan associations, under the terms of these two bills, were not public but private corporations. There was no limit to the amount of private capital that might be invested in the stock of both the Federal land bank and their subsidiary farm-loan associations. It is true that borrowers were required to subscribe for stock in the farm-loan associations in an amount equal to 5 per cent of their loans. But the public generally was left free to subscribe to the capital stock of these associations. Farm-loan associations were not to be organizations of borrowers, but private business corporations, similar to our commercial banking institutions.

Second. The Federal land banks and their auxiliary farm-loan associations, under the subcommittee and Senate committee bills, were to be profit-sharing middlemen corporations, created by Federal authority, to act as intermediaries between the farmers and investors.

Third, the institutions proposed by the subcommittee and Senate committee bills were fatally defective in this: They gave no assurance that they would furnish an adequate amount of credit to meet the reasonable demands of the great agricultural interests of this country. Each Federal land bank was required to have a minimum capital stock of $500,000. The capital stock of each bank was to be mainly used as an operating fund. To secure capital to meet the demands for loans each of these banks was authorized to issue and sell farm-mortgage bonds in an amount not to exceed twenty times its capital; $10,000,000 would be the maximum amount of bonds that could be issued by a bank of $500,000 capital stock. On the same basis the 12 Federal land banks could not issue in excess of $120,000,000 in bonds. So far as assured by the provisions of these bills the credit power of these 12 Federal land banks was therefore limited to $120,000,000. This would have enabled them to take up only 4 per cent of the $3,000,000,000 of the outstanding farm mortgages in the United States. The fact that the Federal land banks and the farm-loan associations under the subcommittee and Senate committee bills gave no assurance that they would be able to meet the reasonable and necessary demands of the farmers of the United States for farm-mortgage loans was in itself a sufficient reason why some better plan must be discovered.

IV.

THE BILL REPORTED BY THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON RURAL CREDIT AUTHORIZED BY THE SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS TO REPORT TO THE SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Just before its final adjournment the Sixty-third Congress authorized the appointment of a joint committee and directed it to report a rural-credit bill early in the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress. This committee consisted of 12 members, divided equally between the Committees on Banking and Currency and on Agriculture. In due time this committee prepared a bill and reported it to Congress. When introduced it was referred to the Banking and Currency Committees of the two Houses. With some modifications and amendments the bill was reported back to the two Houses with favorable recommendation for its passage. A conference committee settled the final form in which the joint committee bill was enacted into law as "the Federal farm-loan act."

In its mechanism the joint-committee bill followed the Senate committee bill and authorized the organization of joint-stock land banks and 12 Federal land banks with their auxiliary farm-loan associations. Its principle, however, the Federal land banks and the farm-loan associations under the joint-committee bill were fundamentally different from what they were under the subcommittee and Senate committee bills. The changes made in part, may be pointed out as follows:

1. The Federal land banks and farm-loan associations under the joint-committee bill are public and not private banking institutions.

2. Except temporarily for organization purposes, the borrowers will be the exclusive owners of all the stock in the 12 Federal land banks and in the farm-loan associations.

3. These institutions will be exclusively in the control of borrowers aided and assisted in part by the Federal Government.

4. All profits of these institutions will revert to the borrowers.

5. The capital stock of the Federal land banks will increase automatically in a certain ratio with the increase in the amount of loans thus enabling these institutions to make loans and issue bonds indefinitely without the total bond issue exceeding twenty times the capital of the banks.

V.

THE FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT AND THE FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES AND CHIEF CHARACTERISTICS OF THE NEW LAND-CREDIT INSTITUTIONS ESTABLISHED THEREBY.

"The Federal farm-loan act" creates an entirely new system of farm-mortgage credit for the agricultural interests of the United States. Generally speaking it must be admitted that these institutions are founded upon the fundamental principles and possess the chief characteristics of the best land-credit institutions of the world, and give reasonable promise of bringing to the farmers of the United States all of the advantages and benefits of such institutions.

The following fundamental principles upon which the chief land-credit institutions of Europe are founded are utilized in establishing both the joint-stock land banks and the 12 Federal land banks as created by the Federal farm-loan act:

1. These institutions are authorized by Federal law and will be supervised and regulated and in a large measure controlled by Federal authority.

2. They are authorized to make what are known as long-time loans, extending for a period of 40 years.

3. They are authorized to issue and sell long-time farm-mortgage bonds as a means to obtain the necessary capital upon which to make long-time loans.

4. They require loans to be paid in small annual or semi-annual payments, known as amortization payments, but permit borrowers to make additional payments after five years from date of the mortgage.

The foregoing propositions apply to both joint-stock land banks and the Federal land banks. The following may be said of the 12 Federal land banks and the national farm-loan associations:

1. They are public land-credit institutions as distinguished from private corporations organized for the benefit and profit of shareholders.

2. They will be controlled entirely by borrowers, except such control as shall be exercised by Federal authority.

3. Their profits will be distributed to borrowers and not to lenders, and their reserves and surpluses will inure to the benefit of mortgagors.

4. As their capital will increase automatically with their loans, they will be enabled to make loans and issue and sell farm-mortgage bonds indefinitely and thus provide an adequate amount of credit to meet the demands of agriculture.

5. Though operating independently, they are made financially responsible for each others' bonds, which in effect centralizes and unifies their credit and makes them in the eyes of investors one institution, enabling them to give substantial promise of accomplishing two most important things, namely, to provide practically equal credit facilities to all sections of the country and to furnish to the farmers in every part of the United States credit at uniform rates of interest.

6. Substantial Government aid has been rendered as follows:

(a) The Federal Government, if necessary, will furnish temporarily but without interest charge the $9,000,000 to provide the original capital for the organization of the 12 Federal land banks.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, with the approval of the Federal farm-loan board, to deposit with Federal land banks money in an amount not to exceed $6,000,000 at any one time, which may be used in an emergency to meet interest payment on bonds and other demands.

(c) To insure proper supervision, regulation, and control of these institutions the Federal Government creates the Federal farm-loan board and establishes numerous public offices at large annual expense to the Federal Government.

(d) The mortgages and bonds of joint-stock land banks and the mortgages and bonds and the capital and surplus of the Federal land banks and farm-loan associations are exempted from National, State, and local taxation.

(e) Special privileges are conferred upon farm-mortgage bonds in making them a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds as well as security for public deposits, and member banks of the Federal Reserve System are authorized to buy and sell such bonds, and, further, Federal reserve banks may buy and sell such bonds under certain limitations.

(f) These institutions go forth with a national name, under national supervision and control, sustained with the prestige of national indorsement and strengthened and upheld by the moral support, if not the financial backing, of the Federal Government.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me there to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. That same power exists by which the Secretary of the Treasury can deposit the money in any national banks by national authority?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Then it does not any more favor the farm-credit banks than the national banks?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Though conferring only the privilege now accorded to commercial banks, it is still a Government aid.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. It puts them on a par but does not give them any special favor. That is the point I object to.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Well, be that as it may, the authority specifically conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit funds in the Federal land banks—on proper security, of course—is intended as a special privilege and should be so regarded. There may be times when these deposits will be important in tiding these banks over financial difficulties. Besides, an institution trusted with Government deposits is regarded favorably in the eyes of the investing public.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes, sir.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman think this would be a great deal better bill if the joint-stock companies were entirely eliminated?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I think so.

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman ought to be applauded for his opinion.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I agree with the gentleman on that. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Through the joint-stock banks loans for speculative purposes can be had without limit, can they not?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes; certainly.

VI.

CRITICISMS AND OBJECTIONS.

The land-credit institutions created by the "Federal farm-loan act" are not by any means perfect. So far as legislation at this session of Congress is concerned, criticism of the provisions of the new act and the institutions created thereby will have no effect. Some advantage may come, however, from making a summary of some of the defects in the institutions which we have just created. Among these the following may be mentioned:

1. The act should not have authorized the organization of joint-stock land banks—corporations organized for gain, conducted for profit, managed in the interest of shareholders, whose chief concern will be the earning of dividends, and which will possess the power, as Government instrumentalities, to levy tribute upon both borrowers and lenders—corporations that will be stumbling blocks obstructing the success of the Federal land banks and farm-loan associations owned and operated by the farmers, competing with them in the money markets in the sale of their bonds, vitiating their credit in the eyes of the investors, adding additional cost to the Government for their supervision, and, on the whole, making credit to the farmers more expensive and interest rates higher.

2. The 12 Federal land banks and the farm-loan associations thereunder can not be economically administered, and economy of administration is an important factor in securing a low rate of interest. In the interest of economy the number of Federal land banks should not have exceeded six, and the farm-loan associations should not have been allowed to employ a salaried official or to engage in any business or work that would incur expense or necessitate assessments, fines, or other contributions.

3. Federal land banks, like the chief land-credit institutions of Europe, should have been allowed to make loans without any restrictions upon the borrowers as to the use of the money, as these restrictions in the use of the money borrowed will be difficult to enforce and annoying to farmers. They serve no good purpose and will tend to make borrowers patronize the joint-stock land banks and other private-loan institutions, where interest charges on the whole will be higher.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I regret I can not. I have but five minutes.

4. The provision which allows Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks to charge an interest rate 1 per cent higher than the interest rate on the latest issue of farm-mortgage bonds is excessive and will encourage extravagance in the management of these institutions and is wholly unsupported by the precedents of European institutions, which do business on less than one-fourth of 1 per cent per annum on the amount due on loans.

5. The restriction of the length of loans to 40 years does not follow the rule of European institutions, which generally permit loans to run for a period as high as 60 years, thus enabling the borrowers to pay the loans by an annual payment of one-half of 1 per cent of the principal and the shortening of the loan period to 40 years becomes a discrimination against tenants and others of small means who wish to acquire a farm home.

6. The limiting of the loan to 50 per cent of the value of the land and 20 per cent of the value of the improvements is another objectionable feature, and is especially objectionable in view of the fact that the farmer is compelled to invest 5 per cent of his loan in the stock of the bank and have other reductions made therefrom to meet the cost of appraisement, abstract of title, and other expenses, and further, in view of the fact that a loan equal to 60 per cent of the value of the land, payable in annual installments, could be made with perfect safety. This restriction of the loan to 50 per cent of the value of the land is another discrimination which will work a hardship upon tenants and other persons of small means who desire to acquire a farm home, and places our new land-credit institutions beyond the reach of many farmers and citizens who are not only the most deserving but who are also in the greatest need of their benefits and advantages.

7. The provision which authorizes banks, trust companies, mortgage companies, and savings institutions organized under State laws to act as agents for the Federal land banks in certain cases, indorse mortgages taken through them, and charge one-half of 1 per cent annually on the amount due on the loan for the lifetime of the loan is very objectionable, and simply creates an additional, unnecessary, and useless middleman between the farmer and the investor to be supported by contributions from the borrowers.

8. The land-credit institutions created by this act should be open alike to every farmer in the United States who can furnish the proper security for his loan and hence the provision which requires that an applicant for a loan must have the approval of two-thirds of the five directors of the association is bound to work an injury upon many worthy farmers who may thus be excluded from the advantage of these institutions without any justifiable cause.

9. The reserve required of Federal land banks is inadequate in amount, is much less than European land-credit institutions are required to maintain, and its accumulation, being based upon a certain percentage of the net profits, must be as to the future indefinite, uncertain, and unknown in amount. At best, the reserve required can not exceed but slightly 1 per cent of the outstanding bonds of the Federal land banks, which is wholly insufficient to meet the probable defaults and losses in interest payment and may impair the confidence of creditors in these banks and thus injure the credit of the farmers whose security the banks issue and sell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for five minutes more.

VII.

SUGGESTIONS FOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The merits of our new land-credit institutions have been mentioned. Their defects have been pointed out. It is now in order to make some suggestions for their improvement. This may be done as follows:

1. The 12 Federal land banks should have been unified and strengthened by the creation of a central institution to have been known as the united Federal land bank, to have been controlled by 12 directors, 1 to have been chosen by each of the Federal land banks, to have constituted a legal corporate instrument through which the 12 Federal land banks could have acted upon all matters of common interest and said central institution should have been specifically empowered to issue, in its name, all farm-mortgage bonds and to have established uniform rates of interest for both bonds and mortgages.

2. Provisions should have been made for the organization of borrowers into district, State, and interstate associations as organizations through which the borrowers may have promoted their mutual welfare and contributed to the development and perfection of the land-credit institutions which ultimately will be entirely capitalized by their money and supported by their earnings.

3. In some way provision should have been made whereby acceptances or other obligations of member banks of the Federal Reserve System would have been eligible for discount by the Federal reserve banks, in order that the farmers of the United States might have been given access to these great storehouses of credit upon an equal footing with the commercial, financial, and industrial interests of the country.

4. The trustees of the postal savings depositaries should have been authorized to have invested a reasonable amount of postal savings deposits in farm-mortgage bonds, and thus have given the credit instruments of the farmers equal recognition with other securities.

5. The Federal Government should have made a permanent and not a mere temporary contribution to the capital and the reserve fund of the 12 Federal land banks, not merely as a gift or gratuity to the farmers of the United States, but to promote a great national policy, which has for its objects the growth, expansion, and prosperity of agriculture; the rendering of assistance to the 2,300,000 farm tenants and other landless persons in securing farm homes; and the general improvement of the social, educational, and economic conditions of farm life. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, the acceptance of the conference report on the rural-credit bill, which will undoubtedly take place in the course of a few minutes, marks the close of a long period of work on the subject of rural credits and a long period of agitation. The bill before us is not quite what I should like to see. It contains some features that I do not approve, but on the whole, it seems to me, it is a bill that this House will have no serious cause to regret having passed.

It is difficult for those of us who have worked hard in the making of this bill for the past two or three years to tell whether we have created a great new system which, if successful, will be even greater than the Federal reserve act, or whether we are simply launching an experiment that will work in some places and not in others. It looks as though we may be creating a new system of great value. We have tried to do something of great permanent value to agriculture throughout our broad land, but nobody knows whether the farmers will like to take out these long-time farm loans under this system by which the money is loaned and after the sale of bonds comes back to be loaned over and over again, or whether the present institutions, which loan more directly, will be more successful.

As you know, there was a joint commission appointed at the close of the last Congress that submitted a report and bill to the House and Senate last December. The House committee did a lot of work on that commission bill, cut out a good deal of surplus language, revised the order of the sections, and cut out some entire sections, and especially cut out the unlimited feature, which made a lot of revision necessary. In the main the work of the House stands, and it is our work, rather than the work of the Senate, that is now before you. The unlimited feature goes out, and in general, as I said, this is the House bill that is before us.

We have yielded to the Senate on a few things that I think we should not have yielded on. For instance, we yielded in the matter of requiring the organization of 10 farm-loan associations before the Government would pay its subscription to any Federal land bank; but it does not look as though that was a vital matter, and on the whole we have strengthened the Federal land banks and their reserve features, and the farm-loan associations are somewhat strengthened by the conference report. The conferees have considered every feature of the bill, and taken a long time at it, and we have gone over it thoroughly. Generally speaking, the work of the committees and of the conferees has been absolutely nonpartisan. In fact, I think there has been less partisanship manifested in this legislation than on other important subjects, and I think the House can accept the work that is now finally submitted to it with reasonable satisfaction.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield to his colleague?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. BENNET. Is there anything in the bill that comes from the conference committee that will do for the farmer what the building and loan association in the city of Port Jervis, in my colleague's district, will do for a mechanic in that city in the way of getting a home?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; there is. A farmer may deposit small sums with his farm-loan association and accumulate up to $25 and invest in farm bonds; and that, of course, corresponds roughly to the savings feature of the building and loan association. Then, the farm-loan association is cooperative, just as the building and loan association is. The farmer borrows through the association. The first appraisal of his farm, for instance, is made by appraisers who are his neighbors, and that is submitted to an appraiser who is a governmental official. He may borrow in much the same way, and pay off his principal and interest together in amortizations on long time, just as he does in a building and loan association, only much longer time loans are allowed, running up to 40 years.

Mr. BENNET. As the bill passed the House, it was no good to a man unless he had the equivalent of 40 per cent of the price of his farm. Is that provision still in the bill?

Mr. PLATT. He must have fully that much. Fifty per cent may be loaned on the value of land and 20 per cent on buildings. Some of our eastern savings banks loan 60 per cent on both, and our savings and loan associations do even better. I am not at all sure that they can not serve the people of the East as well as the institution created in this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYES. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for five minutes.

[Mr. HOWARD addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

[Mr. CARAWAY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. GLASS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, the man who feeds and clothes the world is the important man in it. Rural-credit legislation should be in the interest of the farmers. We passed the Federal reserve banking law for the commercial class and the banking class, which is of untold benefit to the commercial classes of this country. This bill, as it is presented to-day, is a mixture of good and evil. Because there is good in it, I am going to vote for it as being a start, a beginning in the right direction. I also state without equivocation that this joint-stock bank proposition is one solely in the interest of the great trust companies of this country. It is a proposition that has no place, properly speaking, in a rural-credit bill for the benefit of the farmers, and it should be eliminated. It ought to have been eliminated in the House, and it should have been eliminated in the committee of conference. [Applause.]

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that I have not more time, but I thank my distinguished friend from Virginia for giving me this much time. I believe that this bill is going to do a great deal of good. It is not what I have advocated and what I have been trying to do in the way of legislation in securing a system of rural credits, but it is a foundation on which the farmers of this country will get a rural credit system that they really need. It is a foundation that will bring commercial banks to a lower rate of interest. I do not like the provision in reference to 8 per cent on defaulted interest. I hoped the conferees would disagree with the Senate on that proposition. These joint-stock land banks have no place in this bill, but in order to get the bill through we are bound to accept it. The farmers of this country will take care to eliminate all commercial and speculative parts of the bill. It will be done in the future; you need not worry a mite but that the man behind the plow is going to the ballot box and do business. [Laughter.] The farmers know who their friends are in Congress. They will keep them here. They know who the men are that have been endeavoring to prevent rural-credit legislation. They will remember it.

The farmer is going to get a rural-credit bill in a few years that is really a farmer's money-borrowing system to carry on farm operations. We all know that the only way it can be done is to force this bill through as a starter or a foundation, and with it I believe the great majority of the farmers of this country will say, "Well done for a starter," and thank Congress for giving them what they never had before. No other Congress has ever done so much. This Congress has brought forth this bill, and, as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] said, it will force the banks to reduce the rate of interest to the farmers to a rate where they can get the benefit of it.

When a lot of us started out in 1913 to get a rural-credit system established by act of Congress, we were called Populists and demagogues. I am happy to find many of those who tried to deride and discourage us now joining hands with us in this fight for the farmer.

In behalf of the farmers, I thank all of you who have changed your minds and come nearer to our way of thinking on this vital matter. We beg you to give us your hearty support at future sessions of Congress in our efforts to perfect this rural-credit legislation, so that every farmer in this land can be given a fair opportunity in the race of life. He asks for no special privileges. He simply demands justice. We are going to continue the fight till he gets it. [Applause.]

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this conference report, and do it without making a speech against it. I have heard a number of gentleman on the floor this morning speak against it, saying that they would vote for it. They catch them coming and going. They tell those of their constituents who do not need money that they were against it and made a speech against it. To those who are pleased with it they will say, "I voted for it." Brave attitude! I saw a man once try to fish and cut bait at the same time. I have seen a number do it to-day. [Laughter and applause.]

[Mr. NORTON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note in the conference report upon the Federal farm-loan bill that an amendment proposed by me on May 15 has been incorporated in the bill to a certain extent. When the bill was considered by the House at that time the provision respecting deposits was limited to shareholders, and to be a shareholder one must be a borrower. In other words, the deposit privilege was open only to those least likely to have any money. Then the banks were not permitted to pay any interest. So on May 15 I offered the following amendment:

Provided, That the farm-loan board may permit the Federal land banks to accept deposits and to invest the same under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the farm-loan board.

This amendment failed to pass, but the conference report now being considered contains a provision which meets my objection in part.

In the enumeration of powers of national farm-loan associations there has been inserted the following:

Fourth. To issue certificates against deposits of current funds bearing interest for not longer than one year, at not to exceed 4 per cent per annum after six days from date, convertible into farm-loan bonds when presented at the Federal land bank of the district in the amount of $25 or any multiple thereof. Such deposits, when received, shall be forthwith transmitted to said land bank, and be invested by it in the purchase of farm-loan bonds issued by a Federal land bank or in first mortgages as defined by this act.

It will be seen that this change in the bill permits deposits from all, whether shareholders or not, and permits the payment of interest at not to exceed 4 per cent, and to that extent the committee is to be commended. But the bill is still far short of what it should be. This is supposed to be a farmers' bank. Why restrict deposits to the period of one year? It will never be possible to accumulate much money under that restriction. Men with savings like to find a more or less permanent place to keep them. This provision will discourage the deposit of savings. And the farmers will never gain a position of independence until they can build up a loan fund of their own. This whole bill, with the exception of the amendment just referred to, is constructed upon the principle that the money bags will be held by someone else. The farmers are to be left in the position of having nothing but credit to offer. They must go to someone else. The provisions of this bill will not permit them to gradually accumulate a money supply of their own. Until that is brought about they will continue to be in a position of dependence. They can not hope to get the rates for farm loans down to the levels of the great European countries. The rates in Germany and France were not made low by Government aid. They were forced down by the immense accumulation of deposits of the farmers themselves.

It is true that the conference committee has met my proposal part way, and I give them credit for it, but the farmers will be bitterly disappointed with this legislation when they learn what it really is. Of course, while there is life there is hope, and a succeeding Congress may amend the law to make the institutions created by this act banks in fact as well as in name.

The following Members, by unanimous consent, were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the bill:

Mr. PHELAN, Mr. SMALL, Mr. RAKER, Mr. RAGSDALE, Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS, Mr. HASTINGS, Mr. OLIVER, Mr. LEVER, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, Mr. FARR, Mr. JACOWAY, Mr. TILLMAN, and Mr. MOSS of Indiana.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to join with my friend from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] in extending congratulations to the distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee and his colleagues upon that committee for the splendid work they have done in bringing in this rural-credits bill to this final stage of passage. I wish to say that I intend to vote for this conference report very gladly and I do not have any apologies to make for voting for it. It is true, the bill is not all I wanted. I presume that this bill is not all that any individual in this body wanted, but consideration must be given to the fact that all legislation, all good, progressive legislation, after all, is a matter of the compromise of the judgments of 435 Members of the House and 96 Members of the Senate. We can not get all we want. We must get the best we can. We have taken the first great forward step in rural-credit legislation, the first in this country. If the system does not work out as we believe it will, the future will tell and future Congresses will rectify our mistakes. I assume there may be errors of judgment. If so, they can be corrected.

I am as much opposed to the joint-stock bank feature of the bill as anyone, but I am not willing to vote down this report and endanger the passage of legislation on this subject at this session. That would be folly. I am willing to take the bill as agreed to by the conferees of the House and Senate and vote for it, believing strongly it will succeed. [Applause.]

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman wait until the vote is taken on a division, and then he could make the point of no quorum, and in that way get the yeas and nays automatically.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my demand for the yeas and nays, and ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 2.

Mr. MANN. Where are all those gentlemen who were talking against the conference report?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 311, nays 12, answered "present" 3, not voting 108, as follows:

Mr. MANN. Four years behind the times, as usual.

Mr. COPLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the gentleman from New York doing that if he chooses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3986) granting certain coal lands to the town of Kaycee, Wyo., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 854), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PADGETT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16602) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, to provide for the service of the Naval Militia in time of war, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 859), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

McCurry, and J. J. SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 28, 1916.

(Legislative day of Monday, June 26, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following telegram for publication in the RECORD. It has to do with the Army.

The telegram is as follows:

LA FAYETTE, IND., June 25, 1916.

THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President, Washington, D. C.:

We earnestly protest against action of Senate in refusing support to dependents of National Guards. They enlisted as patriots and citizens of the greatest and wealthiest Nation on earth. They should not be required to resign or be discharged by action of the Government they have volunteered to defend. It is an insult and is ungrateful. Such action will not produce an army. The action of the House is right and meets with universal approval. Our Government can not afford to be penurious or fail to do its full duty to those who go out in its defense. The action of the Senate will place the burden on the localities from which these men go to do what it refuses to do, so that these men may not be disgraced and humiliated by being denied the right and privilege to defend their country. We do not believe that only the rich wifeless, motherless, fatherless, and childless should be given and allowed the privilege of an American citizen to defend his country. The Purdue Battery, which went to the front yesterday, had men in it from half the States, some of whom spent their last cent to get here to keep the faith and meet the President's call. Honor them; do not say, "Your services are not needed; you are not in the class that can fight for Uncle Sam."

CHARLES V. MCADAMS.
CLYDE H. JONES.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION, ARK.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1388) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to furnish hot water from the hot springs on the Hot Springs Reservation for drinking and bathing purposes free of cost to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association, which were, on page 1, line 4, after "water," to insert "for five tubs," and on page 1, line 8, after "prescribe," to insert:

Provided, That said hospital association shall, upon request of the superintendent of the Hot Springs Reservation or his duly authorized representative, immediately after being notified, send an ambulance or conveyance for and accept and treat without charge therefor any emergency patients so sent to the hospital for treatment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

TRADE AGREEMENTS ABROAD.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present a resolution (S. Res. 220) and let it lie on the table. I will read it:

Whereas it has been widely stated in the public press that a conference was recently held in Paris, France, by authorized representatives of several of the Governments of leading industrial and commercial nations of Europe, now engaged in the European War as allies of France, with the object and purpose of arriving at an agreement between them with respect to their future joint and several industrial and commercial interests; and

Whereas it is also similarly stated that a commercial treaty was entered into at said conference between France, Great Britain, and other allied countries, which treaty, it is alleged, is now being drafted and is to become operative after the end of said war, with the declared object and purpose of establishing a boycott against the enemies of the high contracting parties to said treaty, both during the war and after the war, and also to promote commercial independence from the central powers; and

Whereas in a statement relating to said treaty issued by the British Board of Trade, published in the American press, it is stated, among other things, that "the allies declare their common determination to insure the reestablishment of countries suffering from acts of destruction, spoliation, and unjust requisition, and decide to join in devising means to secure the restoration of those countries by giving to them a prior claim on raw materials, industrial and agricultural plants, and stock and mercantile fleets, or by assisting them in re-equipping themselves in these respects * * *"; that "the allies are to conserve all their natural resources during the period of reconstruction after the war for common use"; and that "in order to defend their commerce against economic aggression resulting from dumping or any other mode of unfair competition, the allies decide to fix by agreement a period during which the commerce of the enemy powers will be submitted to special treatment, and the goods originating in their countries will be subjected to prohibition or to a special régime of an effective character * * *"; and that "the allies' mutual trade is to be fostered in every possible way"; and that "the above steps are to be put into operation immediately": Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, requested to ascertain and send to the Senate, at the earliest practicable moment, exact information, so far as that may be possible, as to the precise character, form, and full purpose of this agreement or treaty, especially with the view of disclosing to the Senate whether, and to what extent, neutral nations, especially the United States, may be affected thereby.

I ask that the resolution may lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask that the Senate now proceed with the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10484) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,"

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to strike out section 7 of the pending bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the portion of the bill proposed to be stricken out, which will take precedence, I think, over the pending motion. I send it to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 8, page 38, after the word "repealed," strike out the period, insert a comma, and the following:

But no publication shall be sent by freight if such method of transportation results in unfair discrimination or in the undue delay of the delivery of such publication at its destination.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That so much of section 1 of the "Act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1912, which provides that the Post Office Department shall not extend or enlarge its present policy of sending second-class matter by freight trains, is hereby repealed, but no publication shall be sent by freight if such method of transportation results in unfair discrimination or in the undue delay of the delivery of such publication at its destination.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that amendment. I will accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has no objection to it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not make any objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion to strike out section 7 as amended.

Mr. ASHURST. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the motion is put I wish briefly to call attention to the amendment the Senate has just adopted. In the remarks the other day of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] he called attention to a great many things that I think created a very favorable impression in favor of his motion on the part of most if not all those who listened to his remarks. I confess I was greatly impressed by what the Senator said, and I was inclined to vote for the motion. Had the vote been taken then I would have voted in favor of it. But after the adjournment of the Senate, and the necessary delay that was brought about by such adjournment, as it has gone over now several days, I looked into the matter as well as I could. I consulted with some of the officials in the department, and I was impressed with the seriousness of the situation and reached in my own mind a conclusion that the section ought not to be stricken out if it could be modified in such a way that the great abuse which I think could be brought about by a Postmaster General in case it were not stricken out could be avoided.

The record shows that the Post Office Department has saved somewhere in the neighborhood of $7,000,000 to the Government since it has been sending some of these publications by freight, but under the authority that existed——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Everyone in the Senate and everywhere else knows that the Senator from Nebraska wants to be correct. He has just made a statement that some $7,000,000 was saved.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but I would be glad to be corrected if I am in error.

Mr. ASHURST. Instead of $7,000,000, the amount is $5,557,879.60 since the 1st of September, 1911.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, the Senator has made a correction, and I thank him for it. I made a misstatement. I think I made the statement from the fact that it was claimed by the department that in the neighborhood of $7,000,000 could be saved if the practice that has been going on over a part of the country in sending by freight could be extended to the entire country. Is not that right?

Mr. ASHURST. No. Will the Senator pardon me there?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. If the blue-tag system were extended to the entire country, I have never heard of any contention from any respectable authority to support it that more than $1,500,000 could be saved. I am sure the Senator wants to be right. No Senator here wants to be incorrect.

Mr. NORRIS. How much did the Senator say?

Mr. ASHURST. About $1,500,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is that per annum?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. One million and five hundred thousand dollars per annum?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. I accept the correction of the Senator from Arizona. I am satisfied that he is correct in his statement. I was speaking only from memory. I have, however, a statement here from the Post Office Department in which they use this language:

Economically, the plan has been eminently successful. The department saved $5,547,879.60 in transportation cost up to the end of the fiscal year 1915 and approximately $1,500,000 additional for 1916, making a total saving since the plan has been in operation of about $7,000,000.

Those are the figures given by the department, and that is what I had reference to when I made the statement. For the sake of argument, I am willing to accept the figures the Senator from Arizona has given. I am only quoting these figures from the department's report. Of course, I have no personal knowledge in regard to the matter.

Now, let us get the situation. Under a law of Congress the Post Office Department commenced to send publications by freight. It continued to do that for some time. Then Congress passed the section of the law that we are now seeking to repeal, in which the right of the Postmaster General to send these magazines by freight was limited, and the law provided that he should not extend the practice that was then in vogue. At the time that law was passed the carriage of periodicals by freight had been extended to only a portion of the United States.

Mr. TOWNSEND. To the second and third mailing divisions.

Mr. NORRIS. To the second and third mailing divisions, leaving the first and fourth divisions to which it did not apply. Because of that limitation the Postmaster General had no right to extend the operation of the law.

In the first division—if I am wrong, I wish some one of the members of the committee would correct me, for I speak from memory when I refer to these matters—in the first division, which includes the cities of Boston, Philadelphia, and New York, there has never been any mail matter sent from those cities by freight, because of this limitation of the law. In those cities are published the great bulk of the magazines; and in those cities, when the Postmaster General wants to put in practice the sending of mail by freight he has first to send it by mail trains to some place outside of that division. He sends it from New York, from Boston, and Philadelphia to Buffalo, to Pittsburgh, and to Cleveland. It is then taken out of the mail car, put into a freight train, and sent to Kansas City, Omaha, Milwaukee, St. Paul, and other similar cities. If that limitation of the law were repealed, as section 7 undertakes to repeal it, it would permit the Postmaster General to direct these magazines to be sent from New York, from Boston, and from Philadelphia by freight. There is great economy in doing that.

The question arises, however, in the practice of this procedure of dispatching mail by freight, Will the Postmaster General injure the publishers; will he discriminate? The charge is made that he can kill a publication if he has a right to send it by freight and to send its competitor by mail. That is what has appealed to me as being vicious, as being wrong, as something that no man ought to have it in his power to do. It has been claimed that that has been done. The Post Office Department, however, denies that it has ever been done intentionally.

I think the department admits that injury was done when they first put this practice into operation; that they sent by freight some publications which were afterwards taken out of that category and sent on mail trains in the regular way. It is claimed now, however, that the method, so far as they are able to put in it force, is doing no one any injury; in other words, that publications that are printed and ready to be sent out over the country are sometimes stacked and stored for two weeks before they are sent out. One of the officials in the Post Office Department told me the other day that he had been over to Philadelphia, and he had seen carloads of the Ladies' Home Journal two weeks before it was given to the public in sacks in their storerooms in Philadelphia ready to be sent out. He stated that they would have plenty of time to send most of those journals by freight and to have them delivered in the cities and in the towns where they are to be delivered and at the time that the publishers desired them to be delivered. The magazine publishers, I understand, desire that their publications shall be placed in the homes of the people in all parts of the country on the same day. If you started a publication such as the Ladies' Home Journal from Philadelphia over the country on the same day, it could be sent by freight to Chicago, to Kansas City, and to all the interior points and reach the place of destination before distributors would in any condition of circumstances permit it to be given out to the public from a news stand; in other words, newsdealers themselves would hold the magazines, if they were to be sent by mail in fast-mail cars, so that they should not be delivered too soon. They desire to put on sale in the city of San Francisco the Ladies' Home Journal on the same day that it is placed on the news stands in the city of Chicago; and if it were sent on a fast mail train, by the time you could send it on to San Francisco you could send it on a freight train to Chicago, and it would get into Chicago before the fast mail train would get to San Francisco. So, if this law can be in good faith put into execution, no one will deny that it ought to be done.

The danger of this great power being abused is the only thing which I think should make us fearful of giving the power to the Post Office Department.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Just let me conclude this sentence, and then I will yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Therefore I have offered an amendment, and it has been adopted, to the language which the Senator seeks to strike out by his motion. If this amendment is finally adopted, it will apply to the entire country, to the places where the method is still in practice and to the places where it shall be put in practice in the future. My amendment provides that no publication shall be sent by freight if such method of transportation results in unfair discrimination or in the undue delay of the delivery of such publication at its destination.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Let me first yield to the Senator from Arizona, who addressed the Chair before the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I appreciate very fully the desire—and it is creditable to him—on the part of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to solve this difficulty; but he will at once perceive that if his amendment—which I regret to say has been adopted, and I wish it now known that I want a roll-call vote on the amendment when the bill gets into the Senate—he will at once perceive that the question as to the discrimination must be solved by somebody. Manifestly it must be solved by the Postmaster General; and the Senator's amendment will result in producing the same situation which was produced in 1912. The order, the ipse dixit of the Postmaster General, of course, will not say that this is a discrimination; he will say it is not. That is the very principle which is vital in the amendment.

I object to giving any official, whoever he may be, the power to say, "This is not a discrimination"; the power to say, "Your publication may go by freight" or "Your publication may go by mail and pay a cent a pound"; or to say to another, "Because your magazine is not timely, because your news is not current, it is not a discrimination against you to send your publication by freight."

Mr. President, in the forum of conscience how can Congress pass a law which will permit one man's publication to go by mail at the rate of a cent a pound and another man's publication, which is published in the same city, to go by freight at a cent a pound? It is the discrimination to which I object.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, with much that the Senator says I agree; but in any law that we may pass, in any law that any Congress has ever passed, somebody is given power to enforce it; somebody is given a discretion. I do not believe that the Postmaster General, with this provision put into the law, would violate it intentionally; I do not believe he would be any more apt to violate that law than he would any other law; and without it, if all magazines were forwarded in mail cars, the Postmaster General could still say that this publication or that publication should not go now but should go next week. I do not believe that any publication is being discriminated against now, even without this limitation, in that part of the country where the Postmaster General has a right to send magazines and periodicals by freight.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I will yield. I assume that the Postmaster General would carry out the law in good faith. If he violates it, as in the case of the violation of any other law, he is subject to impeachment; but no administration, no President, would permit a man to retain that office who is violating the law in the way suggested. Now I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if, on the contrary, it is not true that there is now being no complaint made, nor has there been any complaint made for some time by the publishers of periodicals?

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that is true.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska one further question, and that is, if he would object to extending or enlarging the policy of sending second-class matter by freight, so as to include contract sections 1 and 4, into which second-class matter can not be sent by freight under the present policy because of the limitation of the act of 1912?

Mr. NORRIS. If section 7 remains in the bill and my amendment is finally added to it, as it is now added to it, that extension could take place under this very law. If the Senator will read section 7, he will see that it repeals the act that limited the application of the law to the two mailing divisions; so that if the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is defeated and the bill passes with section 7 in it as modified by the amendment I have offered, it will apply to the entire United States, and the Post Office Department can send by freight periodicals in those two divisions, as is now done in the other two divisions.

Mr. STERLING. I simply want to say that that is the idea I had in mind myself before the Senator rose to present his amendment. I had intended to offer a substitute for the motion of the Senator from Arizona, and this was the substitute:

That from and after the passage of this act the Post Office Department shall not extend or enlarge its present policy of sending second-class matter by freight trains, except as to routes or sections over, through, or in which such second-class matter may be sent.

It would reenact the law of 1912 as it is now, with the addition that the department might extend or enlarge the policy so as to include other sections of the country.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the law originally provided that the Postmaster General could send publications by freight. Then Congress passed a law that provided he should not forward anything by freight that he was not forwarding by freight at that particular time, and at that particular time he was carrying by freight magazines in two mailing divisions; so that he has been prohibited since that law was passed from extending the freight-carrying proposition as affecting magazines to the other two divisions. Section 7 of this bill repeals that limitation, so that if it is repealed, the original law will be unlimited, and the Postmaster General can extend the method over the entire United States.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is not unfair. The United States spends a great deal of money, which it raises by taxation, for sending these magazines through the mails. I do not object to that; I am not finding fault with that; but it costs us many millions of dollars to send them by mail, and if we can send them by freight and save millions and still get them to their places of destination just as they get there under the system of paying a higher rate and sending them on mail cars, why should we not do it?

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I ask if the Senator has taken into consideration the time that is required for freight to go to the Pacific coast from, say, Philadelphia?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LANE. How long does the Senator think it takes?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know how long; but, if this provision becomes a law, they could not send any publication from Philadelphia to San Francisco by freight if that delayed the delivery in San Francisco of the matter they were sending by freight. I understand that under the operation of the law that probably never would take place. Let us take, for example, a magazine that is as well known as any other, the Ladies' Home Journal, published in Philadelphia by the Curtis Publishing Co. That magazine goes into every post office in the United States.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator——

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator. The publishers want it delivered in San Francisco on the same day that it is delivered in Washington; the news agents there, the news agents here, and the mail subscribers all want to get it as nearly as they can on the same day all over the United States. They have a carload of that magazine to go to San Francisco. They will probably have to send that carload by mail, just the same under the law as it is now, because that is the longest delivery; but they have two carloads to deliver at Chicago; they have two carloads which they want to deliver at St. Louis; they have another carload for Omaha, another carload for Kansas City, another one for St. Paul, another one for Minneapolis, another one for Atlanta, Ga., and another one for New Orleans. They could deliver every one of those carloads by freight, and get them at their respective destinations before the publishing company desired to put the magazines into the hands of the people; in other words, they could get them to the intermediate points by freight quicker than they could get them by the fastest mail to the remotest parts of the country.

Mr. LANE. Then, the Senator would send those periodicals destined to the Pacific coast by mail?

Mr. NORRIS. I should think so; yes.

Mr. LANE. And not by freight?

Mr. NORRIS. Not by freight. In other words, the modification which has been added to the amendment specifically provides that nothing shall be sent by freight if it results in discrimination or delay in delivery at its destination. It strikes me, Mr. President, that is a fair proposition, and that none of the magazines would be delayed in delivery one minute. At the same time the Government would save millions and millions of money; and it ought to be allowed to do that, especially when we are dealing with a class of business as to the carriage of which the Government is charging much less than the actual cost of transportation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. In the question I am about to put, Mr. President, to the Senator from Nebraska it must not be assumed that I favor the present system. I think it is abominable and ought to be revised; that is to say, I do not believe in carrying second-class matter for less than cost. I believe every department of the Postal Service should be self-supporting; but I ask this question: It takes a freight train longer to run from Philadelphia to New Orleans than it takes it to run to Chicago; it takes it longer to run to San Francisco than it does to run to Chicago. Now, under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, which I understand has been adopted, would it not be entirely possible for the Postmaster General to say to the publishers of the Ladies' Home Journal, "If you want to distribute on the same day all over the country you must ship the magazines that you intend for San Francisco or New Orleans at an earlier time than you ship the magazines that you intend for Chicago or Washington"? I am not able to see that the amendment will prevent the difficulty which is thought to exist.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not see any difficulty, Mr. President. Of course, according to the distance, it takes longer to ship to Chicago, for instance, from Philadelphia than it would to ship from Philadelphia to Washington. It takes longer now. It will take longer by any method of transportation that you may devise; and the Ladies' Home Journal people now, in sending out their publications, send them on different days, so that they will get to their destination on the same day.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. That was the thought in my mind; and, therefore, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska would not restrict the Postmaster General in the use of the freight trains for second-class matter. It would not change the committee bill at all, for it would leave the Postmaster General at liberty to say to the publisher, "Ship your mail a little earlier if it is intended for distant points." That was the thought in my mind.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, that is true now.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose we repeal section 7. That will be true. We can not perform a miracle by legislation.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know that. Therefore, what change does the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska make in the situation?

Mr. NORRIS. It makes no change, excepting this, and is offered for the purpose of meeting this objection—that the law giving the Postmaster General the right to send publications by freight gives him a great discretion in the exercise of which he might, as has been claimed—and that is the reason why it is desired to repeal it—say to the publishers of the Ladies' Home Journal, for instance: "Your publication must go by freight," and say to the publishers of the Woman's Home Companion, another publication on the same line: "Yours can go by fast mail." My amendment would make it illegal for him to take that kind of a step, if he carries it out in good faith, as I think he is doing now, and as I believe every Postmaster General has done. It would not make any difference, but it takes away the possibility of wrongdoing.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. What is desired, I assume, by most if not all people, is to avoid discrimination. Everybody concedes that freight transportation is subject to serious delays and inconveniences. How, then, can you avoid a discrimination when you require one publication to go by freight and charge that publisher 1 cent a pound and you charge another published 1 cent a pound and send his publication by a superior method of transportation that is not subject to the dangers and delays that are incident to freight transportation?

In other words, in the very nature of things, how can you avoid a discrimination when you subject one man to the dangers and the delays of freight transportation and charge him a certain rate, and then send another publication by fast mail, where there is no danger or delay, and charge him the same price? How can a discrimination be avoided?

Now, mark you, if a particular magazine is required to go by freight, it must close or lock its forms considerably earlier than it would close or lock its forms if it were going by mail. Thereby, the early locking and closing of the forms renders the news matter and the other matter therein stale and uninteresting, which is the very life, the very essence, and the very vitality of all publications.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, let me answer as best I can the questions which the Senator has propounded.

In the first place, the object of the amendment is to avoid the very discrimination that the Senator says might be possible. I concede that if the Postmaster General carried out the law in good faith, and was perfectly honest about it, the amendment that I have offered and that has been agreed to would not be necessary; but the object is to meet the very objection that the Senator has made—to avoid discrimination.

Now, let me take the illustration. The Senator says that if a publication goes by freight the forms must be locked and the publication printed earlier. Let us take, again, the Ladies' Home Journal. As I understand the operation of this law, the copies of the Ladies' Home Journal that go, for instance, to San Francisco, will go by mail, on fast mail trains, across the continent. Now, you can not shorten that under existing conditions. The publication must be printed before it is sent. Assuming that to be true—and there can be no question about it—and that it is going to be sent by the fastest mail in existence, the fastest mail trains from Philadelphia to San Francisco, Seattle, and Los Angeles, the very day that part of the edition starts you can start the balance of the publication to Chicago and to these intermediate cities by freight, and get them all there before the copies destined for the Pacific coast are delivered there.

If the Postmaster General says to the publishers of the Ladies' Home Journal, "You can send your publication by fast mail everywhere; the Woman's Home Companion has to go by freight." That would be a discrimination. This amendment seeks to destroy that kind of discrimination.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the action of the Senate in 1912, when this subject was up before, and ask him how he views that line of action. At that time the Senate passed a provision that the Postmaster General could route magazines of the class dealt with here by freight at 1 cent a pound, and that all that preferred to go by regular mail could go by mail at 2 cents. Is not that the wise way to handle the subject—to charge them 2 cents by mail and 1 cent by freight?

Mr. NORRIS. That is the wise way—not, perhaps, the charge; I would not say that; but I have had in mind the fundamental idea suggested by the Senator from Georgia. We ought to have a system by which the publishers could say, "We will send this publication, or this part of the publication, by freight, and the other part by fast mail"—let them make the selection and have a different charge. I do not say that the price ought to be 1 cent and 2 cents, but I favor a different charge to the publishers for the different kinds of service. That would be the best way. Even with this law, amended as I have suggested, it is by no means, in my judgment, a model law. The model law would be to permit, in some cases, weekly papers and weekly publications to go by freight, and to charge them a less rate for transportation when they went by freight. That would be the model way.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to read to him the amendment which the Senate passed in 1912, or would it interfere with his remarks?

Mr. NORRIS. It would not interfere, although I am about to conclude. I have no objection to the Senator reading it now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (reading)—

Provided, That publications admitted to the mails as second-class matter, published biweekly or less frequently, may be carried wholly or partly in fast freight trains, whenever deemed practicable by the Postmaster General, and at the option of the publishers thereof, and the transportation charges therefor may be paid out of the appropriation for transportation by railroad routes at rates not exceeding the usual freight rates; and on and after January 1, 1913, the rate of postage on such second-class mail matter as may be transported wholly or partly in fast freight trains shall be 1 cent for each pound or fraction of a pound, and the rate of postage on other second-class mail matter, published biweekly or less frequently, transported in the regular mail trains at the option of the publishers thereof, and where the transportation of the same wholly or partly in fast freight trains is deemed practicable by the Postmaster General, shall be 2 cents for each pound or fraction of a pound.

In other words, for the fast mail train transportation the charge was made 2 cents a pound; the freight transportation was fixed at 1 cent a pound, and the publishers had their option as to which of the two they should take. Now, that seems to me to be the fair way and moving a little toward justice to the Government. We all know that the present price does not nearly pay the cost to the Government of carrying magazines through the mail.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I think that system is right. I do not know whether the charges are right or not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, Mr. President, I do not claim that the charges are nearly enough. The charges will not begin to cover the cost to the Government, even at 2 cents.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I presume that is true, on the average.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But such a provision will help.

Mr. NORRIS. But, Mr. President, in my judgment—this has not anything particularly to do with this amendment, and I did not intend to go into this subject, but the suggestion of the Senator has brought it out—in my judgment, the second-class mail matter ought to be carried according to a system in which distance would be taken into consideration as well as weight. It is a perfectly practical proposition and could be easily put into operation. It ought to be worked out on the zone system.

At present we carry a carload of magazines from New York to San Francisco for the same price that we charge for carrying a carload of the same magazines from New York to Philadelphia. The daily papers could be put on that kind of a basis very easily. Then, in addition to that, there ought to be a system by which the mails should go on different kinds of trains—freight trains and fast mail trains. The charge ought to be different, and the publisher ought to be permitted to select his method of transportation and be charged accordingly; but that is not before us now. It is something, it seems to me, that ought to be worked out and ought to be adopted.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, somewhat of a remarkable situation is presented here to-day. We find a section of the Post Office appropriation bill—to wit, section 7—put in in the House of Representatives without objection, reported by the unanimous vote of the House committee, with no one appearing before that committee to oppose the proposition, passing the House of Representatives in the same way, without opposition, coming to the Senate committee, and there, although we gave ample opportunity, full opportunity, for hearing to all persons interested in the bill and all who desired to be heard for or against any of its provisions, not a single voice was raised before that committee in opposition to this section, although we had hearings that lasted through weeks, and I am not sure but that they lasted through months even.

The Post Office bill reaches this floor; then, for the first time, the statement is made that in some vague, unknown, indefinite sort of a way this proposition involves the freedom of the press. I think I can demonstrate for the committee and for the department that no proposition of that kind is involved. A proposition that a certain portion of the press may continue to receive an unnecessarily expensive kind of service at one-eighth or less than one-eighth of its cost, when a different service that costs a little bit less would work just as well for these people, is the real issue in this matter.

Before I discuss it, I wish to call attention to the fact that in the International News Service dispatches from Washington under date of May 29 last, regarding section 7 of the pending Post Office appropriation bill, the following statement is attributed to me:

The plea set forth from Postmaster General Burleson for passage of the free-speech rider was made known late to-night by Senator THOMAS W. HARDWICK of Georgia. He said:

"The Post Office Department has reported that it is running $80,000,000 a year behind. It proposes to cut down this deficit by rerouting magazines of certain kinds by transferring their shipment from mail trains to fast freight trains.

"This provision must go through this year in order to cut a standing deficit."

That is the end of the quotation. As far as the alleged interview with me is concerned it ends there. The article goes on:

Disclosure of a state of insolvency in the Post Office Department was a shock to most friends of the administration. In his report of 1913 Postmaster General Burleson said:

"The Postal Service is now for the first time since 1883 self-supporting. There is an actual surplus of $3,841,906."

Now, again, quoting from the News Service article:

Mr. Burleson's administration of the Post Office Department has come in for much criticism by Members of Congress. It is probable that an inquiry will be made into the accumulation of such an enormous deficit in 1915–16, when the department three years ago showed a substantial surplus.

The remainder of the dispatch embodies the assertions that "the enactment of section 7 will be one of the boldest attempts to curb free speech ever planned by politicians," that "the Postmaster General would be given arbitrary power from which there is no appeal in the matter of routing magazines, periodicals, and newspapers," that "he may order an unfriendly publication forwarded by freight, while a friendly publication may be allowed the use of the regular mail," that "this will ruin the business of the concern discriminated against and serve as a powerful political weapon in the hands of the Postmaster General."

This dispatch, which has been published in various newspapers throughout the country, so grossly misrepresents the purpose and possibilities of the section referred to that I regard it as imperative that I should make a clear and definite statement on this subject, so that whatever erroneous impressions may have been created by the statements attributed to me, as well as by the other assertions in the dispatch, may be eradicated.

The figure of $80,000,000, represented by the dispatch as the deficit in the postal finances, is the estimated loss to the Postal Service, as I estimated it then, roughly and roundly, from handling second-class mail under the present system. It is not a deficit.

The Postal Service turned into the Treasury for the fiscal year 1913 an actual surplus of $3,800,000, for 1914 an actual surplus of $3,500,000, and although for the fiscal year ending 1915 a comparatively large deficit—$11,000,000—resulted from the disturbed business conditions in this country as a result of the European war, an analysis of the financial situation in the Postal Service at this time indicates that another large surplus will be turned into the Treasury for the fiscal year 1916.

These surpluses represent the net amount of revenues above expenses for the entire Postal Service.

The department has estimated, after thorough investigation and analysis, that the cost of transporting and handling second-class matter is approximately 8.27 cents a pound. The revenue received from this class of mail is approximately 1.14 cents a pound.

In other words, the Hughes Commission in 1911, as I understand it, fixed 1.14 cents a pound as the amount of revenue from handling this second-class mail matter.

The cost figure is arrived at by adding to the cost figure of 5.5 cents a pound, determined by the Hughes Commission in 1911, the cost of handling in post offices and other unassigned miscellaneous expenses not considered by the Hughes Commission. For the fiscal year 1915, the total weight of the mailings was 1,109,283,795 pounds, and the paid-at-the-pound-rate matter brought in a revenue of $10,471,442. If the cost figure of the Hughes Commission be taken as a basis, the cost of handling this mail for the fiscal year 1915 would be $61,010,178, or a loss of $50,539,275. Taking the department's figure of 8.27 cents as representing the cost per pound of transporting and handling, the total cost for 1915 would be $91,737,934, which, minus the revenue of $10,471,442, would leave a loss of $81,266,491 on this class of mail.

Let me pause here, Mr. President, from reading this statement to say that my judgment is that instead of the freedom of the press being involved, the real question at issue is a graft of the press, to get its mail matter transported and handled at less than one-eighth of what it costs the Government and not to consent to even a comparatively trifling economy, that hurts none of them, and, would reduce the losses of the Government.

Mr. President, the truth about this matter is we are losing over $81,000,000 a year on transporting and handling second-class mail matter alone; and if that mail matter were made to pay the cost of its transportation, or anything like it, I say to the Senate of the United States and to the people of this country we could give them 1-cent postage overnight.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. The statement the Senator has just made is very interesting. Now, may I ask why it is that the committee or some one has not brought forward a proposition of the kind which is referred to by the Senator?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have been on the committee myself for only a very short time, but, speaking for the committee, I understand that it has been done repeatedly. The truth is that the political power of these newspapers and magazines is so great that no legislative body has yet dared to do what ought to be done about this matter.

Now, let me cite to Senators some facts in connection with the statement I have just made, and upon which I base that statement. During the calendar year 1915 the Post Office Department issued to the postmasters of the United States 2-cent stamps and 2-cent stamped envelopes to the value of $159,395,250.76. There were almost $160,000,000, in round numbers, of 2-cent stamps and 2-cent stamped envelopes sold in the year 1915. Yet, according to the estimate of the department, we lost during the fiscal year 1915 over $81,000,000 on second-class mail matter alone.

These figures carry their own weight. If this branch of the service were made self-sustaining, we would save over $80,000,000, and, instead of $160,000,000 worth of 2-cent postage stamps and 2-cent stamped envelopes being sold, we could furnish the same postage stamps and the same stamped envelopes for 1 cent apiece and give the people of the United States a 1-cent postage rate throughout this Republic; and it would take only $80,000,000 to do that, when we are losing eighty-one and a half million dollars, in round numbers, on the other proposition.

There is nothing new whatever about this loss, which was figured by the Hughes commission in 1911 as amounting to $60,000,000. The increase since is due solely to the increase since 1911 in the volume of this class of mail handled.

From the foregoing statements it will be clearly seen that, despite this enormous loss, whether the sixty or eighty million dollar figure be accepted as representing the loss, the Postal Service as a whole has been conducted by the present administration in a self-supporting manner.

Referring again to the contents of the news dispatch, the purpose of section 7 is not to eliminate a deficit in the postal finances, because no deficit exists at this time. Its purpose is to enable the Postmaster General to handle the question of transporting bulk shipments of second-class mail in an intelligent and businesslike way. The potentialities of section 7 are now being realized in the southern and middle western sections of the country. There is no evidence that the Postmaster General has abused this power in these sections of the country, nor that the freight shipments of bulk mailings of second-class matter have impaired the service in any way. The department, however, has presented evidence that, notwithstanding the fact that perfectly satisfactory service has been accorded to second-class mail in these sections of the country, it has been possible to save to the Government approximately one and one-half millions of dollars annually in the cost of transportation. Section 7 will merely repeal the provisions of the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913, which prohibited the Postmaster General from extending beyond the sections of the country referred to the policy of sending second-class matter by freight trains.

In two out of the four mailing divisions of the country, with the press already gagged, according to my friend from Arizona, in two out of four of these mailing divisions, the Postmaster General already has this arbitrary, this despotic, this terrible power, and yet I ask the Senator from Arizona or any other Senator on either side of this Chamber to cite a single specific case since this administration began and Mr. Burleson has been Postmaster General where there has been any serious complaint that there was any misadministration of this section in the two mail sections in which it has been in force. Unless they can do that I do not think they can impress either upon the country or the Senate the urgency of the danger to which they advert or the seriousness of the peril which they fear.

If it has been in force in practically half of the United States during the three years of this administration, and if during all that time every one of these publishers sat silent while the House committee considered this proposition, sat silent while the House of Representatives considered it, sat silent while the Senate committee considered it, and no one has raised his voice to object, has raised his voice to complain of unfair discrimination, then I say it is a far-fetched argument that there is any danger of press gagging or abuse of power in the other two mailing divisions, if section 7 remains in the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator. I yield to any Senator who can state a case of unjust treatment in the administration of this provision.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator's argument is proceeding on the hypothesis that you are alive to-day, and therefore you need not fear that you will ever die.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not yield to the Senator for an argument. If he knows of any facts about this matter, I would like to hear them from him, or from any Senator. Of argument we have enough.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator assert for a moment that the press of the country are in favor of section 7.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not care whether they are or not. It comes in here and we are here——

Mr. ASHURST. We are here to do justice.

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly.

Mr. ASHURST. And we are not doing justice when we charge one man a cent a pound on a publication by freight and his competitor pays a cent a pound by mail.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask for facts. I am sorry that all I can get is declamation. I ask for instances. Can anyone put his hand on a single publisher who during these years when this system has been in force in half of the United States has inveighed against it or appears to have been wronged in the slightest? If you can not do it, I do not think we need fear your prophesies very much about the other half of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why does the Senator from Georgia limit his inquiries to the last three years?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will tell the Senator why. I want to be frank and candid with him about that. There was a great deal of trouble about the Review of Reviews case. That happened in the last administration, and while this effort was in its inception, and I know, of course, any Senator can cite that. I am not trying to make a partisan question out of it, but the proposal is for the coming fiscal year to vest the Postmaster General and the present administration with this power, and I do submit to the Senate and I do submit to the country that for three years they have had this power over all the publishers of the United States and through one-half of the mailing area of the country, and nobody has made any serious complaint or any complaint that was not reasonably and speedily adjusted. As I understand the facts, I do not think the Senate ought to be very much impressed with all these imaginary fears and theoretical perils that Senators seem to be so much concerned about.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is in the nature of general legislation, no matter where it is found. It happens to be in an appropriation bill, but it is in all its characteristics general legislation. Now, the Senator from Georgia will not assert that the discretion formerly lodged in the Postmaster General has not been abused. The present Postmaster General may not have abused it, because he has not had a very wide opportunity to abuse it, for the statute that is now sought to be repealed has been in effect during the term of his office. If the Senator from Georgia wants to broaden the inquiry and look into the original application of the blue-tag system, I think he could be supplied with several instances of injustice and unfairness.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly, regardless of the party in power or who was Postmaster General when the first system came in. I know it created a great deal of prejudice at first. I know that there were many complaints while the system was being adjusted and the department was working out the details. While it was determining the general principles on which it rests, while it was making general classifications, which must be established in order to do justice to all men, there were troubles, and there were some cases, notably the one to which I referred under Postmaster General Hitchcock, the case of the Review of Reviews.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. In 1910 the House committee held hearings for the purpose of increasing the rate on second-class mail matter, and the publishers came before the House committee in opposition to the increase in postage, and they themselves submitted the plan of allowing some of the publications to go by fast freight wherever it could be done without any injustice. Therefore, the suggestion came first from them. In 1911 Postmaster General Hitchcock inaugurated the plan. In 1912 a number of them came before the Senate committee and objected to the plan, which resulted in the limitation placed in the appropriation act of that year and which is now sought to be repealed. But since then and since they have adjusted their date of publication to the plan there has been practically no complaint.

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly. That is the idea I am trying to convey to the Senate. As soon as we established the principles on which it ought to work, as soon as we established the general classifications which ought to be made in justice both to the Government and the publishers, there has been no complaint.

I repeat the query I made to the Senate just now. If it can operate for the three past years in two out of the four mailing divisions of the United States without any serious complaint from any man, and no one can specify where there has been any injustice done or even claimed, why should we pay any attention to the vain imaginings of Senators that some wrong may possibly come? That is always true in the administration of law. No law was ever so good that an incorrect, corrupt, and unjust or discriminatory administration of it might not make it odious.

Mr. President, so much for that phase of the question. I do not want the Senate to misunderstand the amount of economy involved in this proposition. It is not as great as I should like to see it in order to make a fight that appears to be as serious as this one. It is estimated by the department, and I am going to have the letter read in just a minute, and then I must close, because we are anxious to finish this bill, that the use of the system in two out of the four divisions of the country in which it has been used during the past three years has resulted in a saving to the Government of about four millions and a half dollars a year, without any loss or hurt or inconvenience to anyone. The department estimates that if section 7 remains in the bill, and the Postmaster General is allowed to exercise his discretion in this matter, it can save some three or four million dollars a year. The amount is not as great as some Senators have heard it estimated or stated. But, Senators, if we are losing eighty-one and a half million dollars a year on this class of mail matter, and if the people agree, and Senators agree, as I know they must, that if we are ever to arrive at 1-cent postage for the people of this Republic, it will be necessary to effect a great deal of the necessary saving here, then why should we hesitate to save, instead of only one and a half million dollars a year on this proposition, three or four million dollars a year for the Government, for the department, and for the people of the country?

Senators, we are in this predicament about this matter: If the Senator from Arizona and those who think like he does are right, then their proposition only goes half far enough. If the great possibilities for harm or for discrimination for the exercise of arbitrary and despotic power over the press lurks in this matter that they claim lurks in it, then it ought not to exist in half the United States. It ought not to be in force in the southern and western sections of this Republic any more than in the northern and the eastern sections of the Republic. We ought not to be treated in different ways about it, part of us made fish and the balance of us made fowl. If it is a good thing for my section and for the middle western section, it is a good thing for the balance of this country; and if it is a bad thing for us, it is a bad thing for the balance of the country.

So, after all, the law and practice ought to be all one way or all the other. It ought all to be that the Postmaster General, throughout this country, in every mailing division, shall be allowed to exercise the wise and businesslike discretion in this matter that he now exercises in two of the four mail divisions of the country.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask a question for information. The Senator has stated that there is a saving of one million and a half dollars.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; by opening this system in two out of the four divisions.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In two out of the four divisions. What is the estimate as to what the saving will be if extended to all four divisions.

Mr. HARDWICK. Between three and four million dollars a year.

Unless this system is continued the publishers on short hauls can save money by electing to use the freight and mail facilities of the common carriers, why should they be allowed to give us the worst of it on the long hauls and put their most expensive business on us and pile up this deficit that keeps our people away from 1-cent postage? Mr. President, they make us take the loss whenever they care to do so on the long hauls and get it done cheaper on the short hauls by using other means of transportation.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator happen to have any figures showing approximately the percentage that is now sent voluntarily by freight and express?

Mr. HARDWICK. I am afraid I can not give that to the Senator. I have made no extended investigation of that question, but I have examined it to some extent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Alabama, who says he can furnish the figures on that point.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, in response to the query of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], I wish to say that I have had this table prepared on this question. The cost of handling second-class mail matter in the fast mail trains per ton-mile is 5.21 cents, and the cost by freight under the arrangement by which it is sent is 1.51 cents per ton-mile.

I desire to say, Mr. President, while I have this matter before me, that the difference is 3.70 cents per ton-mile.

Mr. CLAPP. What I wanted to know—possibly the Senator from Alabama has the data—was approximately what percentage of such mail matter the publishers voluntarily send by freight under existing conditions?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not think that I could give the Senator from Minnesota the information as to what percentage is so sent voluntarily at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the statement which the Senator from Alabama has made, it appears that it costs three times as much to send this matter by mail as it does by freight.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have just given the Senator the figures.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish the Senator would kindly restate them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The cost for such mail matter sent by fast mail is 5.21 cents per ton-mile and by fast freight it is 1.51 cents per ton-mile.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is about three times as much.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is a little more than three times as much.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, just a moment more and I shall have finished, so far as my presentation of this matter is concerned.

I approached this subject absolutely impartially. For certain reasons, I do not favor giving the Post Office Department any undue amount of administrative discretion. I have not thought, even in this administration, that on every occasion and about every matter the department had exercised discretion wisely. So I approached this matter with an entirely open mind, when I began its investigation.

I realize, Mr. President, as well as any Senator on this floor realizes—even as well as my friend from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] realizes—the importance of a free and unmuzzled press. I would be as loath to join in any effort to really muzzle the press, to really treat any of its members unfairly, whether their publications are published daily, weekly, or monthly, as would any Senator on the floor.

I fully realize the force, the soundness, and the wisdom of that great governmental policy which leads us to be extremely liberal toward these agencies for the distribution of intelligence throughout the Republic and among its people. I am willing to go as far as any Senator on either side of this Chamber ought to go upon that question. I am willing to be generous with them, because I know the sound policy involved in encouraging the press, in providing for the wide circulation of these great publications. I realize how necessary it is that we should not unduly hamper them; but I tell the Senate that, in my judgment, from what study I have been able to make of this question, second-class mail matter is not paying one tithe of what it ought to pay, even when due allowance is made for that consideration. Our people have advanced in intelligence; they are better read and better informed than many public men credit them with being. It is no longer a kindergarten proposition with any of them in any State or in any section of the Republic; but I do think the time has come when the people who write and mail letters and pay postage ought not to have quite so much of this burden of the price of transporting and handling the mail matter of the various newspaper and magazine publications on their shoulders. I think the time has come when we ought at least to divide that cost up. I think if we would retrieve one-half of the amount of money that we are losing on second-class mail matter possibly other economies in other branches of the Postal Service and other policies could be devised and adopted which would have the effect of enabling us finally to give to the people of this country 1-cent postage. But we shall never arrive at that goal, which I am so anxious to reach, unless we handle this second-class mail matter proposition and handle it rather drastically at that.

I do not care now to say anything more, but in justice to the department I think that probably there are two letters which I ought to ask to have read by the Secretary in connection with the matter. I ask that the Secretary read in my time the letters which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 1, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR HARDWICK: Referring again to your letter of the 30th ultimo, I have to say the department has not made any thorough and exhaustive estimate upon the subject of the difference between the estimated cost of transporting and handling second-class mail matter and the revenue received therefrom since the presentation of the matter to the Hughes Commission in the fall of 1911. At that time the cost of transporting and handling second-class mail matter was placed at approximately 8.27 cents a pound and the revenue received at approximately 1.14 cents a pound. The Hughes Commission made a finding that the cost of transporting and handling second-class mail matter known as paid-at-the-pound rate was approximately 5.5 cents a pound, exclusive of the cost of the handling in post offices and also the apportionment of certain unassigned miscellaneous expenses.

The Third Assistant Postmaster General reported for the fiscal year 1915 that the total weight of the mailings amounted to 1,109,285,785 pounds, and that the paid-at-the-pound-rate matter yielded a revenue of $10,471,442.74. If the finding of the Hughes Commission be taken as the basis, the cost of handling the volume above mentioned for the fiscal year 1915 would be $61,010,718.17. Subtracting the revenue received would leave a deficiency of $50,539,275.43. This, however, does not include any cost of handling in post offices or any portion of unassigned miscellaneous expenses.

If the department's estimate, which is above mentioned, be taken and applied to the weight above mentioned, the total cost of transportation and handling would be $91,737,934.41. Subtracting the revenue above mentioned would leave a deficiency of $81,266,491.67.

The difference between the deficiencies based on the finding of the Hughes Commission and on the estimate of the department is due to the fact that the former does not take into account the cost of the handling in the post offices or any portion of unassigned miscellaneous expenses chargeable to this matter.

The plan of transporting periodicals not containing news matter, published less frequently than weekly, in freight trains is now confined to the second and third contract sections. That is to say, the southern and middle western sections of the country. As at present in operation it enables the department to effect a saving of nearly $1,500,000 annually in the cost of transporting the matter, without subjecting publishers to any injury or inconvenience. If the limitation on the extension of the system is removed, as proposed in the pending bill, the department will be enabled to extend the plan, wherever practicable, to the remaining contract sections—the first and the fourth—and thereby effect further large savings in transportation expenses.

Yours, very truly,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 1, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR HARDWICK: In connection with my letter of to-day, replying to the inquiries contained in your letter of the 30th ultimo, I am transmitting herewith a memorandum containing data on the subject of the transmission by freight of certain second-class mail matter which may be of interest to you in connection with the pending Post Office bill.

Yours, very truly,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

DATA ON SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER TRANSPORTED BY FREIGHT ("BLUE-TAG" MAIL).

September 1, 1911, the department inaugurated a plan for the transportion of certain second-class publications issued less frequently than weekly between certain large centers in the third-contract section in fast freight trains instead of the regular mail trains. On July 1, 1912, the plan was extended to embrace the second-contract section. Congress in the appropriation act of August 24, 1912, forbade the extension or enlargement of the plan. The points between which such transportation is now being performed are as follows:

Buffalo, N. Y., to Chicago, Ill.
Buffalo, N. Y., to Union Pacific Transfer, Iowa.
Buffalo, N. Y., to St. Louis, Mo.
Buffalo, N. Y., to St. Paul, Minn.
Buffalo, N. Y., to Cincinnati, Ohio.
Pittsburgh, Pa., to Chicago, Ill.
Pittsburgh, Pa., to Union Pacific Transfer, Iowa.
Pittsburgh, Pa., to St. Louis, Mo.
Pittsburgh, Pa., to Kansas City, Mo.
Pittsburgh, Pa., to St. Paul, Minn.
Pittsburgh, Pa., to Cincinnati, Ohio.

PERIODICAL SECOND-CLASS MAIL.

Chicago, Ill., to Union Pacific Transfer, Iowa.
Chicago, Ill., to St. Paul, Minn.
Chicago, Ill., to Kansas City, Mo.
Chicago, Ill., to St. Louis, Mo.
Chicago, Ill., to Buffalo, N. Y.
Chicago, Ill., to Pittsburgh, Pa.
Chicago, Ill., to Cincinnati, Ohio.
Springfield, Ohio, to Buffalo, N. Y.
Springfield, Ohio, to Chicago, Ill.
Springfield, Ohio, to Pittsburgh, Pa.
Springfield, Ohio, to St. Louis, Mo.
Springfield, Ohio, to Kansas City, Mo.
Springfield, Ohio, to Union Pacific Transfer, Iowa.
Springfield, Ohio, to St. Paul, Minn.
Canton, Ohio, to Chicago, Ill.
St. Louis, Mo., to Kansas City, Mo.
Kansas City, Mo., to Chicago, Ill.
Cincinnati, Ohio, to Atlanta, Ga.
Cincinnati, Ohio, to Chattanooga, Tenn.
Washington, D. C., to Atlanta, Ga.

CONDUCT OF SERVICE.

The periodical mails handled in fast freight trains comprise those published less frequently than weekly, the contents of which are of such a nature that regular mail train handling is not essential or which by earlier delivery to the post office of origin could be delivered at practically the same time as theretofore. These mails are handled in regular mails to the point of freight shipment, there transferred to freight cars. On arrival at terminus of freight route they again enter the regular mails for carriage to destination and delivery. The delay resulting ranges from two to five days, according to the route, and the service is regular and satisfactory.

METHOD OF PAYMENT.

There being no specific appropriation for this character of transportation, a plan was devised for payment out of the appropriation for railroad transportation, by establishing lap routes between the points covered by the freight shipments, weighing the mails carried by freight for the statutory period, and ascertaining the cost of transporting such weight upon the regular railroad routes at the lap rates. This cost then becomes a credit upon the lap route, the amount of which credit may not be exceeded in making payments for freight shipments. This plan was approved by the comptroller.

EXTENT OF SERVICE.

The following table gives the operation of this service since its inception:

Fiscal year.	Number of carloads transported.	Weight of mails transported.
		Pounds.
1912 (10 months)	3,645	104,405,332
1913	5,045	140,216,437
1914	4,963	139,346,460
1915	4,853	127,205,138
Total	18,496	[1]511,173,367

[1]255,586 tons.

The reduction in volume of business shown in 1914 and 1915 was partly due to changes made in the list of periodicals moved by freight and partly by other causes.

SAVING EFFECTED.

The saving effected by this method of transportation is that represented by the difference between the actual cost by freight and the cost of transportation had the mails involved been handled in the regular mail trains, represented by the credit referred to in preceding paragraph. The savings accomplished since the inauguration of the plan are as follows:

Fiscal year.	Cost of freight transportation.	Cost at regular rates.	Difference.
1912 (10 months)	$478,195.01	$1,686,640.27	$1,308,445.26
1913	703,904.37	2,194,918.22	1,491,013.85
1914	706,154.33	2,133,586.39	1,427,432.06
1915	651,411.13	2,072,399.56	1,420,988.43
Total	2,539,664.84	8,087,544.44	5,547,879.60

TON-MILE COST.

A computation of the ton-mile cost of transportation of periodical mails by fast freight service produces the following result:

Fiscal year 1914.

Contract section.	Number of cars handled.	Weight carried.	Cost.	Ton-miles.	Ton-mile cost.
		Pounds.			Cents.
Third	4,572	129,775,308	$603,085.80	40,634,684	1.48
Second	391	10,171,152	103,068.53	2,925,693	3.52
Total	4,963	139,346,460	706,154.33	43,560,377	[1]1.62

[1]Average cost per ton-mile for all shipments.

Fiscal year 1915.

Contract section.	Number of cars handled.	Weight carried.	Cost.	Ton-miles.	Ton-mile cost.
		Pounds.			Cents.
Third	4,374	117,827,116	$556,173.25	36,768,720	1.51
Second	469	9,378,022	95,193.35	2,713,944	3.51
Total	4,843	127,205,138	651,366.60	39,482,664	[1]1.65

[1]Average cost per ton-mile for all shipments.

The greater ton-mile cost in the second contract section is due to the higher classification on such matter in southern classification territory, first-class rates only being obtainable.

BLUE-TAG TERMINALS.

Coincident with the inauguration of the freight shipments of periodical mails, terminal railway post offices were established at the termini of the freight routes, in which this class of mail was distributed. This distribution was performed during the time the mails were awaiting dispatch and resulted in material relief to many of the trunk lines, with large saving in car pay and cost of distribution.

PUBLICATIONS BLUE TAGGED.

The department includes in the freight service such publications not containing news features as are issued less frequently than weekly, except trade and technical papers and fraternal publications. The trade papers were excepted from the slower movement on account of the current market reports and similar matter contained therein. The fraternal issues were excepted as they serve, in many cases, as the only notice of assessment to members, and it was represented that delay in delivery of the papers, with consequent delay in payment of the assessment, might cause the delinquent member to be dropped from the association.

BLUE-TAG SYSTEM SUSTAINED BY COURT.

The right of the Postmaster General to thus discriminate in the movement of second-class matter was challenged by the Review of Reviews Co., which sought to enjoin the Postmaster General from including its publication with those given the slower movement. The court, in denying the motion for an injunction, held that the order of the Postmaster General requiring the publication to be transmitted by freight was a reasonable one, and that it was intended to proportion the cost of the service to the Government more nearly to the charge it makes (192 Fed., 359).

Mr. ASHURST obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me for a moment to ask a question?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if the passage of section 7 would in any way change the present status or make it possible to change the present status of the International Musician?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does not. That publication now goes by fast freight.

Mr. REED. So that, if section 7 is enacted, this publication will still continue to go by fast freight, unless the Postmaster General sees fit, of his own volition, to change that?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, in his discretion, the Postmaster General may send it by mail, but the provision does not affect the status of that publication at all. I have looked that matter up and am familiar with it.

Mr. REED. I thank the chairman of the committee for the information.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have listened with more than usual interest and pleasure to the very able speech of the distinguished junior Senator from the State of Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. The desire on his part to economize in the revenue of the Government and the desire to retrench are impulses creditable to him in the last degree. I am not a cynic, and I trust I will never get to that age when I become cynical, but I saw this morning a strange thing, a remarkable and peculiar thing—loud talk for economy and a charge that the press of the country was attempting to put over a graft, just after the Senate had put over a graft to the tune of $20,000,000 in the river and harbor bill. What a beautiful status of affairs! Stick our hands into the Public Treasury up to the elbows and take out $20,000,000——

Mr. HARDWICK rose.

Mr. ASHURST. I decline to yield. We take out $20,000,000, and then we will make up that deficit by depriving the American people of equal opportunities to acquire reading matter. Is not that a beautiful record? Mr. President, there is just as much foundation in my charge of graft in the river and harbor bill as there is foundation for the charge of the Senator from Georgia that there is graft on the part of the press.

I have never been a favorite among the newspapers. I am a candidate for the Senate in Arizona to-day, and I seriously doubt if more than one or two daily papers in that State want to see me elected; but, Mr. President, the fact that a paper criticizes me does not make me wish to gag that paper. It is far better that my political ambitions should be sunk and subordinated and the political aspirations of every other Senator sunk and subordinated rather than that an American principle of a free press should be violated.

Mr. President, I notice that these economists, whenever it becomes necessary to save dollars, always resort either to the schools or the newspapers; they always resort first to that which happens to affect the life and the vitality of the American people.

Mr. President, we lose $80,000,000 in the transportation of second-class mail matter. Has the Senate reached the situation where all principles are to be tried by a balance sheet? Is there nothing else in this Nation except money? We lose money by our Army; we do not get any cash dividends out of the Army, but we get protection to the institutions and the people of America. We do not get any dividends out of our Navy; the Navy does not pay dividends. Senators look for dividends. The dividends from the Navy are the protection to our shores against foreign invasion. Senators look for dividends possibly from the schools. We get no cash dividends from our schools. Our dividends, Mr. President, are an informed and learned public opinion; and a public opinion that is not informed is deleterious to a free Republic. Why, Mr. President, I presume the next Congress will say, "If we will just abolish the county-free circulation of newspapers, we will save another million dollars." One by one we take these steps; one by one we encroach upon these institutions that make up the very life of the Republic.

So, Mr. President, after having gone into the Treasury and dished out $20,000,000 excess on a river and harbor bill, we hear this appeal for economy. I like to hear it; it is music to my ears; but let us not economize by striking at equality of dissemination of magazines.

Mr. President, it has been stated by the distinguished Senator from Georgia that no complaints have been made under the present administration. Possibly the Senator did not hear my remarks the other day. I do not blame him; they were tedious; but I said at the outset that I had no charges to make against the former Postmaster General. He is not a public official. He can not come in on the floor of the Senate and defend himself. I also stated that I had no fear that the present Postmaster General would arbitrarily or unjustly use the blue tag. I stated that no well-informed person whose opinions were worth while honestly feared that Postmaster General Burleson would try to hamper or cripple any magazine; but I also said that we do not know what may come in the future. The passions that are stirred up in men over politics are very fierce, and in the long future we do not know but that some man might be placed in the office of Postmaster General who, for revenge upon a periodical and for the purpose of dislocating its avenues of reaching its subscribers, would blue tag a magazine and thereby cause it great loss and damage and, possibly, bankruptcy.

Mr. President, the Democrats, I presume, in the coming campaign will not only make the woods but the welkin ring by their loud speeches about "equal rights to all and special privileges to none." Why, Mr. President, from 10,000 stumps and 10,000 platforms they will say that that principle of equal rights is the life of the party—"equal rights to all and special privileges to none." The campaign is yet young. Are we going to start out in the campaign by declaring that, so far as newspapers and magazines are concerned, we disregard that principle and that magazine A, published in New York, may go by mail at 1 cent a pound, but magazine B, also published in New York, shall go by freight at the same rate? Is that not a beautiful exemplification of the principle of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none"?

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I decline to yield, Mr. President.

Mr. HUSTING. I was going to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. ASHURST. I decline to yield just now. I yielded the other day; I took the floor at 5 o'clock and I yielded, I think, some twenty-five or thirty times. I do not propose to have my speech interrupted and broken up.

Mr. President, I regret the statement of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] that this is "a graft of the press, for the press, and by the press." I am not a special pleader for the press, for it certainly has never treated me generously—possibly it has treated me justly—but God save the American people when the galleries are closed to representatives of the press! I believe the fact that our appropriations are only a billion and a half instead of five billion is because the press keeps the country informed as to what we do here. I say that the assertion that this is a graft for the press and by the press and in their behalf and behoof is not warranted. It is an ungenerous assertion. It is an unjust assertion.

Mr. President, it must not be forgotten that if section 7 is not stricken from the bill the present Postmaster General and future Postmasters General will have the power to route second-class mail matter on their own ipse dixit, and there is no appeal from it. However unjust, however arbitrary, however oppressive the order may be, there is no appeal to any judicial tribunal. I cited the other day the case of the Review of Reviews against Hitchcock, wherein the court states, "We assume that irreparable injury will be done, but the only remedy is by impeachment of the Postmaster General if he does wrong." So, Mr. President, are we going to say that we shall give to an individual the power to say that a great magazine, with numerous subscribers, with numerous and opulent advertisers, subsidized by wealthy men, subsidized by influential men, advocating, we will say, the cause of special interests, may go by mail at 1 cent per pound, but that we are going to pass a bill which will permit the same Postmaster General to say that the magazine with few advertisers, with no opulent friends, championing perhaps an unpopular cause, shall go by freight at 1 cent a pound? It is the discrimination to which I object.

Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia rather tried to make some Senators, and I think the Senator in his able way did make some Senators, believe that not much damage was done in 1911 and 1912 by virtue of the blue tag. The Senator's very able and persuasive speech, I have no doubt, led some Senators to believe that it was just a sort of a ripple on the waters; that there really was no objection. Mr. President, the blue-tag order in 1911 caused a great volume of popular indignation. Many magazine owners were injured, some of them irreparably injured. As an illustration of the unjust, the arbitrary methods that were pursued, and the injuries that were occasioned, I will have read again the statement I had read last Friday, which is only one of numerous cases that I might cite; but this one will suffice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATEMENT OF W. D. BROWN, EDITOR OF THE R. F. D. NEWS.

In the late fall of 1911 the R. F. D. News was put under a "blue-tag" order. My paper at that time was a monthly and was issued on the first day of each month. The December, 1911, issue, which was put in the mails on the 1st day of December, 1911, did not reach my subscribers in Illinois until about the 25th of December, 1911. This was caused by my mail being delayed at Pittsburgh. The papers were forwarded from Washington to Pittsburgh by mail train and there thrown out and held until a solid carload of mail to go by freight toward the West was accumulated. This resulted in the delay above mentioned.

This unusual delay necessitated my changing the periods of publication of the R. F. D. News from a monthly to a weekly, and this resulted in a net loss of $5,000 in advertising contracts by the R. F. D. News during the first year of the change. My contracts for 1912 had all been made up and signed for a monthly issue of twelve numbers, but after the change it was necessary for me to carry the same advertising 52 times in my weekly issue without any additional pay. The R. F. D. News is now a weekly.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this is a progressive age in the mechanical, the physical sciences, the arts, and in legislation. Why take now a backward step? Why do anything that will hamper the circulation, upon equal terms, of papers and magazines?

Senators have said, and conscientiously said, that certain publications were not timely; that certain publications had in them matter that was not timely or current and therefore that the Postmaster General, by retaining section 7, should blue tag and send by freight those that were not timely. Mr. President, that searches the very vitals of the principles of a free press, because what you say is not timely, to others, to a large number of people, may be current news, and may be timely.

Take what we read in our very cloakrooms. We see one Senator reading one article, and another Senator disregarding that and reading another article in a newspaper or magazine. What one Senator believes to be timely, another does not. When you say to any official that he may say what is timely, then you have set up a censorship of the press; and no political party in this country will survive the single act of setting up a censorship of the press.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Will the Senator from Arizona yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. I certainly will. I yield with great pleasure.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to submit a conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes, and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the conference report.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the Several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I could not hear the Senator from Oregon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is one of the Senate amendments from which I should be glad to have the Senate recede. It is the one on the subject of compensation, and which I voted against.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Will the Senator from Arizona yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I really think, in good faith to the Senate and to the country, if this is the military-service bill that I ought to suspend. I yield the floor.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will yield, I shall be very much obliged to him.

Mr. HARDWICK. If it is going to lead to debate, it is not in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think it will lead to very much discussion; at least, I hope not. I will say that it is very important that this matter should be disposed of, at least all of it with the possible exception of section 2 and the substitute proposed, so that the President may act in the pending emergency.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for just a moment. For weeks we have been trying to pass the Post Office appropriation bill, the largest of them all. On the 30th day of this month the appropriations lapse, and the committee feel that we ought to pass the bill as soon as possible. We will get through with it pretty soon. It is not going to take long.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think this matter will take very long.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask whether there is anything further to be done than for the chairman to move a continuance of the conference committee? Is there anything of importance to arise calling for debate on the floor at this time?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not see what there can be; but Senators, of course, have the privilege of discussing it. I simply move that it be referred back to the conference committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. A motion to recede would now be in order, would it not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Some other Senator may make a motion to recede. There are several other motions that are parliamentarily in order if it is brought up at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is not the motion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But a substitute motion can be offered.

Mr. HARDWICK. All of those motions can be made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are some of us who would be glad to see our conferees recede as to part of the Senate amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what are the points of difference?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, of course the report shows an entire disagreement; but, as a matter of fact, the only disagreement is upon section 2 of the House bill and the substitute proposed by the Senate. That is the essential and crucial difference between the conferees.

Mr. REED. Section 2 is the section relating to the discharge of married men and officers?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. And the House provision, which was not adopted here, which proposed to pay the dependent families of men and officers?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is true.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee another question? I read in one of the morning papers the statement that the chairman of the committee had said that the Senate would never recede from its position. Of course the chairman had a perfect right to make that comment, and I do not criticize him for it; but if the chairman is bringing back this report to ask additional action on the part of the Senate as one of the steps toward never receding, then I do not want to see the motion agreed to in its present form; but, on the contrary, I want to see a motion agreed to instructing our conferees to agree to the House provision.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To recede from our amendment.

Mr. REED. And to recede from the Senate amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I probably so expressed myself—that I did not believe the Senate would ever recede from its position. I entertained that opinion, and I still entertain it. I may be mistaken about that, as a man frequently is in any opinion that he gives. But my own impression, Mr. President, after having discussed this matter with the War Department, is that both provisions ought to be left out of the joint resolution at this time, and the whole subject of compensation discussed in a separate measure, at such a time and in such a way that we can do it intelligently, after having heard the matter discussed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me say, just in that connection——

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will yield in just a moment.

I took up the matter with the Secretary of War, and the Secretary advised me that he had no well-defined opinion on the subject; that it was the impression of men in the Army that to adopt the House provision might possibly lead to the refusal of men to enlist in the Regular Army; that in so far as the Senate provision was concerned, it was so great a departure from the settled military policy of the country that it was not wise to take it up and dispose of it without hearings and without further discussion. In view of that, it seems to me that these two bodies ought to declare the emergency which the joint resolution asks to have declared and authorize the President to utilize the National Guard without encumbering it with this provision for pay.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I appreciate the importance of the immediate passage of the joint resolution. I am willing to make any reasonable concession in order to see it passed at once. I think, therefore, I would not object if both the House and the Senate provisions were left out of the joint resolution at the present time and with the understanding that a bill would be pressed at this session touching the subject matter of the part omitted. I take this opportunity to say, however, in a very few sentences, that I am growing a little weary of the officers of the United States Army dictating the policy of Congress with reference to the volunteer soldiers of this country, and I think they have been entirely too active.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator right there? I want to say that, as a policy, I am not opposed to the payment of these men; not at all. I realize that other Governments do this thing; but my objection to this—and I think it is the objection, in good faith, of men who understand the situation—is that to discriminate against one branch of the service would unload this war upon the National Guard.

Let me call the Senator's attention to this fact: This morning I received a long telegram from a distinguished citizen of the West who says that the National Guards of Oregon and Washington are in a cold climate; the summers are cold; they are not accustomed to a tropical climate; and he was begging, not as an interested party but as a citizen, that the young men of those two States might be permitted to go down into California, a semitropical climate, and be trained and acclimated there just a little while before they are sent to the border. He urged that to send them there as was suggested would be simply to subject those young men to diseases which are incident to a tropical climate when people are unacclimated. On the other hand, I received this morning a telegram and clippings from the newspaper press saying that the young men even in Illinois who are training for the border trouble are fainting in the ranks.

Of course those situations will be overcome after a while; but to take the proposed action as to these young men, with the reenlistments in the Regular Army ceasing, will unload the whole trouble on them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I may be pardoned for taking just a moment, of course every man in the Senate and every man in the country has sense enough to know that you can not take young men from offices, from stores, from shops, or even from the farm, put them into a camp, change their method of life, and especially you can not send them to countries where they have not been acclimated, without some little period of preparation. To do so is to slaughter the men. We all understand that, of course. That will be true of the man who enlists in the Regular Army, just as it is true of the man who enlists in the Militia or the Volunteers. Happily, nearly all of the Regular Army have been hardened; many of them have been kept along the Mexican border; so that the question of climate is not a serious one as to them.

Mr. President, what has that to do with the question raised by the Senator from Oregon of "breaking down the Regular Army"? Because it is proposed to take care of the dependent wives and children of members of the National Guard will that destroy the Regular Army? What has the question of climate to do with that matter? What has the question of seasoning troops to do with that matter?

The fact of the matter is that when about 9,000 more men have enlisted in the Regular Army it will be up to its full quota, if I understand the facts correctly. This particular call is for 20,000 additional troops, and about 11,020 have enlisted. The Regular Army does not generally accept married men. There is no reason for it to accept married men at the present time. But even if that were true I would be willing to see this bill enlarged so that members of the Regular Army who are married will know that their wives and children will not suffer while they are at the front. Did the Senator from Alabama desire to ask me a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I suggest that this debate, while very illuminating, is not in order at this particular time. I want to call the attention of the President to Rule XXVII, on page 27.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair knows what the rule is.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to have the Chair rule on it.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator waive that point until I have completed my sentence or two? I shall take but little time further.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not want to take the Senator from Missouri off the floor, but I should like to have the Senate proceed in an orderly way. Under the rule the question is to be submitted to the Senate whether or not it shall proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt about that being the rule.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, that conference reports have the right of way it is understood, but they ought to be proceeded with under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. REED. What I have to say can be said at another time, but I am opposed to the Senate at this time sending back word to the House that it proposes to stand stubbornly and insistently upon the position it has taken.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I arose to ask the Senator a question a moment ago. Has the Senator the impression that if the joint resolution should be referred back to the conference the conferees would come to an agreement, and possibly eliminate the question relating to pensions for families and the qualification of the Guard?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am hopeful that may be done. I do not think our conferees would take any radical departure without asking the advice of the Senate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest that the Senate take action on this matter at once, and then we can fight it out if the conferees do not agree. But by all means let expeditious action be taken.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The House awaits the action of this body. I am hopeful that the matter may be referred back.

The emergency is very urgent in view of the mobilization of the National Guard, if the Senator from Alabama will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The only purpose I had was to determine whether or not the Senate desires at this time to proceed to the consideration of this report. I called attention to the rule of the Senate so that the question might be submitted whether it will proceed to the consideration of the report or not. If the Senate decides to do so that ends the controversy as far as I am concerned. What I maintain is that this debate is out of order until that is done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The debate is out of order unless it proceeds by unanimous consent. If there is objection——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will withhold a few moments, I think the matter can be settled and referred to the committee on conference. Like the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the committee, I believe it should go back to conference, but not for the same reason. I believe the conference may succeed in reporting a compromise which will be acceptable both to the House and the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If there is objection to the consideration of the report of the conference committee I certainly think we ought to lay aside the Post Office appropriation bill and take up and dispose of the report of the conference committee now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There has been no objection as yet.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There has been no objection to what?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There has been no objection to the present consideration of the conference report. The minute there is the Chair will sustain the objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I object.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is whether the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection in the world to the report being considered, but I do not want a debate to be precipitated here that will last all day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Aabama has invoked the rule. The rule is that the question must be decided without debate. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for a division and I ask also that the question be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the military joint resolution.

On a division the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That disposes of it, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That disposes of it for the present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I wish to say to the Senate that I have discharged my duty in the matter. I was in hopes that the conference report might be disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can bring it up later.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know whether I can or not.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10484) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think I owe it to the Senate to state that I have come to the conclusion that I can best serve this particular juncture by being very brief. Hence I am going to conclude shortly, if I am not interrupted.

But if economy be needed, the question is, Shall it touch the post-office revenues? The post office is distinctly an American institution. So are the newspapers. If economy be wise, necessary, and expedient, let an investigation be had, Mr. President, as to whether we shall charge these magazines by zones, like the parcel post. Take the quadrangles in the parcel post. There are 3,500 quadrangles with 10 zones, I believe, at a different rate in each zone. Possibly we ought to do that; I am not certain.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] stated that he believed 2 cents a pound for the transportation of second-class matter by mail was a very just charge, and for freight 1 cent a pound; that that, at least, is equitable. I do not know that it would be equitable as far as the Government is concerned, but surely no man can justify the morality of the system which will permit great magazines, thousands of tons, if you please, to be transported by fast mail at a cent a pound and take the magazine which advocates an unpopular cause, which advocates a cause probably to which I do not agree, and reduce it to the verge of bankruptcy by dislocating its avenues in reaching subscribers by charging the same rate and compelling it to go by freight.

The potentialities of injury in this blue-tag system are very great. Magazines have been destroyed. The class of magazines that advocated woman suffrage, the class of magazines that advocated prohibition, the class of magazines that advocated progressive doctrines were discriminated against in their avenues of reaching subscribers. All know that when you interrupt the mail and the speedy delivery of a publication you have destroyed its very life. Is the Senate ready now to take that backward step?

It is a singular thing that in the discriminations that were made they always sought out prohibition magazines, woman-suffrage magazines, magazines devoted to the interest of humanity, to blue tag it and let it go by freight; but if one advertised a superior brand of whisky, or furs, or Wall Street manipulations it went by fast mail, the quicker the better. If a labor publication like the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is sent by slow freight, for heaven's sake let us get the liquor advertisements and the fur and the cold-storage magazines by fast mail!

We ought not, as representatives of the people, as Senators sitting here trying to do our duty, to promote such a gross discrimination. We ought not to vest any Postmaster General with the power to make these discriminations.

I should like to have read two letters—and I shall not encumber the RECORD or take the time to read more than two letters—one from the State of Arizona and the other from the State of Indiana, on this subject. I have hundreds of such communications, but I shall not weary the Senators with reading more than two. I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, without objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Indianapolis, Ind., June 1, 1916.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Member United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As president of the International Typographical Union, whose more than 70,000 members are deeply interested, I take this opportunity to protest against the passage of section 7 of the Post Office appropriation bill. The passage of this section will give the Post Office Department arbitrary power in the shipment of all classes of magazines and periodicals, and it may mean freight service for publishers throughout the entire country. Under the present arrangement publishers are accorded a fast-mail service west of Pittsburgh. Should this section be passed it will mean a tremendous loss in circulation for many magazines and publishers and ultimate financial disaster for some publishers.

Voicing the sentiment of the more than 70,000 members of our organization, I ask that you carefully consider section 7 of the Post Office appropriation bill and vote against it.

Sincerely,
M. G. SCOTT.

ARIZONA STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Phoenix Ariz., June 12, 1916.

To Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator from Arizona, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am instructed on behalf of the Arizona State Federation of Labor to ask that you use all honorable means to prevent the passage of section 7 of the Post Office appropriation bill as it now reads.

The newspapers and the magazines are the poor man's college, and if the above-mentioned section is adopted it will in a great measure impair the prompt delivery of newspapers and magazines and thereby work a hardship on the working class.

Thanking you for anything that you may be able to do in this matter, and with best wishes, I beg to remain,

Very respectfully, yours,
[SEAL.] THOS. A. FRENCH,
Secretary-Treasurer Arizona State Federation of Labor.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an inquiry?

Mr. ASHURST. I invoked the rule against other Senators, and I ought to invoke it against the Senator from Minnesota, but I yield to him.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not ask the Senator to yield except to ask the question.

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield.

Mr. CLAPP. I would not want, of course, to be understood as questioning the statement of the Senator, but the statement as to these discriminations is a surprise. Is it a fact that papers or magazines, for instance, advocating woman suffrage have been discriminated against?

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the question, I have a complete list of all the magazines and publications that were put under the blue tag. I also have a list of all those that since September 1, 1911, were exempted from the blue tag. I will try to secure that. It was supplied by Second Assistant Postmaster General Stewart to the committee in 1912. But I will read the names of a few of the magazines that have been blue tagged and a few that were exempt from the blue tag, so that the Senate may see how it ran.

Mr. CLAPP. I only referred to magazines supporting woman suffrage as an illustration. It would be just as bad if it discriminated against other reputable magazines.

Mr. ASHURST. Those discriminated against and required to go by freight were the following, and a large number of others:

American Woman, Hearth and Home, Church Messenger, Little Bible Lesson, Zion Trumpet and Homiletic Magazine, Record of Christian Work, Advocate of Peace, American Primary Teacher, Atlantic Monthly, Christian Science Herald, Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Quarterly, Education, Farm Poultry, Life and Light for Women, Missions, Missionary Herald, Pilgrim Teacher and Sunday School Outlook, Popular Educator, Primary Education, School Arts Book, Woman's Missionary Friend, Water Wagon—

A monthly magazine in Lynn, Mass.—

Smith College Bulletin, Smith College Monthly, Good Housekeeping, American Education, Longshoreman, American Baby, American Homes and Gardens, American Machinist, American Marine Engineer, American Review of Reviews, American Tailor and Cutter, Bible Class Manual, Blacksmith and Wheelwright, Boilermaker, Catholic World, Good Government, Pearson's Magazine, and B'nai B'rith News.

Mr. STERLING. I ask the Senator from Arizona if a single one of these publications is making complaint of the conditions now.

Mr. ASHURST. I know of only one. I do not know whether they are all complaining or not. If they are so slavish, or so supine, or so frightened, fearing that their postal rates will be increased if they say aught against this discrimination, I have little further interest in them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask the Senator if the periodicals named by him which were carried by freight were not delivered at the point of their destination on time.

Mr. ASHURST. They were not. Large numbers of them were not. Their avenues of reaching subscribers were dislocated very materially. They may now be carried on time. Indeed, many of them may have convinced the department that they ought not to be under the blue tag, and they may have been relieved from it. But let us put those that were blue tagged in juxtaposition with those sent by mail.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Let me read this list, and then I will yield to the Senator from Florida.

Permitted to go by mail:

American Brewer, Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular, Brewers' Journal, Cold Storage and Ice Trade Journal, Fur Trade Review, Journal of the American Bankers' Association, Motor Boat, Motor Boating, Playthings, Silk, the Soda Fountain, Toilettes, American Album of Fur Novelties, and American Musical and Art Journal.

I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator is now reading from a list about which complaint was made four years ago.

Mr. ASHURST. I am.

Mr. BRYAN. That was at the beginning of the installation of the blue-tag system.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator know if any of those magazines complain to-day?

Mr. ASHURST. Frankly, I do not.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator said one magazine has complained. Which one is that?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not believe I will give the Senator the name. I do not feel at liberty to give the name.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator is not afraid?

Mr. ASHURST. My avenue of getting additional information could be stopped if I disclosed the source of the information. I do not think I will give the name.

Mr. BRYAN. It is rather peculiar that the Senator is pointing out an evil condition that exists when his complaint is limited to one magazine. He ought to give the name of that one.

Mr. ASHURST. Then I will have the telegram read. This telegram does not state that anybody is complaining.

Mr. BRYAN. I am not talking about four years ago. I am talking about the present time.

Mr. ASHURST. I will have this telegram read and see whether anybody opposes the blue tag being extended or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, if there is no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK, June 25, 1916.

Hon. HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

I have been informed that one of the Members of the Senate is said to have received a number of telegrams from publishers favoring extension of blue tag. On the contrary, publishers of the great magazines of the country generally are positively opposed to the blue tag. Following is membership of Periodical Publishers' Association of America, which passed resolution of protest, of which you have a copy: Century Magazine, Literary Digest, Ladies' Home Journal, Saturday Evening Post American Agriculturist, Collier's Weekly Harper's Magazine, Harper's Weekly, the Independent, Country Gentleman, Review of Reviews, Homilectic Review, World's Work, Cosmopolitan Magazine, Hearst's Magazine, Leslie's Weekly, New England Homestead, Southern Farming, St. Nicholas Magazine, Modern Priscilla, Christian Herald, McClure's Magazine, Ladies' World, Mother's Magazine, the American Boy, Current Opinion, Farm Journal, Country Life in America, Garden Magazine, McCall's Magazine, Home Needlework, Judge, Orange Judd Farmer, Motor Boating, Motor, Farm and Fireside, Farm and Home, Dakota Farmer, the Bellman, Woman's Home Companion, American Magazine, Good Housekeeping, Northwest Farmstead, Pictorial Review, System, People's Home Journal, Missionary Review, Theater Magazine, Vogue, Vanity Fair, Woman's World, Metropolitan Magazine, Harper's Bazaar, National Geographic Magazine.

CYRUS H. K. CURTIS.

Mr. BRYAN. What is that list of names? It does not state——

Mr. ASHURST. The telegram stated that this gentleman who wired me had heard that the magazine publishers were in favor of the blue tag, and he was simply advising me that those magazines are opposed to the extension of the blue tag.

Mr. BRYAN. They have not said so?

Mr. ASHURST. The gentleman who assumed to speak for them said so.

Mr. BRYAN. Who is he?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. Cyrus H. K. Curtis, president of the Periodical Publishing Association of the United States, and that is the list of papers composing that association.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator understands that as to all those?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But I want to ask the Senator from Arizona if the United States Government contracts to deliver the mail on time if it can do so by the use of freight trains or the rural mail wagons, what difference does it make to the publisher if the Government use all of these agencies and deliver it on time as it is doing it to-day? If by using the freight trains the Postmaster General can save to the American people four or five million dollars a year, why will the Senator object to it?

Of course it does not make any difference with the publisher if all the mail is carried by fast mail; they do not pay any more for it; they get their mail carried at the cost of the American people. The Government of the United States contracts to carry this mail and deliver it at a certain time, and so far as I have been able to ascertain it has carried out that contract and delivered it on time. Since the complaint was made four years ago I do not know of anybody who is here now protesting against an injustice that arises out of the present law. The system has worked effectively and economically, and I see no reason for changing it.

Mr. ASHURST. It is evident the Senator did not hear my address on last Friday.

Mr. BRYAN. Who complains of any injustice being done at this time?

Mr. ASHURST. It is evident the Senator from Florida did not hear my address. I began my address, and I said over and over again and I say now for about the fifth time that nobody whose opinion is worth while has pretended that at this particular time anybody complains or is complaining.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator said that there was one complaint.

Mr. ASHURST. One of them has complained.

Mr. BRYAN. Who is that?

Mr. ASHURST. I decline to give the name.

Mr. BRYAN. I thought the Senator was giving the name in response to my request when he had the telegram read.

Mr. ASHURST. But I say this: You will not know who will be Postmaster General five years from to-day. This power may not be appealed from. If the Postmaster General of the future sees fit to cripple, hamper, and harass a magazine and reduce it to bankruptcy, relief can not be obtained. It is not appealable; it is not reviewable by any legal tribunal.

My distinguished and learned friend the Senator from Mississippi, Senator VARDAMAN, whose opinions on public questions I highly value, asked me if they get the magazine on time what complaint have they?

Mr. VARDAMAN. There is not an instance, the Senator said a moment ago, in recent months or years where they have failed to get their mail on time. The publication comes out the 1st of the month and it is not delivered until the last of the month. What objection should you have, if you were the publisher, if your Government should take your publication in New York and carry it to Arizona by freight if it reached there on the date it was to be delivered? All the publisher has a right to demand of the Government is delivery on time. The means of transportation should be of no concern to the publisher.

Mr. ASHURST. This is the objection. The Senator is a publisher. If the Senator will reflect a moment, when you want to deliver by freight, say in San Francisco, the Senator knows that you have got to lock your forms days ahead of the time you would deliver at your home city, which renders the news of that publication very stale, flat, and unprofitable, and your news is no longer current, your news is no longer timely, your form is locked days ahead of time.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Not at all.

Mr. ASHURST. It is so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the publication should not come out in time to be delivered by freight, then the Government would do as it is doing to-day, it would deliver it by fast mail. To say that the Postmaster General would prostitute the functions of his office for political or any other purpose so sinister and criminal as that is an imputation that I do not want to make against anybody. The officer who would do such a thing would very readily be repudiated or impeached by Congress.

I can not conceive, Mr. President, of a man being low enough, so abandoned to all that is bad, as to use the functions of his office in that way, nor can I understand how a President who has sense enough to respect the oath of office would permit a man of that character to remain for one moment in the employment of the Government.

Mr. President, we have got to indulge the presumption when we make the laws that the representatives of the people are honest and that they are going to execute the laws and perform the functions of their offices properly.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, one of the compensations of public life is that you are brought into association with those delightful characters, those idealistic souls, in whose spectacles there are always nothing but rainbows; who always see the good in mankind; who always look for the bright side of life; who always think that everybody is going to do the right thing. That characterizes my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN]. Always associating with good people and always thinking good thoughts, he is incapable of believing that anybody could do wrong; but, Mr. President, you can not judge the future except by the past. Grave injustice has been done under this blue-tag system. Men have invested their money in magazines believing they would receive fair and equal treatment. Their revenues have been depleted, and bankruptcy has come to some of them. They have lost money through the practical workings of the blue-tag system.

The Senate of the United States in August, 1912, had a discussion, and the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads had a discussion, and after a long period of investigation they came to the conclusion that the workings of the blue-tag system should be stopped. In 1912 the House of Representatives and the Senate agreed to a provision that hereafter the Postmaster General should not extend the workings of the blue-tag system. All I seek to do by striking out section 7 is not to permit the situation to get any worse.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRADY in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. The statement of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] in answer to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is in regard to the news service. The department includes in the freight service only such publications as do not contain news features.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. STERLING. Only such papers as are issued less frequently than weekly are included in the freight service.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that is the very thing to which I object. I object to having any Government official say what is and what is not news. That is the thing that reaches the vitals of American principles of government. In ancient times in England, in 1683 or 1684, they had a censor of the press; a censor who said in advance what was news. If you published what was not news, you were subjected to serious pains and penalties. It required almost a civil revolution before the censorship was destroyed. All that censor did was to say what was news and what was not news. Of course the censors, always obsequious to the court, invariably said the things praising the King's policy and laying heavy taxes on the people without their consent were news. To defend any man who stood for the understratum, for a larger liberty, was not news. It is the same old question here to-day. Are we going to permit any official, however wise, however just, however virtuous he may be, to say what is news?

It is the camel's nose getting into the tent to which I object. Next year it will be the censorship of moving pictures; next year it will be the censorship of books; and next year it will be the censorship of something else. The way to deal in the American Senate with these great questions, whatever their course is, is to stand firmly, manfully, and resolutely by the principle, whatever it may cost. If we ascertain that we are losing money on the transportation of second-class mail, increase the rate and let the method of transportation apply to all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona a question. How would the Senator feel about having a proviso to this paragraph reading?—

Provided, That on and after January 1, 1912, the rate of postage on second-class mail matter published biweekly or less frequently, transported in regular mail trains shall be 2 cents for each pound or fraction of a pound, and all publishers shall have the option of transportation in the regular mail trains, instead of on the freight trains, if they desire.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the last censor of the press in England was Sir Roger L'Estrange. He had some very definite views as to what was timely literature. Whenever any publisher of a magazine or any publisher of a "news letter," as they were then called, wished to publish an item as to the record of a member of Parliament or what that member said, he had first to get the permission of Sir Roger L'Estrange, the official censor, as to what was said in Parliament and as to how the money of the people was voted out. Sir Roger himself inveighed very much against the press. My distinguished friend from Georgia, Mr. HARDWICK, has stated that this is a graft on the part of the press. Sir Roger did not call it a graft, but here is what he thought about the newspapers. Sir Roger said:

A newspaper makes the multitude too familiar with the actions and councils of their superiors and give them (the multitude) not only an itch but a kind of colorable right and license to be meddling with the Government.

In other words, some think that these weekly magazines and certain newspapers are meddling with things that belong to a superior class of people. They ought not to be criticizing Senators for their votes; we ought to hamper them, blue tag them, and let them go by freight. They give the multitude the substratum, the common people, as we call them, a kind of colorable license to be employed with the operations of the Government; they are finding out what we are doing, and hence we will dislocate the avenues by which these magazines may reach their subscribers promptly.

I have no fear of that. Nobody who is worth listening to thinks that a great metropolitan paper, which has a large bank account, which has opulent subscribers, and which advocates a popular cause will be blue tagged. I will say to my friend from Georgia he need not fear, for he is going to get his daily papers on time; but there are papers, there are magazines that do not have lucrative advertising; there are magazines that are incapable of sending to Washington a representative to appear before the Post Office Department to argue in their behalf as to why they should not be included in the blue-tag system. All they can do is to send a letter. They deal with some question, probably as to the live-stock industry or the mining industry, and they would be blue tagged. Without friends at court, without anybody to make a great outcry in their behalf, their publications can go by freight.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I only desire to detain the Senate for the purpose of calling attention to the motion which the Senate voted down a little while ago. I am exercising in this the privilege of speaking nominally on the Post Office appropriation bill, but speaking really upon a different subject.

About half an hour ago a motion was voted down, the motion having been that we take up for consideration the conference report on the House joint resolution in regard to military affairs. I believe that the motion was voted down as an expression of a desire to insist upon the Senate amendments, upon the theory that consideration was to consist of speeches against sending the joint resolution back to conference.

Mr. President, we certainly ought to consider the report of the conferees on the military bill. We ought to consider the report of those conferees before we go on with the Post Office appropriation bill. It is utterly inexcusable for us to leave the report of the conferees on the use of the National Guard by the President in the air. No matter how we feel about it, whether we want the House provision section 2 or the Senate provision section 2, we ought to act.

For myself, I am ready to see the conferees go back at once. I am ready to give the conferees the direction that the chairman of the committee wishes. When I made the motion that we take up the conference report for consideration I noticed that nearly everyone who was in favor of the Senate amendment and desired to insist upon the Senate amendment voted against taking up the conference report. I think the motion probably came from an unfortunate source. I believe the majority of the Senate is still in favor of the Senate amendment. What I wanted to say was that, regardless of how we stand in favor of the Senate provision section 2 or the House provision, we ought to take up the subject and determine whether we are going to insist upon the Senate amendment or whether we are going to recede. I am ready, although I am in favor of the House provision, to vote for an insistence upon our amendment and send the bill back to conference. That is what we ought to do. We must send it back to conference, and we ought not to keep this bill in the air.

I move, Mr. President, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the House bill. I think we ought to dispose of it at once and send it back to conference, and I am ready to vote, as the chairman of the committee requests, to send the joint resolution back to conference. I hope they will work out something that we will all be satisfied with before they get through.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I quite agree with the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia that, regardless of what our individual views may be as to which one of these provisions should ultimately prevail, the conferees ought to be at work one way or the other. I think perhaps it would be unfortunate if there should be an extended debate upon the subject at this time. In view of the debate which took place the other day I do not know that it would seem necessary to have any discussion, but there ought to be a vote, so that the conferees can be instructed as to our position. I very much favor the suggestion made by the Senator. I shall vote to send the joint resolution back to conference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, my motion is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on House joint resolution 242.

Mr. GRONNA. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on necessary business. He is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], called to the War Department on public business.

I also desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who is detained on account of official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum of the Senate present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senate has concluded to take up the conference report on the joint resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the motion of the Senator from Georgia. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House joint resolution 242.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Now I renew my motion that the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the House joint resolution, ask for a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], before I entered the Chamber, said that the difficulties between the conferees were considerable, and particularly I have heard—I do not know that he said it on this occasion—that one of the difficulties confronting the conferees is the difference of opinion on the subject of the treatment of enlisted men in the Regular Army and enlisted men in the National Guard. I am inclined to think that the enlisted men in the Guard and the enlisted men in the Army should be put upon the same legal basis, upon the same basis of equality before the law; and that can be done very well by adding to the House resolution a provision that the claims of the enlisted men in the Army who have dependents should be recognized; but it should go further, and provide that there should be a showing, say, to cover 18 months, as to what a man has done in the way of work or earning money for the support of his dependents, and then take the average of those 18 months, and let that be the maximum; or, to state it in more detail, make the benefits of the provision for maintenance of dependents applicable alike to the families of enlisted men in the Regular Army and in the Organized Militia with the following proviso:

Provided, That it shall be shown as a condition precedent by or in behalf of the dependents to receiving benefits hereunder:

(1) What the enlisted man earned or what work he did for a period of 18 months prior to his joining the Regular Army or being called by the President into the service of the United States.

(2) What the enlisted man applied for such period of 18 months out of his earnings or by way of labor to the support of his dependents:

And provided further, That in no case shall the amount of money to be expended hereunder for the relief of the dependents of an enlisted man exceed for any month the average amount or value which the enlisted man applied out of his earnings or work for said 18 months for the benefit of his dependents.

By the adoption of such an amendment there would be equality before the law; but the man whose family would be benefited would be the man who had contributed to their support before he went into the service.

I think it will be very easy to arrange the matter in that way with perfect equality to all of these forces, so that there will be no discrimination against the Regular Army and no ground for discouragement on the part of men who have dependents who may desire to enlist in the Regular Army.

I am perfectly willing to have the joint resolution go back to conference, because that is the only way the conferees can keep together, but it should be adjusted in some such way as I have suggested.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, on Monday of this week I offered an amendment to the House joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to call out the militia or National Guard of the country, which amendment was voted down by this body. The amendment contained substantially the same subject matter as did the original House resolution, providing for the protection of the families of the National Guard by this Government during time of war.

Yesterday I introduced a bill embodying the same matter, which is now before the Committee on Military Affairs, and which I hope may be reported out soon for consideration by the Senate.

I am not prepared to-day, and could not if prepared probably, make a speech on this subject which would interest you. There is, however, one thing that I can say, and that I know, and know well, and that is the difference between the duty of this Government to the families of our soldiers and its failure to comply with that duty as I see it.

This bill referred to includes the same subject matter that the original House joint resolution included, with the exception of raising the appropriation from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000, and adding to the proposed beneficiaries the "families of the Regular Army" as well as the National Guard when in like circumstances.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up the time of the Senate by any extended argument in favor of this bill now, for the matter has been discussed freely, but I shall try to point out a few reasons why I believe this ought to become a law, and to answer briefly some of the objections raised against the adoption of my amendment last Monday, and against this bill as it now exists.

In the first place, it has been said that a provision of this kind would destroy the American Army by destroying the American patriotism and love for his country; that it would destroy the loyalty and patriotism of our soldiers of whom we are all so proud.

Mr. President, for myself, I am unable to follow any line of reasoning that could by any possible way reach such a conclusion, but on the contrary, believe that just the opposite would be the result after the adoption by Congress of something of this kind. The loyalty of any American citizen to his country is not and can not be based on a dollars-and-cents basis, though the patriotism of any soldier, instead of being diminished, would certainly be enlarged many fold if he had the knowledge that when he was called to the front to defend his country, that his family would be protected by his country from actual want, and not be left to the tender mercy of charity, or being looked after by the great industrial institutions of our country, which to me would mean practically the same thing.

And in passing that feature of this matter, we can not help but point with pride to many of our large financial, manufacturing, and producing institutions which have so readily volunteered to look after the interests of the soldiers of the National Guard, any of whom were employed by them, who should be called to go to the front. Mr. President, let it be said that it is to their great credit, and that they are entitled to the thanks of all loyal citizens of this country for their magnanimous and worthy offer of assistance. But we can not, however, by any line of reasoning conclude that that would in any measure fit the conditions such as would an appropriation by this Government for their protection and for their interests which has been taken from them by compelling the heads of the families to go to the defense of our country and thereby sacrifice the benefits of the position which they may have held, and which positions have given them their daily bread.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that if I were a member of the National Guard or of the Regular Army, or if any of you gentlemen were members of either branch of the Army, that our patriotism and our loyalty for our country would be increased manyfold by the knowledge that while we were at the front defending our country that our country in return would place the members of our families beyond the pale of actual want and actual need. To me this conclusion needs no argument.

If I understand conditions, all or nearly all of the civilized countries of the world have some provision of this kind in their laws, and any line of argument contrary to some plan of embodying these features should have very little consideration by us. Do you tell me, fellow Senators, and try to make me believe it, that in keeping my family from want by this Government would destroy my patriotism? No, my friends; it would only add to it, and it would also add to yours.

This Congress has at this session appropriated many millions of dollars for questionable enterprises. Will we now fail to give to the needy in their time of distress if that time comes. Mr. President, I am not afraid that the boys will not go to the front, but I am afraid that this Government may fail to realize its duty, because this Senate voted down my amendment last Monday, which had for its object the same features as has this bill, after voting to reject the original House joint resolution on the same subject.

They tell us that our Government wants patriots for its citizens. So do I; but, my friends, no country in this world ever had the patriotism of its subjects long unless it gave justice in return. Any Government that will not keep the families of its soldiers while they are at the front does not deserve the patriotism of any man. It has been argued, Mr. President, that during our late Civil War our Government did not do this, but that does not change the situation as I see it. In the first place, it did not cost the families of the soldiers of the Civil War one-fourth as much to live as it costs to-day, and, in the second place, because the Government did not do it then is no reason why it should not have done so. It was our Government's duty then and it is our Government's duty now to provide for the dependent ones, and we should not be afraid to spend a few miserable dollars to protect the homes and firesides of the families of the soldiers who go to protect this country in its hour of need, if they have to go.

I hope this matter may prevail in this great body; I hope no Member will oppose anything that looks to this end, such as this does, because I believe it to be their sacred duty, and I believe you will see it that way, and by supporting some measure of this kind you will do that duty, and you will then bring a smile of joy to the mothers, to the wives, and to the children of every soldier in this great Republic, and a smile of joy to the faces of your wives and your children 20 years from now to know that you voted for this worthy measure.

Will we fail to do our duty in this trying hour? Will we delay in this most deserving, most righteous, and most just appropriation of them all. I hope not and believe not, and believe you will vote for this bill, giving justice to those who are the greatest patriots of us all in all wars—the women.

My friends, as I came down town this morning, while I was waiting for a car in front of the Highlands Apartment House, I saw a darkey boy hauling a load of sand who had just stopped to rest his horses. I asked him how much sand he had on the wagon. He said he had 4,700 pounds. I then asked him if that was not a heavy load for those horses. He said, "Oh, no; any horse ought to pull a ton all right." "But," I said, "you have a good deal more than a ton for each horse." But he insisted not as my car came along and I got on.

Mr. President, I want to say to you and to all the Members of this Senate that while you have been opposed to measures of the kind presented, and while some of you have voted against them, I do not believe to-day, and I never shall believe, that this Senate will fail to do its duty and give relief along the lines indicated in this bill to the families of the boys at the front, any more than I believe the argument of that darkey boy that 4,700 pounds of sand did not make a ton each for his two horses, and I shall never believe that you will fail to do this until this Congress shall adjourn without having done so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] that the Senate further insist upon its amendments, ask a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I shall occupy but one second. Lest any impression was left by a statement made this morning that I concurred in the idea that we should now withdraw the demand made for provision for the support of the families of the soldiers as a consideration for report by the conferees, I wish to have it understood that I regard this hour as the timely opportunity to accomplish that, and not to wait. This is wise, first, as an inducement to enlist, and in order that we can promptly fill the ranks for service as well as to give security to families. I only now make the suggestion that, for myself, I did not wish it understood that I am willing to waive the claim that I have been making or to consent that the present conference shall waive it merely to reach an immediate result.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, just one word. I do not understand that any of us mean by this that we have changed our former position. The only way to go on toward reaching a result is to send the matter back to the conferees.

Mr. LEWIS. To that I have no objection, but join the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] in insisting upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has requested, because of an engagement, to be relieved from further service on the conference committee, and has asked that another Senator be appointed in his place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appoints the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] managers at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10484) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, what is the matter before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Arizona moves to strike out, in section 7, beginning with the word "That," all down to and including the word "repealed," on line 8, as now amended.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word with reference to this amendment.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate considered section 7 as it came from the House, where no opposition to it was presented. The committee learned, through the Postmaster General and others, that there had been no formal opposition to it; and certainly I, as a member of the committee, never heard of any opposition to it until after our committee had made its report. The whole object of section 7 was, as I understood, to secure economy for the Government without doing any injustice to any publication now passing through the mails. It was represented to us that millions could be saved, as millions had been saved, through the sending of certain publications by fast freight. It was also represented to us that the owners of many of these publications had gladly consented to their going by freight. Now it appears, since the bill was reported to the Senate, that there have been complaints made as to discrimination, or at least fears have been expressed that there is a possibility that discrimination may be made.

I certainly should be very much opposed to vesting in the Postmaster General, or in any other executive head, the right to indulge a discrimination which would result in injustice, not only to publishers but to citizens generally.

It seems to me that if we could secure in some way a law or provision that will allow the Postmaster General to make use of such economies as are apparent to everybody, I do not imagine that even for political purposes anyone would object to an economy in the Post Office Department that saved the people money and did nobody any harm. If we could secure an amendment to this provision which would compel the Postmaster General to observe a uniform rule as to all publications, it seems to me that the complaint of the Senator from Arizona would be completely answered. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], which has already been adopted, seems to furnish this relief.

I have known for years that certain publishers felt that they were injured on account of rulings of the Postmaster General and that there was no appeal for them. I, too, have felt that that was wrong. It has seemed to me that if a publisher feels that he is wronged by some action of the Postmaster General there ought to be some place where and some power to whom that publisher could go and have the question determined as to whether or not the ruling of the Postmaster General is just and legal. I submit, Mr. President, that if this matter had been brought before the committee, if we had felt that extending this provision to the two remaining divisions—for it already exists in the second and third mailing divisions—would result in discrimination, we would have attempted to solve the problem through a definite recommendation. So, while I have not had time to go into it carefully and am not prepared to offer an amendment, I still believe that if such a provision could be inserted——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE rose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to interrupt me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thought the Senator had about concluded, and when he did I wished to take the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have about concluded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will, however, ask the Senator from Michigan a question, with his permission.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will ask the Senator from Michigan if an amendment in this form would meet the suggestion he has made in his remarks:

Amend by adding, after the amendment offered to section 7 by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]—which has been adopted, as I understand—the following:

Provided, That whenever the owner of any publication required by an order of the Post Office Department to be transmitted by freight believes that he is injured or discriminated against, he may apply to the Post Office Department for an opportunity to be heard; that upon such application being duly filed in writing, the order of the Post Office Department as to the transportation of such application by freight shall be suspended, and the owner of such publication shall have opportunity for a full and fair hearing before said department. The testimony in any such hearing or proceedings shall be reduced to writing and filed in the Post Office Department prior to entering an order upon such hearing. That upon such hearing, if the Post Office Department decides adversely to the contention of the publisher, such publisher shall have the right, within the period of 10 days after the date of the order of the Post Office Department made upon such hearing, to appeal to the United States court of appeals of the circuit within which such periodical is published for a review of such order by said court of appeals, by filing in the court a written petition praying that the order of the Post Office Department be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Post Office Department, and thereupon the said department forthwith shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record and testimony. Upon the filing of such transcript the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify the order of the department.

The jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals of the United States to affirm, set aside, or modify such orders of the Post Office Department shall be exclusive.

Such proceedings in the circuit court of appeals shall be given precedence over other cases pending therein and shall be in every way expedited.

I will say that I have drawn the amendment somewhat hastily, with a view of offering it for the consideration of the Senate, in the hope that it might be adopted and go into conference, where it could be very carefully reviewed. It is just a suggestion to meet that which the Senator has made in his address.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is along the same line that I had in mind, and I am in hearty sympathy with it. I do not know how it has been worked out—whether, for instance, we should confer review power upon the circuit court, or whether the complainant ought to go to the State court, or where the appeal should go; but there ought to be a right of review by some court, and the proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin is in line with my suggestion. As I say, I do not know just how well it has been worked out, but it generally expresses my idea. I have felt that way for some time—that we ought not to leave absolute power in the hands of the Postmaster General to determine what is admissible to the mail and what is not; but I also feel that we ought not to strike out this section entirely without making some provision for that saving which everybody wants who is more interested in conserving the people's property and other rights than in personal political advantage.

For that reason I shall be very glad to support such an amendment as that offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to make a further inquiry of the Senator from Wisconsin before the Senator from Michigan concludes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield the floor, if the Senator wishes to take the floor in his own right.

Mr. SHERMAN. Both of the Senators have information on this subject. Under the amendment which the Senator proposes to offer, if the Postmaster General ordered a publication to go by freight, and then an appeal were taken, what would be the condition of the publisher during the pendency of the appeal?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The publication would go just as it had been going before that time, because the amendment provides that the order of the Postmaster General requiring it to go by freight shall be suspended until the review has been made.

Mr. SHERMAN. That it shall be suspended during the pendency of the proceeding?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I only want to say a word upon section 7.

I am quite in sympathy with the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and measurably approved by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I do not believe that this section ought to go out without anything to take its place. It seems to me that there is some merit in the matter of saving and economy in the proposition which ought to be retained if possible. At the same time, I shall have to vote in favor of striking it out unless some change is made in it. As it stands reported from the committee, I must oppose it.

There are plenty of precedents for section 7 all through the statutes of the United States and all through the departments. That is to say, it is the lodgment of an arbitrary, unlimited, and uncircumscribed power in some department of government. We find plenty of precedents of that kind, but they are bad precedents, in my judgment, and ought not to be further continued or accentuated or multiplied. Unless there is some such amendment adopted by which the conference committee can work out a different proposition, I shall vote in favor of striking out the entire section.

There are a good many ways, Mr. President, of transforming a government of law into a government of men aside from that of selecting a dictator. One of those ways is a way which we are constantly pursuing, and that is by creating a bureau or a commission, and conferring all the different powers of government upon that bureau or upon that commission. In the general affairs of government we think it a sacred principle that the legislative, the judicial, and the executive powers shall be kept separate; that the checks and balances which arise in government by reason of that condition of affairs constitute an essential principle of government, and I think it to be an essential principle of government; but we are utterly ignoring that principle in the creation of our bureaus and in the creation of our commissions. We are constantly conferring upon the bureaus the judicial, the legislative, in a measure, and the executive power. We are making them investigators, prosecutors, judges, and finally executors of the public will; and in that respect this provision in this bill is vulnerable, just the same as in that respect many other provisions are vulnerable as they are found in our statutes. I am a firm believer in the division of the powers of government.

This is no different rule at all—if you will permit me to refer to a matter which has perhaps become stale to the Senate by reason of the number of times to which I have referred to it—from the principle under which we are practically operating our entire State. We are subject to the discretion, to the arbitrary will or the arbitrary power, to the combined legislative, executive, and judicial power of a department, constantly in reference to the government of 85 per cent of our entire State. I have, therefore, been brought more directly in contact than some of my eastern friends with the viciousness of the principle, and I have endeavored to be consistent since I have been here in doing one thing, and that is in voting against the conferring of arbitrary, unlimited, uncircumscribed, and undefined power upon the head of a bureau or a commission. For that reason, Mr. President, unless some such amendment as the Senator from Wisconsin has suggested is adopted, I shall vote to strike the entire section from the bill. I do not believe that there is any room in this Government anywhere for the lodgment of arbitrary power. For such a vicious practice I refuse to recognize the plea so often made of necessity or of administrative expediency.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I shall vote to retain section 7 in this bill. In other words, I shall vote against the motion submitted by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to strike out the section. I am the publisher of a monthly magazine. To retain section 7 in the bill would so extend the authority of the Post Office Department that an order might be issued requiring me to send my magazine to subscribers by fast freight, instead of sending it by fast mail as at present.

But, Mr. President, I do not believe that the department would make any unfair or discriminatory order in my case or that of any other publisher. If such an order were made no Postmaster General could maintain it upon a showing that it was an unjust order. The press has the means of making its own defense against wrong. It can always reach the public ear. It can make public opinion in its own defense, and public opinion would correct any such injustice.

A portion of the country is already subject to such orders by the Post Office Department. The department is already transmitting by freight a large number of monthly magazines, chiefly devoted to fiction and advertising. Those magazines are printed and ready for mailing some two or three weeks in advance of their date. They can go by freight without injury to anyone. In this way the department is now saving some $7,000,000.

If section 7 is retained in the bill the department will be able to greatly increase that saving without imposing loss or hardship on anyone.

I think it will relieve all publishers of apprehension or anxiety as to the action of the department if a provision be inserted giving to them a right of appeal to the courts from any such order which may work an injury or discrimination. If any mistake is made by the department; if any publication is injured by a department order requiring it to be transmitted by freight instead of fast mail, such publisher then can secure relief.

I can offer it as an amendment or as a substitute to the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me just a moment, the Senator's motion to amend this section is in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; that is true. I have a right to perfect the section before the motion to strike out shall be voted upon. Then, I will offer this amendment. I do not offer it as a model. I have drawn it very hastily since this debate was on, but I think if it were adopted it would give to the conference committee a basis upon which they could work out something that would be acceptable to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and already agreed to, the following words——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, may I ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska may be read in connection with this?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be done.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] offered an amendment to be added after the word "repealed," at the end of line 8 on page 38, or what was at that time the end of section 7, the following words:

> But no publication shall be sent by freight if such method of transportation results in unfair discrimination or in the undue delay of the delivery of such publication at its destination.

To which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] proposes to add the following:

> Provided, That whenever the owner of any publication required by an order of the Post Office Department to be transmitted by freight believes that he is injured or discriminated against he may apply to the Post Office Department for an opportunity to be heard; that upon such application being duly filed in writing, the order of the Post Office Department as to the transportation of such publication by freight shall be suspended, and the owner of such publication shall have opportunity for a full and fair hearing before said department. The testimony in any such hearing or proceedings shall be reduced to writing and filed in the Post Office Department prior to entering an order upon such hearing. That upon such hearing if the Post Office Department decides adversely to the contention of the publisher, such publisher shall have the right within the period of 10 days after the date of the order of the Post Office Department made upon such hearing, to appeal to the United States court of appeals of the circuit within which such periodical is published, for a review of such order by said court of appeals, by filing in the court a written petition praying that the order of the Post Office Department be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Post Office Department, and thereupon the said department forthwith shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record and testimony. Upon the filing of such transcript the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify the order of the department.
>
> The jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals of the United States to affirm, set aside, or modify such orders of the Post Office Department shall be exclusive.
> Such proceedings in the circuit court of appeals shall be given precedence over other cases pending therein and shall be in every way expedited.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. I am not prepared to accept it, but I desire to say to the Senate that I think it is a proper amendment, and I shall make no objection to it.

Mr. President, this whole discussion has revolved around the question of discretion on the part of the Postmaster General. The Post Office Department is the largest business institution in the world. We are appropriating in this bill $330,000,000 for its operations. Its activities extend to every quarter of the world. They go to every household in the United States. More than 90 per cent of the business of this country is conducted through the Post Office Department. There are more employees in the Post Office Department than in any other department, or any three or four other departments, of the Government. We are continually expanding its activities and its jurisdiction. In the last few years we have added to the Post Office Department the parcel post, and no man can tell or imagine the extent to which it is growing. We have added the Postal Savings System since then. All these things tend to complicate, to make more difficult, the administration of that great office. It is impossible to prescribe hard and fast rules what the administration shall be and how it shall be administered. We must necessarily confer upon the Postmaster General, who undertakes to operate this great machine, certain discretion. He can not operate without it.

I am not one of those who believe that his discretion ought to be unlimited or that there ought not to be a check or balance somewhere. But, fortunately for us, fortunately for our Government and its organization, there is, if I may be permitted to use the expression, an influence and a power in this country that is above all; that is, a crystallized public sentiment.

The provision under discussion is now in operation in practically one-half of the country, and there have been no complaints from any source as to its operation. Nobody has complained that there has been unfair or unjust discrimination against any publication or any periodical, as far as the committee has ever heard.

Why, Mr. President, if the Postmaster General should undertake, by an order or by some executive regulation, to exclude from the mails newspapers, weekly or daily, or such other publications as contain items of news and information that the people seek, public opinion would force him to restore them to the mail or force him from office. So it is with the carrying of the mails by the railroads. Public sentiment in this country will compel the railroads to carry the mails as they are offered under the direction of the Postmaster General if we do not pay them anything. Public sentiment will compel the roads to carry the mails, unjust as it might be, for if they were not carried public sentiment would stop the operation of the trains, and they know it. Therefore they understand that they are at the mercy of Congress as to what their compensation shall be. If it is just fair and reasonable, they accept it. If it is not just and fair and reasonable, they are compelled to accept it nevertheless. Public sentiment, which is above the law in this country in respect to that, would compel them to carry the mails, or it would not permit their trains to run; and I believe every Senator here will agree with me in that respect.

But I have gotten away from section 7. I would not favor this section, and I do not think any Senator here would favor it if he felt that the Postmaster General, in the exercise of the discretion he has, would use it arbitrarily or unfairly or unjustly. If he should make a mistake and order that certain publications should go by fast freight instead of fast mail, if that publisher should go to the Postmaster General and make his complaint and show how he was injured, how the order was unfair to him, the Postmaster General doubtless would do as he always has done in every case of complaint, so far as I have heard—correct the wrong.

The truth is that the Congress of the United States ought to ascertain by some means the cost of the transportation of these publications and let them pay the cost. That is what we ought to do. But I presume if a suggestion like that were made in the Senate some Senator perhaps would have a fit.

I am not going to oppose the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. There are some elements of fairness in it and some elements of justice. I am perfectly willing that the amendment, as far as I am concerned, should go to conference, and that the conferees should have an opportunity to investigate this whole question. They have had an opportunity to understand fully and perfectly the extent to which the amendment goes and its effect, and we will be able to work out something that will be satisfactory to the Senate.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I am going to beg the Senate to let us go on and conclude this bill. It has been the unfinished business of the Senate for more than a month, and we have been so good natured about it, we have been so obliging about it, that it does seem to me that the Senate now ought to be willing to make all the possible haste that can be made to its conclusion.

While I am on my feet I will make a suggestion. I am going to ask the Senate to remain in session until the bill has been concluded and passed. We must pass these appropriation bills. It seems to me ample time has been afforded for the discussion of every phase of it, and the Senate ought now to be willing to let it be passed and go into conference in the hope and belief that no doubt there we will be able to work out a measure that will be satisfactory.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, if he is present, if he would be willing to accept a further amendment to the effect that if the owner or representative of a publication were given the right to apply to the Postmaster General and receive from him the right to transport his publication or magazine by mail trains at a fair rate paid for such matters—second-rate postage, as I understand it—or to make an application if he prefers to have the same shipped by freight at a reasonable price, would that not be fair to all and harm no one? Anyone publishing a magazine or other publication could ship it either way, as he chose. If he wanted quick delivery, he would pay for it at the rate fixed. If he was not in such a hurry, he could ship it by freight. The Postmaster General would be compelled in either case to do as was desired by the publisher. Why should not that cover it? Does that satisfy the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon if he would change the rate of postage, then, on second-class matter?

Mr. LANE. No; not necessarily.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then, of course, that would still permit them to transport this matter at 1 cent a pound, it costing the Government more than five and a half cents a pound to do it. It takes away the opportunity of the Government to have it transported by freight, and, of course, being carried at the same rate, the publisher would always insist upon sending it by the regular mail.

Mr. LANE. That might be. Then the Postmaster General under the law has no authority whatever to make a rate that is fair.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think not. I think the rate was fixed absolutely.

Mr. LANE. By Congress.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The statute fixes it. The department has no discretion.

Mr. LANE. It would be in the hands of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to strike out section 7 as amended.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not wish to be heard further, but I do wish to observe that the part of section 7 that I do not wish to strike out was an amendment, I think, presented by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] with relation to the civil service. My motion does not, and I do not want it to be understood that my motion to strike out relates to or strikes out that part of section 7 relating to the civil service offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply wish to say I expected to vote for the motion of the Senator from Arizona to strike out section 7, but with the amendments which have been made to it I do not think we ought to strike it out. Therefore I shall vote against the motion in that it is directed against the section as amended.

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion to strike out section 7.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is the Senator familiar with the last amendment that was adopted? If it were read, possibly the Senator would not wish to strike out the section. Perhaps the Senator would withdraw his motion.

Mr. ASHURST. I think I will stand on my motion.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like to have the section read before we vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be read as amended.

The Secretary read section 7 as amended, as follows:

SEC. 7. That so much of section 1 of the "Act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1912, which provides that the Post Office Department shall not extend or enlarge its present policy of sending second-class matter by freight trains, is hereby repealed, but no publication shall be sent by freight if such method of transportation results in unfair discrimination or in the undue delay of the delivery of such publication at its destination: Provided, That whenever the owner of any publication required by an order of the Post Office Department to be transmitted by freight believes that he is injured or discriminated against, he may apply to the Post Office Department for an opportunity to be heard; that upon such application being duly filed in writing, the order of the Post Office Department as to the transportation of such publication by freight shall be suspended, and the owner of such publication shall have opportunity for a full and fair hearing before said department. The testimony in any such hearing or proceedings shall be reduced to writing and filed in the Post Office Department prior to entering an order upon such hearing. That upon such hearing if the Post Office Department decides adversely to the contention of the publisher, such publisher shall have the right, within the period of 10 days after the date of the order of the Post Office Department made upon such hearing, to appeal to the United States court of appeals of the circuit within which such periodical is published, for a review of such order by said court of appeals, by filing in the court a written petition praying that the order of the Post Office Department be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Post Office Department and thereupon the said department forthwith shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record and testimony. Upon the filing of such transcript the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify the order of the department.

The jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals of the United States to affirm, set aside, or modify such orders of the Post Office Department shall be exclusive.

Such proceedings in the circuit court of appeals shall be given precedence over other cases pending therein and shall be in every way expedited.

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to strike out the section.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. He is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I am paired for the week with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS (when his name was called). Before announcing my own vote, I beg to announce that Senator KERN was called out of the Chamber on public business, and he is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] and vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and a transfer of my pair was arranged to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan]. My colleague and the Senator from Indiana being paired, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and myself are free to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HOLLIS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], from which I am excused on this vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], but I am relieved by the Senator from the pair on this bill, and I vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER.]

Mr. OLIVER. My colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is necessarily absent, and is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. If my colleague were present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the Senator from Arizona prevails, it carries with it the amendments that have been adopted to section 7?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 39, as follows:

So the Senate refused to strike out section 7 as amended.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I caught the reading aright of the amendment tendered by the Senator from Wisconsin, although I did not vote for it, I think it is inadequate; I think it does not reach the true solution; I think the time is too short; that it allows only 10 days for the preparation of papers and an appeal to the court. If in order, I move to strike out "ten" and insert "sixty," so that the party may have 60 days in which to take an appeal to the court.

Mr. HARDWICK. I raise a question of order—that the Senator having voted in the negative, he can not move a reconsideration, and that his suggested amendment can not be moved now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be done in the Senate—not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to offer an amendment to add a new section at the end of the bill, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amendment proposed by Mr. TOWNSEND: On page 58, line 22, insert the following:

SEC. 18. That, beginning with the 1st day of July next, following the passage of this act, the Postmaster General shall grant an indefinite leave of absence, together with an allowance of $600 per annum, to be payable monthly, to any person employed in the Railway Mail Service, the Rural Free Delivery Service, the City Free Delivery Service, and to post-office clerks and other employees in post offices who are in the classified civil service, except postmasters, who have become incapacitated from performing their duties through superannuation: Provided, That such indefinite leave of absence and allowance shall in no case be granted unless and until the employee has reached the age of 65 years and has been in the service 25 years or has become incapacitated as the result of an injury received in the discharge of duty.

That should it be found necessary to employ a substitute to fill the place of an employee who has been granted an indefinite leave of absence, said substitute shall be paid at the rate allowed for vacation work: Provided, That such assignment shall not interfere with the promotion of the substitute to appointment on the regular force when a vacancy occurs or when the force is increased and when said substitute is eligible for such regular appointment by virtue of his standing on the substitute list.

That the Postmaster General shall establish a board of retirement, to consist of not more than three members, to be selected from employees of the Post Office Department and the Postal Service, who shall serve without extra compensation, whose duty it shall be to examine all applications for the granting of such indefinite leaves of absence and to make recommendations based upon their findings to the Postmaster General for his guidance: Provided, That the Postmaster General shall have authority to appoint a physician to advise such board in making its recommendations.

That applications for the granting of indefinite leave of absence may be either voluntary on the part of the employee or may be recommended by the proper administrative or supervisory official.

That the Postmaster General shall immediately formulate and issue such rules and regulations as in his judgment may be best calculated to carry out the purpose of this act.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement that will not occupy over a minute or two. This provision has been reported to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of that body. It is a provision which has been inviting the attention of the Congress for a number of years. It was adopted, as I understand it, at the recent convention in St. Louis. It is a matter looking to what may seem to many of us to be a step in the right direction.

I recognize, of course, that it is subject to a point of order if anyone wishes to make the point, but I should like very much, inasmuch as it has been reported favorably to the House, to put it upon the measure, because I think a majority of the Senators are favorable to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me? Can the Senator give any good reason why the hundreds of clerks in the departments at Washington who are equally superannuated should not be treated precisely as the classes enumerated in the amendment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not. I can simply state that this is a bill which pertains to the Post Office Department, which is the largest department of the Government, and there are certain reasons why, perhaps, it should appeal with especial attention to this great department. We are at the present time dealing with the Post Office Department. Of course I recognize the fact if this step is taken it will be applied to all the departments of the Government in time, and now I see no reason why it should not so apply, if you are going to apply it to one. But now we are dealing with this bill and for that reason I offer it to include simply the Post Office employees.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, of course this is nothing more nor less than an elaborate civil-service pension plan that if extended to the 500,000 civil-service employees would require a greater amount than is now required for the pensions of those who have served in war. I am not opposed to a plan of civil-service retirement, the fund to be contributed by employees and safeguarded by the Government; but I am opposed to this sort of a plan, which is nothing more nor less than a pension.

I therefore raise the point of order that the amendment is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JONES. I offer an amendment as an additional section to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. —. That no letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind, or containing a solicitation of an order or orders for said liquors, or any of them, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier, when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, or association or other addressee, at any place or point in any State or Territory of the United States at which it is by the law in force in the State or Territory at that time unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors, or any of them, respectively.

Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished, either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed or to which it was carried by mail for delivery, according to direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed.

That whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in the Postal Service, shall knowingly send by mail or deliver any letter, package, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of the said liquors or any of them mentioned in the first section of this act, or containing a solicitation of an order or orders for said liquors, or any of them, when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, or association, or other addressee, at any place or point in any State or Territory of the United States at which it is by the law in force in the State or Territory at that time unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors, or any of them, respectively, shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisonment not more than one year, or both.

That any advertisement for such liquors, or any of them, stating the person from whom, or the firm or corporation from which, or the place where, or the price at which, or the method by which said liquors, or any of them, may be obtained, or containing the picture of a brewery or distillery or bottles or other receptacles designed to serve as an advertisement of such liquors, or any of them, shall be within the inhibition of this section.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment. It seems to me it is clearly a case of general legislation. if ever such a case occurred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, pursuant to the notice that I gave on Monday last of my intention to make a motion to suspend the rules prohibiting legislation of this kind upon general appropriation bills, I move that that part of the rule be now suspended for the purpose of offering this amendment and making it in order on this bill. It is paragraph 3 of Rule XVI.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes that the notice to which the Senator from Washington refers is in proper form, and therefore the question will be whether the rule shall be suspended for the purpose of receiving this amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia will state it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Under the precedents and rules as construed by the Senate it requires a two-thirds vote, does it not, to suspend the rule for such a purpose as this and in this manner?

The VICE PRESIDENT. One moment——

Mr. HARDWICK. I remember that on a proposition of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] at the last session of Congress relating to prohibition in the District of Columbia the precedent was made by the Senate, after quite a heated and protracted debate, that it required a two-thirds vote of the Senate to suspend the rules. That is my recollection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Can the Senator from Georgia produce any rule of the Senate which states that it requires a two-thirds vote to suspend a rule?

Mr. HARDWICK. I refer the Chair to the precedent made when the bill proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], proposing prohibition in the District of Columbia, was pending before this body, something like a year ago, on which the point of order was made that a two-thirds vote would be required for that purpose; and after protracted debate the question was submitted to the Senate, and it was then so ruled by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Was that the ruling of the Senate?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir; that is my recollection. I only state my recollection of what then transpired.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I was very clearly of the impression that it took a two-thirds vote to suspend a rule, but looking very hurriedly at the index of the Senate rules I see, under the title "Suspension of rules," this language:

One day's notice in writing required to suspend, amend, or modify any rule of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That notice has been given, and the question is on the motion. The Chair is not clear about the ruling of the Senate to which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] refers. If the Senate has ruled that it took a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules the Chair will enforce the ruling of the Senate.

Mr. HARDWICK. If I may be pardoned one other suggestion, I wish to say that at that time the point was made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and was to the effect that it required a two-thirds vote of the Senate to suspend the rules. It was in a case similar to that under which the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] now seeks to proceed that the point of order was made, and my recollection is that it was sustained by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator from Georgia is correct. While I thought the decision of the Senate was not in accordance with the rule, it is my recollection that that was the decision which was arrived at by the Senate at one time. It only applied, of course, to that time; but the Senate, by a majority vote now, could change that ruling, if they saw fit to do so, because there is nothing in the rules themselves which requires a two-thirds vote to adopt a motion to suspend the rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair finds that on January 13, 1915, the present occupant of the chair did submit that identical question to the Senate, and that by a vote of 41 yeas to 34 nays the Senate decided that it required a two-thirds majority to suspend the rules. If it be desirable to revert to that ruling the Chair will now rule that it takes two-thirds to suspend the rule; but, of course, there can be an appeal from the decision of the Chair on that question, when the Senate can reverse the ruling if it so desires.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I imagine we should not anticipate the necessity for an appeal from the decision of the Chair until we have ascertained what the state of the vote will be. I think if any such decision as that which has been stated was made by the Senate, it must have been a very arbitrary one or there must have been some feature immediately in connection with the question that justified that action. I think the Senate will suspend the rules by a two-thirds vote for the purpose of adopting the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish merely to say a word or two in reference to this amendment. I think everyone who has paid any attention to the reading of the amendment has seen the effect of it. It is practically an extension of the Webb-Kenyon law, which I think Congress passed over the veto of the President by a vote of about 3 to 1.

There are States in the Union which have adopted the principle of prohibition. In order to make that effective they have passed legislation prohibiting liquor advertisements of any kind or character. Under the law as it is now, the mails of the United States are being used to defeat the will of the people in these various States. Advertisements of various kinds, soliciting the purchase of intoxicating liquors, heralding the so-called merits of certain brands, and all that sort of thing, are being sent into the different States of the Union. The purpose of this amendment is to prohibit the mails of the United States from being used to practically defeat and nullify the laws that have been passed by the people within the sovereign States of the Union.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have this sort of case in mind: Georgia has State-wide prohibition by act of her general assembly, and yet in the very law which provides for prohibition, and which prohibits liquor advertising in the newspapers of the State, provision is made that every citizen of the State may buy and have on hand as much as 2 quarts of whisky a month. The business of selling liquor is lawful in some of the Commonwealths of the Republic, and the business is not outlawed by the Government of the United States in the country as a whole. If the General Assembly of the State of Georgia has permitted persons to buy whisky to a certain quantity and to keep it on hand to a certain quantity within the limits of the State, what justification is there for the proposition that people who are located where it is perfectly lawful to sell it should not be allowed to advertise and sell if it is not unlawful to do so in the territory where they reside?

Mr. JONES. Has Georgia prohibited such advertisements?

Mr. HARDWICK. In papers within the State; yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. That is sufficient. Of course, she can not go outside and prohibit advertisements in papers of other States, so far as that is concerned, and that is all this provision does. Where such advertisements are prohibited within the State, this amendment prohibits the sending of those advertisements within the State; and in the State of Georgia, if the laws of Georgia do not make the circulation of advertisements unlawful, then this amendment would not apply to Georgia; but if——

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator allow a question?

Mr. JONES. But if Georgia has done that, then this amendment recognizes the law of Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. Just one moment. Let us see whether it does or not. That is the point that has been bothering me a good deal, and my mind is not entirely settled on it. It is lawful in Georgia to buy a certain amount of liquor. Would you deprive a person by law from finding out where he can get liquor when he is not prohibited by law from buying it?

Mr. JONES. I would prohibit a person by law from finding out, contrary to the laws of the State, where he might buy it. If any Georgian wants to go somewhere to find out where he can buy it, without violating the laws of the State of Georgia, that is all right. I am not going to add to or take from the laws of the State of Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. The laws of the State of Georgia, of course, do not undertake, because they can not undertake, to deal in any way with the United States mails.

Mr. JONES. I am going to try to make the laws of the State of Georgia effective; that is all. I am not going to prohibit anybody in the State of Georgia from buying liquor in any way, shape, or form. I am simply providing by this amendment for the enforcement of the laws, or rather to prevent the United States mails from being used to evade the laws, of the State of Georgia.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator from Mississippi rose first, and I yield to him.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Washington that he answered the question propounded by the Senator from Georgia to the effect that he wanted to prevent the Georgians from finding out where to get intoxicating liquor. The thing I would accomplish is to prevent the whisky man from finding the whereabouts of the man in Georgia to whom he would sell the whisky. He is the man I would protect from the seductive tempter.

Mr. JONES. That is better put than I put it or could put it.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; the Senator wanted to do something more than the legislature has yet done.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the legislature has not succeeded in doing that, I want to say to the Senator from Georgia that I should like to do that.

Mr. HARDWICK. That may be.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am very much in favor of striking at this nefarious traffic in any way that would embarrass or hinder it. If we can not hit it in the face, I would shoot it in the back; I would sandbag it, hamstring it. I want to do everything within my power to discourage, to condemn, to outlaw, and render odious the liquor traffic. It is responsible for more murders, the perpetration of more outrages upon innocent, virtuous women—it has made more widows, orphaned more children, blighted more lives, frustrated more ambitions, sent more men to jail, has done more to fill the hospitals with the sick and the asylums with the insane—in a word, it has wrought more unhappiness and horrible havoc among mankind than all the other agencies for evil combined. If I had my way, Mr. President, I would close the door of every saloon on earth. I would restrict the manufacture and sale of alcoholic stimulants to scientific and mechanical purposes. I can not for the life of me understand how, with its record of wrongs, a civilized, Christian nation will permit this social cancer—the open saloon—to continue to eat into the very vitals of our civilization. To permit the Postal Service to be used as an agency for the promotion of this wicked business is a prostitution of a beneficent function of our Government which the American people will not long tolerate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I did not quite get a clear understanding of the amendment. Suppose a man in the State of Georgia took the New York World or the New York Sun or the New York Tribune or any other paper, and that paper should contain a liquor advertisement; would the amendment of the Senator from Washington prevent that paper going into Georgia?

Mr. JONES. It would?

Mr. TOWNSEND. And the same thing would be true in the case of magazines?

Mr. JONES. It would. That does not sound scary to me, although it may to some. I do not know as to that, but Senators would probably be surprised to find how many of the great daily papers of the country and the great magazines of the country are actually refusing to put into their columns advertisements of this character. The great newspapers of the country and the great magazines of the country are not opposing legislation of this kind; they are not asking for this privilege. I shall refer to that just a little bit later on.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to some of the methods that are being used. The State of Alabama, the State of the honored chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, has passed a law, as I understand, prohibiting liquor advertisements. I have here [exhibiting] a letter addressed by the Chattanooga Bottling Co., of Tennessee, to Mr. S. D. Weakley, 22 Ridge Park Avenue, Birmingham, Ala. I understand that Mr. Weakley is a very prominent citizen of Alabama, the head, I think, of a commission that had something to do with prohibiting this traffic in Alabama. I do not know just what his position is, but he is a very pronounced temperance man, and yet they sent this advertisement to him and got it into his home, and he could not have known what was in the envelope unless he could have judged by the stamp on the envelope and thrown it away. Not being content with sending one advertisement of this character to him, here is another one [exhibiting] that was sent to him, without anything on the envelope to indicate where it came from or from what sort of business it emanated, so that it would be sure probably to be opened, at any rate, before he could understand its contents.

Here is another one [exhibiting] addressed to another citizen of Alabama, without anything to indicate the business of the company or the firm sending it, but simply marked, "The White Company, post-office box 214, Chattanooga, Tenn." When it is opened, however, there are found all sorts of advertisements with reference to liquors, where they can be bought, their prices, how they may be sent, and all that sort of thing, in contradiction of the laws of Alabama. Then here, I think, is about the worst one of all. [Exhibiting.] Apparently these people want to catch everybody; they do not want to let anybody go; and if they find an address of some kind, a street number, and they do not know whether anybody lives there or not, or, if anybody lives there and they do not know who he is they send out a letter in an envelope addressed, "Occupant of," that is printed, and then they have written in the address, which in this instance, we will say, was "2802 Avenue H, Birmingham, Ala." Thus, they are sure to reach whoever may reside at that address, and by reason of the words, "Occupant of" being printed I have a right to assume that they have sent out a great many of these to addresses where they think people may reside, although they do not know who they are. That is the kind of thing that is being done in contradiction of the State law.

This, Mr. President, is not a matter of prohibition at all; it is a matter of respect for State law, and it is a question as to whether or not we will allow the United States mail to be used for the purpose of evading or nullifying the laws of a State made for the protection or, at least, what it thinks is for the protection of its own men, women, and children.

As to the proposition suggested by the question of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], I was really surprised to find how many of the great magazines of the country and of the newspapers of the country do not put these advertisements in their publications.

I have here a compilation bearing on this question that was made as of January, 1915. Letters were sent out to different magazines of the country asking their publishers with reference to such advertisements. These letters were sent out by a very respectable organization in this country, by the board of managers of the Temperance Society of the Methodist Church of the United States, and they state here the result of these inquiries. I am going to call attention to it briefly. They say here:

On November 14, 1908—

That is quite a number of years ago—

the Sunday School Times published a list of 40 magazines which at that time declined liquor advertising. The list included 10 magazines which are distinctly designed to appeal to women. The Temperance Society has just made a poll of all magazines, without, however, including women's publications, which it is presumed are all, or practically all, without such advertising.

That, certainly, is a very nice and very well-deserved compliment for the women of the country, it being assumed that their magazines did not publish these advertisements, and I submit that if they ought not to be published in a woman's magazine they ought not to be published in other magazines.

A second letter was sent to those who did not reply to the first, and so it is believed that the list below is very nearly complete.

This was done in January, 1915. They give some interesting comments which they received in reply to these letters:

For instance, Outing and Golfers—

Those are magazines—

say, "We will not continue to carry liquor advertising when current contracts expire"; and the advertising manager of the Strand Magazine says, "We have taken liquor advertising, but if I can get my way we will not in future."

"A very large percentage of the better magazines now refuse to print either whisky or beer advertising," comments Mr. Frank A. Arnold, president of the company which publishes the Countryside Magazine and Suburban Life, and he continues, "It has been found that magazines which adopt the policy of not printing whisky or beer advertising receive many times more favorable consideration by large national advertisers who wish to reach the best homes."

The Independent calls attention to the fact that it refuses advertisements of cigarettes, as well as whisky and beer, and the Youth's Companion makes the following emphatic comment:

"We do not think that the advertising of whisky or beer is half as injurious to the morals of the American people as the advertising of cigarettes and tobacco. Not only are the boys of this country taught to smoke cigarettes by the weeklies and monthlies of largest circulation, but the women are taking it up now. It's time that the Methodist Episcopal Church and others take some action on this great evil."

Such high-class publications as the Atlantic Monthly and Scribner's do not accept advertising of strong liquors, but make an exception in favor of beer, ales, and cordials. Quite a number of magazines which are not in the list below refuse whisky advertising but accept beer. Some of them accept only advertising of malt tonics, which they do not class as an alcoholic beverage. A very few evade a direct answer. For instance, one says, "The ——— Magazine"—

This organization was considerate enough not to give its name—

"prints very few advertisements of any kind"; and another, "No whisky or beer ads are in the magazine." But most of the replies are as frank as that of the American Sunday Monthly Magazine, which says, "Emphatically no!"

A few magazines express open hostility to the liquor traffic. One which accepts beer advertising says that each year several articles against the use of alcohol are given space. Physical Culture declares: "For over 15 years it has been the policy of the Physical Culture Magazine to attack gluttony, alcohol, tobacco, drugs, prudery, and muscular inactivity." And the publishers of Everybody's claim to be the pioneers in declining liquor advertising. They say:

"The Ridgway Co., publishers of Adventure Magazines and Everybody's Magazine, has for many years made it a definite part of its policy not to accept the advertising of intoxicating liquors. In fact, Everybody's Magazine was the first publication of its kind to take a decided stand on this question."

Now, Mr. President, without taking time to read further, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the list of publications refusing such advertisements.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will state his question of order.

Mr. STONE. I understand that the matter now before the Senate and which the Senate is proceeding to consider is the Post Office appropriation bill. While in the midst of that consideration the Senator from Washington interposes with a motion to suspend, modify, or amend a standing rule of the Senate——

Mr. JONES. Pursuant to notice given in accordance with the rules.

Mr. STONE. He offers to amend or suspend a standing rule so that he may offer an amendment to this appropriation bill, which otherwise would be subject to a point of order. The Senator from Washington says that he gave notice of his intention to make this motion to suspend this rule. The point I make, Mr. President, is that, while it is in order for any Senator to give notice that he intends at a certain time to move to suspend, modify, or amend any standing rule of the Senate, he yet gives notice of a purpose to present a question which is substantive, separate, and distinct in itself. Rule XL provides that upon notice a Senator may move "to suspend, modify, or amend" a rule, and he can do one of those things as well as another of those things; that is to say, he can move to suspend on notice; he can likewise move to modify; that is, to change the rule or to amend it.

The point I make is that when the Senate is considering a bill which is the unfinished business of the Senate, as in the present instance, it is not a time permissible under the rules to inject a separate and substantive proposition to change the rules, to amend the rules, or to suspend the rules—something wholly foreign from the business pending. Such a proposition must be taken up, whenever it is taken up, as a distinct and separate proposition, and must be taken up at an opportune and permissible time under the rules and practices of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me right there, in effect, before a motion to suspend the rules can be entertained, the Senator must move to take up that motion and lay aside the pending bill.

Mr. STONE. I was about to say, Mr. President, speaking in the line of the Senator's suggestion, that if this proposition is to be entertained by the Senate and we are to enter upon the consideration and discussion of a proposition to amend or suspend the rules of the Senate, and if the Senate determines to do that, then the effect will be to lay aside the unfinished business and to substitute this question in its stead.

It seems to me that a Senator can not inject himself into the consideration of a bill before the Senate, which is the unfinished business of the Senate, and thus compel the Senate to lay the pending business aside, and proceed to the consideration of another and wholly distinct substantive proposition. While the notice to suspend may be given, and at the proper time be considered, it can not be considered at a time and in a way that would have the effect of laying aside the unfinished business of the Senate. I hold that a Senator can not in this way put aside a bill the Senate is considering and substitute as the pending business a separate, distinct, and substantive proposition, and a mere notice of a purpose to do that will not cure the objection that I present. Of course the Senate can by a vote lay aside the unfinished business and take up anything else it pleases; but a single Senator can not by a mere motion accomplish that end without the concurrence of the Senate on a motion to lay aside the unfinished business and proceed to the consideration of the motion.

Mr. JONES obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before the Senator from Washington proceeds, if he will allow me, I should like to make one statement. I want to say that if a measure is before the Senate, in such shape that I can vote for it, to run these liquor advertisements out of the mails in States that have gone "dry," I will support it with a great deal of pleasure. I do not wish the question that I asked the Senator from Missouri to create any false view of my attitude. I think they ought to be kept out of the mails. I think it is simply inexcusable to flood temperance people with their liquor literature. I am in favor of running them out.

Mr. JONES. The question is here, and we will have a chance to vote on it one way or the other. I am glad to know that that is the position of the Senator from Georgia, though I was satisfied that it was.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a minute?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. It seems to me the trouble with this amendment is that it does not go far enough. It only reaches States where they have prohibited the publication of such advertisements, and I think that is confined to a very limited number of States. It does not cover what we call the "dry" States generally.

Mr. JONES. The Senator is correct about that. Of course, I should be glad to have it go further. I should be glad to prohibit any advertisement of this traffic going through the mails; but I thought we would put it in such shape that nobody could have any reasonable excuse for voting against it, and that we have here a greater question even than that of printing these advertisements and carrying them through the mails. We have here the question of the preservation of State law, or of stopping the use of the mails of the United States Government as an instrument to nullify State law; and that, I take it, is even a greater question than the prohibition of the printing and the publication of these advertisements.

With reference to the point of order, Mr. President, I do not question the sincerity of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], but I am not surprised that every technical objection that it is possible to present against the adoption of legislation of this kind should be presented. We have never yet had a proposition before Congress looking to restricting the liquor traffic and the liquor trade without being met upon every hand by every possible technical objection that could be presented, and we never yet have had anybody stand up on this floor and advocate and point out the merits of this traffic and this trade. The opposition to it has always been upon technical grounds.

When the question of order was up that has been referred to here with reference to the Senate declaring that a two-thirds vote was necessary to suspend this rule we discussed it for two days, and it was decided, upon a purely technical proposition, that we could not move to suspend the rules without, I think, a certain notice. I rather think the same question was presented then that is presented now by the Senator from Missouri, although probably not as a point of order. But when the District of Columbia appropriation bill, I think, was up in a preceding session the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] did just as I am doing here. He gave his notice of a motion to suspend the rules and offer that amendment—legislation just like this—and it was not then contended that he did not have a right to do it in the midst of the consideration of that bill, but it was contended that it was necessary that a two-thirds vote should be had in order to make that amendment in order. The Senate said, by its vote then, that it required a two-thirds vote, but the Senate did not say that it could not be taken up during the consideration of that bill.

Why, Mr. President, that is the only thing that makes this rule effective. The rule expressly provides that in a certain way you can suspend any part of the rules of the Senate. I gave my notice, according to the rule, that on the 27th day of this month, or as soon thereafter as possible, I would move to suspend the rule which makes out of order legislation upon an appropriation bill, and I stated the purpose of it. The purpose was to offer an amendment to the unfinished business; and it seems to me that it would practically nullify the rules of the Senate to hold that you can not do that. It is a part of the consideration of the unfinished business. It is a part of the unfinished business. That is all there is to it; and the rule says that if this rule prohibiting this legislation is suspended, then you can offer amendments of general legislation to general appropriation bills. What is the use of a rule permitting you to suspend the rule that says that you can not put general legislation upon a general appropriation bill if you must wait until the general appropriation bill is disposed of?

I can not think, Mr. President, that there is anything to the point of order raised by the Senator from Missouri. I shall not take the time to discuss it further myself. I do not claim to know very much about these parliamentary propositions, but it does seem to me that the rules of the Senate are perfectly plain; and so far as I am concerned, upon the point of order, I leave it to the Chair to decide.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Rule XL provides that—

> No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule or part proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof.

On the 26th of this month, while this appropriation bill was pending, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] presented the following notice:

> I hereby give notice that on Tuesday, June 27, or as soon thereafter as possible, I will move to suspend that provision of paragraph 3 of Senate Rule XVI, prohibiting any amendment proposing general legislation to any general appropriation bill, for the purpose of offering the following amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill now pending, to wit:
>
> "Add the following as a new section to the bill."

And the Chair understands that that is the amendment now offered.

The Chair has no doubt whatever that the purpose of this rule was to enable the Senator from Washington, if he undertook it in time, seasonably, to test the opinion of the Senate as to whether it would suspend this rule and permit him to offer his amendment. Unfortunately, however, this happens to be the same day on which the Senator gave his notice, and therefore the one day's notice has not been given.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, does the Chair construe that to mean a legislative day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can construe it as nothing else than as a legislative day. He knows no other day in these rules.

Mr. JONES. I do not think the rules mean that at all. I think they mean the calendar day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair——

Mr. JONES. I respectfully take an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just one moment. The Chair has no doubt that if the notice has been given in accordance with the rules—that is, if the day has expired—the Senator from Washington has a right to have a vote on the question of suspending the rule. The Chair will submit to the Senate the question whether this rule means the legislative or the calendar day.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the same phrase frequently carries a different meaning when considered in connection with the text where it is employed. In other words, we take notice of the purpose and the context and of a great many things to illustrate and illuminate the meaning of a phrase.

In this particular instance the term "one day's notice" was intended to cover a period of time, in my humble opinion, because otherwise it might be in the power of a minority to defeat the application of the rule in a meritorious case by this process of recessing. I think it was intended to allow a period to intervene between the motion to suspend the rules and the act of voting upon the proposition to suspend the rules. I think it is perfectly plain from the context that it was intended to allow that reasonable period of time.

As a substitute for the ordinary principle of parliamentary law, which requires a two-thirds majority to suspend a rule of any deliberative assembly, the Senate of the United States saw proper to adopt a standard of its own, and substituted a period of 24 hours for the ordinary rule of a two-thirds majority. It necessarily deemed it to be of importance that the rules should count for something, and that they should not be swept aside by a mere majority, upon a moment's notice, to serve the purpose of every particular situation that might suddenly arise. Experience in conducting the public business of deliberative assemblies had demonstrated the fact that a two-thirds majority of the body was a proper protection against hasty action. The Senate of the United States, when it came to frame its rules, substituted 24 hours' notice for it. The purpose evidently was to afford an opportunity to have the matter considered, to afford time to prepare to resist its adoption.

The Chair has now submitted the matter, uninfluenced by any expression of opinion on his part, which I must say would largely influence the result, and properly so. We will dispose of it now as it ought to be disposed of, as if we were making the rule in the first instance. We are either called upon to administer the text as we find it or to interpolate the word "parliamentary" or "legislative" instead of the ordinary meaning of "one day."

When terms are used they are supposed to be used in their ordinary sense, unless there is something in the reason of the thing, or the context with which they are associated, to give to them a different meaning. Now, listen:

No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing—

There is no intimation that there is any reason why it should be confounded with a proposition to adjourn or a proposition to take a recess. It is just simply "one day's notice." The ordinary meaning of "one day's notice" is one calendar day of the week, and without more that is all it means.

I submit that the policy as well as the text of this particular rule will sustain that view, which assigns to it the meaning of 24 hours.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it should submit the question, Has the notice been given in accordance with the rule? Those who think it has will vote "yea"; those who think it has not will vote "nay."

Mr. VARDAMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STONE. I wish the Chair would state the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, under the rules of the Senate, this being the legislative day of Monday, June 26, and this notice having been given on Monday, June 26, has the day expired under Rule XL, which authorizes the Senator from Washington to move to suspend the rules?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I will ask the Chair to state it in some sort of way so that we can understand that we are voting as to whether the one day mentioned in Rule XL means a calendar day or a legislative day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Whether it means a calendar day or a legislative day?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Those who believe that it is the calendar day will vote "yea"?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those who believe that it is the calendar day will vote "yea." Those who believe that it is the legislative day will vote "nay."

Mr. BORAH. That is it.

Mr. STONE. I did not understand the question that way. I understood the Chair to rule, when the question was up, upon his own suggestion, that this was the legislative day of Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the legislative day of Monday.

Mr. STONE. And therefore, the Chair said, the Senator from Washington had not given the required notice. That I understood to be the statement of the Chair in substance and substantially in words. So it seems to me the question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair be sustained? It is substantially the same thing, but we ought to have the question stated properly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair withdrew that ruling, and stated that in view of the doubt about it the Chair would submit it to the Senate. That is what we are voting on now. The Chair withdrew the ruling that the notice was not given, and said, in view of the doubt, that he would submit the question to the Senate. The question now is correctly stated: Does the rule apply to a calendar day or to a legislative day? Those who believe that it applies to a calendar day will vote "yea." Those who believe that it applies to a legislative day will vote "nay."

Mr. STONE. It might just as well be stated the other way—that those who believe that it is a legislative day should vote "yea" and those who believe that it is a calendar day should vote "nay." I am not, however, very particular about that. I do not care particularly just how the question is stated. I wish to say this, however, before the vote is taken:

The Senator from Washington indulged in some observations that are not uncommon or unusual, that all kinds of technical objections are always thrust in whenever any question looking toward prohibition is before the Senate. The significance of his observation is that Senators who are opposed to any such movement do not care to meet the issue directly, but prefer to avoid it by sidetracking it in the consideration of some technical question.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I wish to say that I am opposed to any form of national prohibition. I am thoroughly in favor of local option, by which I mean I favor the policy of permitting each State to settle this question for itself. I do not believe in and I oppose any policy through the operation of which it is intended to have the Federal Government take control of this question and settle local police, political, or moral questions peculiar to a State. I wish to leave all such questions to the States themselves, separately and individually. If the State of Washington or any other State desires prohibition in any form, modified or drastic in the extreme, and a majority of the people of the State so decide, I will go as far as any man should go or can go constitutionally to protect that State in the enforcement of its policy written into its constitution or statute laws.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the Senator believe that this amendment serves the cause for which he is speaking—to wit, the ability of States to settle the matter for themselves? This is designed to keep out of "dry" territory—States which have dedicated their territory to the "dry" cause—this kind of literature. That is the only purpose of the amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, to my thinking that is an extreme and unreasonable view of the subject. The State of Washington or the State of Idaho has an unquestioned right to adopt its own policy with respect to this matter. But, Mr. President, to say that a citizen of another State can not write a letter, can not in any way communicate with a citizen of Washington or of Idaho respecting whatever he has for sale or whatever he might feel disposed to recommend for sale, is to employ the Post Office Department—that great agency of the Government of the United States—ostensibly to aid in enforcing a State policy, but in fact to interdict and prohibit the free intercourse of citizens in different States.

Mr. President, as well might the State of Washington or the State of Idaho make it an offense for me, a citizen of Missouri, to go into one of those States and tell citizens resident there that a certain brand of wine made in my State was the best character of wine of that description and recommend it to them if they had occasion to purchase wine. I might be forbidden to go to the State of Georgia and tell a citizen of that State that the Stone-Hill winery, of Missouri, made a native wine of fine quality, and that if he desired to purchase such wine I would recommend it to him. You would as well prohibit me from exercising that privilege as to prohibit me from writing a letter upon the subject. I do not believe the policy of prohibition should go to that extent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This amendment does prohibit you, does it not?

Mr. STONE. This amendment would prohibit me from writing such a letter. It is carrying this idea to an extreme to which men ought not to permit themselves to go.

Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the immediate question as to whether the rule in question applies to a calendar day or a legislative day. I am not so particular about that. Whether the Senate decides it one way or the other, I can not see that any great injury will result, although I have no doubt the rule refers to the legislative day. I put my opposition to this matter upon broader grounds than that.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. I have been puzzled in relation to this question. As I understand, if the bill passes to-day, it passes as of the calendar day June 26, yet if we vote in favor of this resolution and it carries it is the legislative day June 28. One is legislative day, June 26, and the other is calendar day, June 28, and yet it is the same day of the week and month, as far as I can see. It seems to me as though it is a peculiar position for this body to occupy.

Mr. STONE. Let Senators vote as they please and from whatever standpoint they please. So far as I am concerned, I intend to vote upon the broad proposition that such legislation ought not to be enacted; that it is wrong in principle and entirely contrary to my construction of what a correct prohibition policy should be.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think we have on the statute books a law which prohibits the use of the mails for advertising lotteries or soliciting persons to purchase lottery tickets, it being unlawful to maintain a lottery or to deal in lottery tickets. Now, in some States it is unlawful to sell intoxicating liquor and it is also unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors. What difference in principle does the Senator see between the two cases?

Mr. STONE. What makes it unlawful to hold lotteries?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The law makes it unlawful.

Mr. STONE. What law——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It may be the law of the United States or the law of the State. It happens to be both in this instance.

Mr. STONE. The law of the United States and the department has declared that to advertise a lottery or to promote it would be in violation of the law of the United States, and advertisement of a lottery through the mails can be prohibited by an order of the Post Office Department. But that could not be done in this instance.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator is discussing it as a matter of principle——

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wondered how the Senator could see any difference in principle between a case where it is unlawful to sell lottery tickets or to solicit orders for lottery tickets and a case where it is made unlawful to solicit orders for intoxicating liquors, to adopt a provision that will assist in the enforcement of the law whether it happens to be passed by the Federal Government or by the State. I am unable to see any difference in principle between the two.

Mr. STONE. I can see a very wide difference between a policy of the State and a policy of the National Government. The State can adopt its own policy, which the National Government may refuse to adopt as its policy.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know, but here is a law of a sovereign State which forbids the sale of liquor and which likewise forbids, under a penalty, the advertisement or soliciting of orders for intoxicating liquors. The State obviously can not prevent by any law that it may pass the sending of such advertisements or solicitations through the mail from another State. The Federal Government is the only power which can deal with that subject. Why is it not right that the Federal Government in that particular instance should assist the States in enforcing laws of that character?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the State forbids the manufacture or sale of liquors within its borders, and that is all. Can it be said that the people of the State are so puerile, so helpless, so dependent that the National Government must thrust itself in and remove from their eyes and presence even the shadow of temptation to violate the State law? Presumably the State is capable of enforcing its laws. Every man knows that in many of the States liquors of various kinds are manufactured and sold. The people of Washington and of Utah know that. They may prohibit the manufacture and sale of it within their territory and under their sovereignty, but they can not prohibit its manufacture or sale in other States.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator permit a suggestion? The State of Washington not only passed a prohibition law but passed a law against advertising the sale of liquors.

Mr. STONE. Very well; they passed a law forbidding it to be advertised in the State of Washington. Can they forbid it to be advertised in the Courier Journal of Louisville or in the Tribune of New York or the Globe-Democrat of St. Louis? If the advertisement is entirely legitimate in those publications in those States where they are published, can we close the mail of the United States against sending these papers to their subscribers in Washington or Utah because, forsooth, some distillery in Kentucky has advertised in the Courier-Journal that the old Jordan whisky, or some other brand of whisky, is the best, or because the Anheuser-Busch Co., in St. Louis, advertised in one of the local papers that they manufacture the best brand of beer made in the world? Mr. President, if we had adopted the prohibition law in the District of Columbia, which some Senators here pressed with such energy, and will press again no doubt, and which may be adopted before a great while—I do not know—am I to be shut out of my Missouri papers—is the Senator from Massachusetts to have the mail closed against him, and are other Senators to be put in a position where it is made a crime subject to serious pains and penalties if the publishers mail their publications to me or you from St. Louis or any city, directed to you or me here at Washington? I do not read these advertisements; I will say I am at least that much of a prohibitionist; but I do read other things in those papers that are of both interest and value to me. Am I to be denied the privilege of having newspapers published in St. Louis or Kansas City sent to me here, because of some liquor advertisement in them; or is somebody in Washington or Idaho or Utah to be denied the right of getting newspapers from their old homes in the older States? The old home paper might have news of a death in the family, or something else of special interest. Should the citizen be deprived of his paper because an advertisement, legitimate in the State of the publication, relating to some liquor business had been inserted? This proposition to my mind is so absurd that I am astounded that it should ever have been presented to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was impressed with what the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] said in relation to the meaning of the rule when he referred to Rule XL. But in thinking of the position taken by the Senator and what effect if the Senate adopts that position it will have upon other rules of the body, I hesitate to vote for the position taken by the Senator from Arkansas. Rule XL provides that—

> No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing—

And so forth. Now, I want to call the attention of the Senate to Rule XIV, section 5, and I want the Senate to note that it is almost in the exact language of Rule XL as far as one day's notice is concerned. Clause 5 of Rule XIV reads:

> All resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

It has been the universal practice of the Senate since I have been a member of the body that whenever a resolution is offered in the Senate it lies over one day on an objection or it can be acted upon by unanimous consent immediately under this clause 5. It has also been the universal practice of the Senate that that has meant a legislative day.

If clause 5 of Rule XIV means a legislative day, and that has been our universal practice in this body, then I can not see why we should have put any other construction upon Rule XL, which is almost in the identical words. In other words, that the rule shall not be suspended except on one day's notice unless by unanimous consent——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SMOOT. In a moment. Just exactly the same as is found in clause 5 of Rule XIV. If the Senate now says that one day's notice as provided in Rule XIV means a calendar day, I can not see how we can hold that one day's notice in clause 5 of Rule XIV means a legislative day. I think the rules as they stand should be construed in one way. Whichever way we construe the one we ought to construe the other. Now I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If the Senator will yield a moment, there is no conflict between the fifth clause of Rule XIV and the contention I am very feebly putting forward, for the reason that in the enumerated order of business for the daily sessions of the Senate there is prescribed a period during which resolutions can be considered. Unless there is a morning hour that order of business is never reached, and consequently there is not any opportunity to consider it. It must lie over one legislative day, because there is no provision in the rule for its consideration at any other time. You look at the purpose, you look at the intent, you look at the thing to be accomplished.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that many times after the morning business is closed resolutions have been offered on the floor of the Senate. Of course they are offered by unanimous consent, but they always go over one day on objection. Now, if that day then closes with a recess and we meet on the morrow at 12 o'clock or at any other time, the resolution that went over that was offered after the morning hour can not be considered until another legislative day.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Or until that order of business has been reached again, which is only the legislative day.

Mr. SMOOT. That is only the legislative day.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. So it is exactly the same as Rule XL, as I see it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the legislative day is, of course, a purely artificial device, and wherever the word "day" is used without its being expressly stated that it has the artificial character given by parliamentary practice or the rules of the Senate, I think it must be interpreted in its ordinary way. One day's notice in all forms means a calendar day, and I have not any question that that means a calendar day here.

Now, as to Rule XIV, to which the Senator from Utah refers, I think that means a calendar day. It can not be taken up the next calendar day if we are in recess, because all business is excluded; but the motion to suspend the rule is not cut off in that way, because it is connected with the business which alone can occupy the attention of the Senate during the recess.

Applying the simple test as to the calendar day and the legislative day, suppose a bill goes to the President to-day from the Senate, does anyone suppose for a moment that the 10 days given him by the Constitution are calculated from June 26? Of course they are not. They are calculated from June 28. When the Constitution says 10 days it means 10 calendar days excepting Sunday.

It seems to me very clear, Mr. President, that where, as in this case, the proposed suspension of the rule can take place in connection with the business to which the recess confines the Senate it is in order, and that it is a calendar day.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think this question ought to be settled solely with reference to a correct construction of the rules. The vote here ought to be the unbiased and solemn judgment of the Members of the Senate as to what is the proper construction of the rule, and not whether they favor or do not favor the proposition advanced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

I have seen the rules too often wrenched from their true meaning because Senators wanted to accomplish a particular object and found the rules in the way. When the Senate comes to consider the main question advanced by the Senator from Washington, it will find plenty of food for prolonged debate and serious thought.

I do not intend to argue that question, but I do remark in passing that it will mean the exclusion from the mails of substantially every newspaper in the United States to-day, unless those papers see fit to cut out all advertisements of the character referred to or print special editions for circulation in different localities.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me? In the State of Georgia we have a statute forbidding liquor advertisements. The outside newspapers that come into Georgia now by mail obliterate their liquor advertisements and avoid violating the law. None of them come through the mails because of the liquor advertisements.

Mr. REED. Very well; that may be done. I only wish to say in passing that the proposition involves a great question and a great debate.

But I want to come to the question of this rule. I want to invoke the judgment of the Senators as to whether they want to break down their own rules. I make the bold affirmation, if the construction is placed upon this rule that is contended for by the Senator from Massachusetts, by the Senator from Washington, by the Senator from Arkansas, you will have wiped out the precedents of the Senate as they have been established for many years. You will have affected not only this rule but a number of other rules of the Senate.

There is nothing in the argument advanced. I say it with due and great respect that when the Constitution of the United States declares that the President shall sign a bill within 10 days that means 10 calendar days and not legislative days. Of course it means 10 calendar days. Of course any law or any rule that applies generally to the business of the country means calendar days. But we are a legislative body and make rules and precedents for our own government. Those rules and practices must all be considered and construed together, and I repeat I believe I can demonstrate that if the construction contended for with reference to rule 40 is accepted by the Senate, then we will find that all the practices of the Senate, or nearly all of them, have to be changed.

Let me call your attention to the fact that there is nothing in the argument here that has been so skillfully presented by the Senator from Arkansas that rule 14 there is not in conflict, for the reason, as he states, that there is no opportunity to bring forward a measure unless there is a morning hour.

Mr. President, why is there not a morning hour? If we are dealing with calendar days, then there is a morning hour every day, for the rules provide that there shall be a morning hour each day.

Now, let me go through these rules for a moment. I do not think we ought to deal with this question lightly; we ought not to deal with it as a question of prohibition but as one involving a rule of the Senate. If Senators will get their book of rules and follow me a little bit, I think they will be convinced that we are about to introduce chaos into our proceedings. Rule XL—the one in question—provides:

> No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule * * * shall be in order except on one day's notice in writing.

Of course, the question is what is meant by the term "one day's notice in writing." Let us go to Rule XXXVII where we find similar or equivalent language:

> When a treaty is reported from a committee, with or without amendment, it shall, unless the Senate unanimously otherwise direct, lie one day for consideration.

The term "one day" has always been held to be a legislative day. We have recessed from day to day for the very purpose of keeping some particular bill before the Senate, for the very purpose of shutting out other bills which might be passed during the morning hour, even though a bill ought to have the right of way as unfinished business. We have adopted the device of a recess for the very purpose of confining ourselves to the particular subject matter then under consideration; and by that process during the five years I have been a Member of this body we have kept one particular matter constantly before the Senate without any intervening morning hour, although a morning hour is provided for every day; and the morning hour must be given every day—not every calendar day but every legislative day.

Let me go to the question of the morning-hour proposition. If you will turn to Rule VII, paragraph 1, that rule provides that the Journal must be read "each morning"; and yet we do not read the Journal on any calendar day if on the preceding day we recessed, thus carrying the legislative day over into that calendar day. A week of actual time may elapse and the Journal not be read, because it is only to be read at the beginning of legislative days. This rule provides that after the Journal is read—

> The Presiding Officer shall lay before the Senate messages from the President, reports, * * * and other messages of the House of Representatives as may remain upon his table from the previous day's sessions undisposed of.

What is the "previous day"? Is it a calendar day or is it a legislative day? You all know that it has been treated as a legislative day; you all know that when we have recessed from day to day it has never been in order, upon the reassembling after the interval of recess, to lay before the Senate the bills referred to in paragraph 1 of Rule VII. On the contrary, such bills have always been held back until we reached another calendar day. If you wipe Rule XL out and say that its language does not refer to a legislative day as distinguished from a calendar day, you must construe in a similar way all rules containing similar language. Referring further to the morning hour, I call attention to Rule III, which provides that—

> The Presiding Officer having taken the chair, and a quorum being present, the Journal of the preceding day shall be read.

What, I again inquire, is meant by the term "preceding day" as here used? By uniform construction we have determined that "preceding day" means the preceding legislative day. If we recess over, we do not read the Journal until a new legislative day has arrived. We do not read the Journal each calendar day when we assemble; we only read it on the mornings of legislative days. The Chaplain does not even pray for us on the mornings of calendar days, but only on the mornings of legislative days. I call attention to paragraph 3 of Rule VII:

> 3. Until the morning business shall have been concluded, and so announced from the chair, or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the calendar shall be entertained by the Presiding Officer, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. President, there is your morning hour provided for—provided for every day. There is the rule that no business can be considered except such as comes up properly in the morning hour, and yet we have sat in this Senate for years and years, and when we have been recessing from day to day we have had no morning hour; we have had no call of the Senate on any of these matters, because it has been universally accepted that the legislative day continues, and that when it is in continuance there shall be no morning hour.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In other words, in the unbroken record of the Senate, the construction of a "day" has been treated as a legislative day.

Mr. REED. Unquestionably; and that applies not to one rule or to two rules, but it applies throughout the rules. We come again to Rule VIII, on page 11, and it provides:

> All motions made before 2 o'clock to proceed to the consideration of any matter shall be determined without debate.

Does that mean 2 o'clock of a legislative day or 2 o'clock of a calendar day? What does it mean? It has always been held that it meant 2 o'clock of the beginning of a legislative day; that it did not mean 2 o'clock of each calendar day, and we have run along sometimes recessing from one calendar day to another, so that the legislative day has lasted for weeks.

I call your attention now to page 19 of the rules, and here I challenge the attention of Senators to this provision:

> When a Senator desires to speak he shall rise * * * and no Senator shall speak more than twice upon any one question in debate on the same day without leave of the Senate.

Why, Mr. President, that is held not to be a calendar day, but a legislative day, and always has been so held. The Senate will remember that when we had one of these mild and gentle and interesting performances known as a filibuster going on here only at the last session of the Senate, in order to wear out and tire out certain Senators who were ambitious to defeat certain bills we recessed from day to day, so that if they spoke in filibuster they could only speak twice, and therefore they would be limited to their physical powers of endurance upon two occasions, whereas if we adjourned from day to day the right to speak twice would recur on each calendar day and these Senators could have continued speaking until the crack of doom. That is the reason we recessed instead of adjourning. There was nothing except that to be gained by recessing instead of adjourning. We could have adjourned at 6 o'clock in the evening until 9 o'clock in the morning as well as recessing, but we recessed for the purpose of holding that one day and keeping that one day as the day of the Senate. The Senate can not have two days at the same time; it can have but one; that is the legislative day, and it has always been so held.

I proceed very rapidly to call the attention of the Senate to page 27 of the Rules, to a part of Rule XXVI, and ask the Senate to note this:

All reports of committees and motions to discharge a committee from the consideration of the subject and all the subjects from which a committee shall be discharged shall lie over one day for consideration.

What is meant by the expression "lie over one day"? Has anybody ever had the temerity when we were recessing from day to day to try to call up as of right a matter that had to lie over one day? Every man in the Senate, no matter how he may vote on this question, knows that in contemplation of this rule "a day" has been considered always to be a legislative day.

Now, I call attention to page 33, Rule XXXVII, as follows:

When a treaty is reported from a committee with or without amendment it shall, unless the Senate unanimously otherwise direct, lie one day for consideration.

Again, has it ever been held that if the Senate were in session to-day and were to recess until to-morrow a treaty reported to-day could be called up to-morrow, because 24 hours of time had elapsed? If you ever establish the rule contended for, and the Senate is recessing from day to day, any Senator relying upon one day's notice and that the treaty will not be called up until the Senate shall meet on a new legislative day, may find himself at any moment deprived of his opportunity to report the treaty, for under the contention now made it could be called up at any time after a new calendar day had arrived. Such has not hitherto been the understanding of the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, does the Senator from Missouri mean to say that if a treaty were reported yesterday and a recess was taken until to-day a Senator could not now rise and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, and that then the treaty would not be in order?

Mr. REED. Unquestionably it would not be in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Where does the Senator get his authority for that statement?

Mr. REED. I get the authority for the statement in the uniform practice of the Senate to always construe the term "one day" to mean one legislative day. But the point I am now arguing is that if you place the construction upon Rule XL that is now contended for that same construction must be carried to all other provisions of the rules, for there is no difference in the language; there is no difference in the situation; there is nothing to warrant us in saying that the language of Rule XL should be construed differently than similar language employed in other rules; and therefore if you place the construction upon Rule XL which is now asked you will thereby carry that construction to every other rule where similar or equivalent language is employed. That is the point I am making.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The point of my inquiry was to ascertain whether or not the Senator had in mind any instance where the thing had occurred?

Mr. REED. I never heard of it being attempted; but I call the Senator's attention—and the Senator is not only a good lawyer but I think a great lawyer and a very fair man—to the matter of motions to reconsider. A motion to reconsider must be made, I believe, within two days. How has that been construed? Has it not always been held that a motion to reconsider could be made within two legislative days, and that the right did not lapse at the end of two calendar days? I have in mind, although I can not recall the particular questions, two or three instances since I have been here where motions to reconsider have been made when several calendar days had expired, but where not more than two legislative days had gone by, and the motions were entertained by the Senate without question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think, if the Senator propounds that in the form of an inquiry, that perhaps the Senator is right that it has been so held in that particular instance, but I think that is from the necessity of the case, because we are maintaining this fiction—and it is a pure fiction—of the legislative day, and there is no opportunity of presenting such a motion, because the motion is not in order. It is the same case as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has stated. The Senate had taken a recess, instead of adjourning over, and the effect was to cut out the morning hour and therefore morning business was not in order, not because the day had not elapsed but because that particular business was not in order at the time.

Mr. REED. But, Mr. President, the Senator omits the very test of his own argument. Why is the morning hour not in order? The language of the rule is that there shall each day be a morning hour; and if we are to adopt the doctrine that "each day" means what it ordinarily means when we are dealing with matters outside of the Senate, then there is no power in the Senate under its rules by recessing to cut off the morning hour. Recessing has the effect of extending the then present day into the next calendar day and continuing the then present day until the Senate shall bring it to a close by adjournment. I ask the Senator to bring to bear on this question his fairness and his judicial temperament. Here is a rule that provides that we shall have a morning hour each day. If that means "each calendar day," then you can not cut off the right of a Senator each calendar day to do anything that is proper under the morning-hour rule; but we have always held, it has been the consistent and universal practice, that the Senate can recess; and when it does recess, it has not cut off anybody's morning hour, but it has continued its present day of work into different hours that happen to run into another calendar day, but they are at the same time a part of the original legislative day; but just as soon as there is an adjournment instead of a recess, then comes the absolute right to the morning hour, for a new Senate day has arrived.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, if the Senator will permit me, the theory of it, as I understand, is that when we have taken a recess instead of an adjournment, to all intents and purposes it is the same as if we had continued in session. That is, if we were to remain in session through the night until to-morrow, taking no recess at all, it would be a continuous proceeding.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And there would be no opportunity for the intervention of the morning hour.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, it is a continuous day when we take a recess, in the same sense.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I call the Senator's attention to this——

Mr. REED. Will the Senator pardon me? And it is a continuous day not only with reference to the morning hour when we remain in session, but it is equally a continuous day when we recess. The Senator has put his finger upon the right nerve, as he usually does. I want to restate the case.

The Senate meets this morning. It does not adjourn or recess at 6 o'clock to-night, but it remains in session through the night, and on up until 2 or 3 o'clock to-morrow. It is one continuous session. That act of remaining in session continuously carries the legislative day of to-day over into the calendar day of to-morrow. Now, that being true, if that is what is meant, then every time we use the term "one day" in these rules we must refer to the days of the Senate, not the days of the calendar; to the days under our rules, not the days according to the ordinary method of computation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, will the Senator permit me to call his attention to what I conceive to be the distinction? In construing all of these rules, as in construing a law, we must pay some attention to the purpose of the rule.

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What was the purpose of the rule which requires that a motion to suspend a rule should not be in order except on one day's notice? It was to prevent the Senate being taken by surprise. It was to give the Senate an opportunity for reflecting upon the matter, so that it could act intelligently and after reflection upon it. Therefore it seems to me the purpose of the rule is completely served when the time has elapsed, when the necessary number of hours to constitute the day have gone by.

Mr. REED. I shall show the Senator——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, just one other suggestion.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to answer that particular suggestion now, or does he desire to continue?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wanted to put the two together and have the Senator answer both.

Mr. REED. Very well; I will do the best I can.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, take another illustration. Suppose we had entered into a unanimous-consent agreement on Saturday last, as we frequently do upon matters of legislation, that on Wednesday, June 28, at 4 o'clock p. m., we should proceed to vote upon this bill and all amendments pending, through the parliamentary stages to the final disposition? Now, we met on Monday and took a recess over until the next day. We met on Tuesday and took a recess over until Wednesday. So, if the Senator's contention is correct, so far as the Senate is concerned, there is no such day as Wednesday. To-day in the Senate is Monday, and Wednesday never arrives, because if we take a recess over to-day we are still on Monday.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, wait. Would the Senator say that if that were the condition, when 4 o'clock came to-day we could not proceed to execute the unanimous-consent agreement, notwithstanding the fact that it was the calendar day of Wednesday, and not the legislative day of Wednesday?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator asks me two questions. I will answer the last one first, and then I will answer the other one if I can remember it that long; and if I do not, I will ask the Senator to repeat it.

Upon numerous occasions when unanimous-consent agreements have been asked, as referred to in the Senator's illustration, I have heard it insisted in the Senate that the term "calendar day" should be used, and that for the very reason of avoiding the difficulty suggested by the Senator's illustration. Besides, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that he is again going outside the rules and the construction of the rules and appealing to a matter of ordinary outside procedure, where the ordinary and usual terms of language or of agreement must be followed.

For instance, as I said a moment ago, of course, when the Constitution of the United States provides that the President must sign a bill within 10 days if it is to become a law, it means 10 days of calendar time. It does not mean 10 days of legislative time. The President has no legislative day; the country has no legislative day; but we have a legislative day. So when the Senator puts his illustration with reference to an agreement of the Senate to vote on Wednesday, the 28th of the month, I would say, in all fairness, that that would mean Wednesday, the 28th; and yet if we carried matters over by recess, a serious question might arise as to whether or not that is what is meant. Hence I have seen it repeatedly urged in the Senate and insisted upon that there should be inserted in those agreements the term "calendar day."

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Now I want to answer the other question of the Senator, if the Senator will kindly recall it to my mind.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The other question related to the purpose of the rule.

Mr. REED. Now I come to the purpose of the rule. I am not arguing this question because I am on one side or the other of this liquor question, but I hope that the Senate of the United States when it is called upon to construe its rules will do it so as to maintain the rules. If we do not so act, then we have no security in all our legislation.

There is an easy way to get this prohibition question before the Senate, and get it here legitimately. Arguments of Senators who want to put this matter through because they happen to favor or not favor prohibition, and do it by riding roughshod over the rules, remind me of the arguments of certain blatherskites who infested this country a few years ago, who said if the Constitution of the United States stood in the way of what the people wanted, let the Constitution be brushed aside, whereas every man who loved human liberty and knew the fundamentals of liberty knew that in a constitutional government the way to preserve the liberties of the people was to preserve the Constitution, and if a necessity for change existed to make that change in the manner and form provided in the Constitution.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. I will yield as soon as I answer this question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I only wanted to suggest to the Senator that I trust those of us who favor prohibition only remind the Senator of the blatherskite to whom he referred because we are so different?

Mr. REED. Oh, nothing that I said could be construed as applying that term to the prohibitionists. I said that the argument presented upon the basis that men were in favor of a certain proposition or against it, in utter disregard of the rules, reminded me of the logic of the gentlemen who wanted to disregard the Constitution whenever it stood in the way of their desires. I am not referring to prohibitionists, nor to my friend who has just interrupted me, as blatherskites. He knows that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to ask the Senator a question with reference to the rules. I agree with him that this question ought to be settled in conformity with the rules. The interpretation of a rule is the question at issue, and should not be clouded or confused with any other question.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator withhold his question until I finish answering the other?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I shall, with pleasure.

Mr. REED. Then I shall be glad to yield.

Now, the Senator from Utah asked, What is the purpose of the rule that one day's notice shall be given? The purpose undoubtedly is to give the Senate the time, the opportunity, and the warning necessary for mature deliberation, proper consideration, that notice which always accompanies or ought to accompany important changes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. Just a moment, until I answer this question. I have tried to answer it several times. When I have done so, I will yield to anybody.

Now, what is that notice? Of what value is a notice given during a legislative day, with other business pending, with unfinished business there demanding attention, with the mind of the Senate centered upon that unfinished business? What opportunity is given for that mature consideration or that complete debate that ought to be had with reference to such an important matter? I undertake to say that this is the first time in the history of the Senate when, during the pendency of a bill, that bill being the unfinished business, without any morning hour, any man ever undertook to amend the rules; and I challenge anybody to find a precedent for it in the more than 100 years that this body has existed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. REED. Just one minute, until I finish answering this question.

On the other hand, if you construe this to mean the legislative day, what happens? The notice is given. There comes the morning hour, the time for the debate of just such questions, when consideration of matters of this kind can properly come before the Senate no matter whether there be pending unfinished business or not. Hence the very question that the Senator asks answers itself—the spirit of the rule requires that we shall have a full legislative day's notice, so that a day may come when we shall have a morning hour and opportunity to properly consider the matters.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me just there, before he passes from that point, to make a suggestion?

Mr. REED. I promised to yield to the Senator from Mississippi. Very well. I will yield to that Senator in a moment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is very much in what the Senator now says, if I understand him; and if I understand him, he is arguing, not the question of time, but the question of order. If the Senator would insist, as his colleague insisted, that this motion was not in order, then I think his argument would have a great deal of weight; because I confess that, notwithstanding the fact that one day's notice has been given and the one day has elapsed, I am in very grave doubt as to whether, pending the consideration of the unfinished business, it is in order to take up this other item of business. But that is a very different question from the question of the lapse of time.

Mr. REED. Oh, no. I have argued to very poor purpose if I have not made it plain that I am arguing that a motion of this kind is now out of order. It is out of order for two reasons, however. One reason is that timely notice has not been given. The other reason is that there is pending unfinished business, and that this new and foreign business can not be thrust into the unfinished business. I call the attention of the Senate to that point, and I should like to have somebody on the other side answer it, if he can. We now have pending the unfinished business. No other business is in order before the Senate; and while that unfinished business is pending, a Senator undertakes to amend the rules of the Senate. He might just as well undertake to pass a separate bill in the Senate.

That is one reason. The other reason is the question of notice.

Now, Mr. President, I have tried as well as I could, in somewhat voluminous language, to answer the Senator's questions, and as courteously, of course, as he asked them. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was about to ask the Senator from Missouri this question. The Senator understands that the purpose of the notice required by Rule XL is to put the Senate on guard and prevent any improper or irrelevant amendment to a bill of this character being put upon it in the heat of debate, and without due consideration. Now, suppose the resolution offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] had been proposed at 11 o'clock this morning, and an adjournment had been taken immediately after it was proposed, and the Senate had convened again in 30 minutes, would that have been the notice required by Rule XL? A legislative day would have passed, and another one would have begun. Does the learned Senator think that would be the notice contemplated by Rule XL?

Mr. REED. I can only answer that by saying that in my opinion the legislative day would govern, and not the period of 24 hours.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator understands that that is not the purpose of the rule; and he is putting, it seems to me, a very strained construction upon it, an irrational construction, it seems to me, with all due respect to the able Senator.

Mr. REED. I do not understand that that is not the purpose of the rule. I understand it to be the exact purpose of the rule to give one day's notice, and that that one day means a legislative day, and for this reason, if for no other—that it is only at the beginning of the legislative day that we have a morning hour, when matters of this kind can be effectively discussed, unless, of course, they are afterwards called up on motion. When there is pending business, and the pending business is not laid aside, then there would be no opportunity whatever for discussion.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Missouri is doubtless much more familiar with the rules of the Senate than I am. I should like to know what particular rule of the Senate provides what shall constitute a legislative day?

Mr. REED. There is no rule.

Mr. WORKS. Then by what authority, so far as the rules are concerned, does the Senate command the sun to stand still by simply taking a recess instead of an adjournment, and constitute half a dozen days one day? Where is the authority for that in the rules?

Mr. REED. I think the Senator came in since that question was under discussion.

Mr. WORKS. That may be.

Mr. REED. It was under discussion very briefly, and it was well stated by the Senator from Utah. If the Senate instead of adjourning at 6 o'clock to-night should continue in session all night, and continue on until to-morrow, it would still be the legislative day of June 28; likewise if the Senate, instead of adjourning, recessed, it would be as though the Senate had remained in continuous session.

Now, I say this to the Senator, whether there be a positive rule or not in the book, the Senator knows ever since he came to the Senate, and he came, I believe, at the same time I did, we have had legislative days, and it has always been held when we have recessed from day to day that each succeeding calendar day, no matter how, was a part of the preceding legislative day, and that the legislative day could only be brought to a close by an adjournment. I have already called attention to this, and I repeat it. The Senator will remember that in the filibusters which we have had, and we have had two or three, in order to stop them we have recessed from day to day instead of adjourning, so that the rule that a Senator could speak only twice on the same day would be applied to the entire debate upon the question.

Mr. WORKS. I was present when that took place. I was not asking the Senator what the custom of the Senate has been; I was asking for the rule. There is no such rule that I have been able to find.

Mr. REED. I have not been able to find any written rule. I will put this to the Senator; he is a good lawyer and he has been a judge and a good judge: Is there anything stronger than an unbroken precedent that has been obeyed for a hundred years? Does it not grow into law and become a part of the warp and woof of the law of any country, and especially of any body like this? Is not the construction which legislative bodies have placed upon their own rules for many years taken as controlling by the courts. Is not the construction which even executive officers have placed upon statutes which they have followed for a long period of time not regarded as, if not controlling, worthy of great consideration if the language of the law be at all doubtful? Will the Senator now undertake to say that in the midst of this debate we ought to wipe out this precedent and say to the Senate it can not have legislative days; that it can have only calendar days; that it must have a morning hour every morning; and that we are to do this simply to enable the Senator from Washington to get his bill tacked on to an appropriation bill where it does not naturally belong?

While I have the floor I make this point of order, Mr. President, in addition to the one made, that there being now pending before the Senate a bill which is the unfinished business of the Senate, no other business can at this time be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled on that point, and ruled against the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has answered pretty much everything else but what I asked him. He has appealed to the specific terms of the rules of the Senate to establish the position for which he contends. Now, it turns out that there is no rule of the Senate on the subject. There is no rule of the Senate which provides for legislative days. There is no rule of the Senate which distinguishes between a legislative day and a calendar day. The truth about it is the legislative day of the Senate is a pure fiction, founded upon nothing but the custom of the Senate. No matter how long that custom may continue, it can not by any means change the specific terms of the rules of the Senate which recognize absolutely nothing but a calendar day. There is no recognition in them anywhere of the existence of a legislative day, and in order to reach that conclusion we must go back to the custom of the Senate respecting matters of that kind. We can not appeal to the rules of the Senate itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The question is——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I want an opportunity to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. If I were called upon to construe the words "a day" as found in the rule, without prior construction, I would hold that it meant a calendar day, because that is the natural meaning of the term "a day." But we have adopted a different construction in the Senate. As the Senator from Missouri has shown, we open our sessions every day by prayer. That is the rule. But if the legislative day has not been finished, we do not do it. We read the minutes of our proceedings at the opening of each day's session, but if it is the legislative day we do not do it. We allow only two speeches during a day upon the same subject matter. If it is a legislative day, it has always been the rule since I have been here to construe it as one day and to place the limitation.

Mr. BRYAN. The chairman of the committee has indicated his purpose in order to get out of this situation not to undertake to pass the Post Office appropriation bill, but to adjourn at the end of to-day's session so that there can be no question about the amendment of the Senator from Washington. In view of that I ask the Senator from Georgia if he will not suspend his argument upon the rules so as to give the Senator from Alabama a chance to lay aside the Post Office appropriation bill by unanimous consent in order that we may take up the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Florida has finished what I had to say. I had completed it with the exception of the suggestion that the solution of the question is to adjourn when we finish the day's session and do something else until that time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent that the Post Office appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. HOLLIS. Before proceeding with the fortifications appropriation bill, will the Senator from Florida permit me to call up the conference report on the rural-credits bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Very well.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the report.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to provide for the investment of postal savings deposits, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask that the report be adopted.

The report was agreed to.

South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 15158. An act to amend the Judicial Code, to fix the time when the annual term of the Supreme Court shall commence, and further to define the jurisdiction of that court was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 16093. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of drainage assessments on Indian lands in Oklahoma" was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 16677. An act extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia and for the payment of pensions under certain contingencies was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14303, the fortifications appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14303) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be read for action on the amendments of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks that the formal reading be dispensed with and that the bill be read for action on the committee amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Fortifications and other works of defense," subhead "Engineer Department," on page 3, line 1, after the words "torpedo wharves," to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$225,000," so as to make the clause read:

For protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications for which there may be no special appropriation available, and of structures for the torpedo defense of the United States and for maintaining channels for access to torpedo wharves, $225,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 17, after the words "torpedo wharves," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$254,060," so as to make the clause read:

For construction of mining casemates, cable galleries, torpedo storehouses, cable tanks, and other structures necessary for the operation, preservation, and care of submarine mines and their accessories, and for providing channels for access to torpedo wharves, $254,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Armament of fortifications," on page 4, line 11, after the word "arsenals," to strike out "$2,700,000" and insert "$6,000,000," and in line 15, after the words "not to exceed," to strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$3,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $6,000,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $3,000,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 20, after the word "arsenals," to strike out "$1,284,500" and insert "$1,764,500," and in line 23, after the words "not to exceed," to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$3,500,000," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $1,764,500: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $3,500,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 19, after the word "arsenals," to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$480,000," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Submarine mines," on page 7, after line 10, to strike out:

For the procurement of the exclusive rights of John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co., of New York (Inc.), to their discoveries and inventions in the art of control by radiodynamic energy of the movement of water-borne carriers of high explosives, in accordance with a proposal heretofore made by said John Hays Hammond, jr., and said company, known as proposal Z, $750,000: Provided, That said sum shall not be paid unless a report of a board of three Army and three Navy officers, to be appointed by the President, shall be favorable to the acquisition of such rights, such report to be made after a demonstration of the application of the said system to the control of torpedoes; and, to provide for such demonstration, $30,000 of the sum so appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose, may be applied to the expense of conducting the same, exclusive of the services of said Hammond, which services shall be rendered free of charge, the amount so applied, and which shall be immediately available, in the event of the purchase of such rights, to be considered as part payment of the purchase price of the same.

The Commissioner of Patents is authorized and directed, in the event of the entrance by the Government into a contract with the abovementioned parties for the purchase of such rights in all instances where it would grant patents to John Hays Hammond, jr., or to the Radio Engineering Co. upon request of the United States to issue said patents to the United States, and, in the event of said contract being made, the Commissioner of Patents is further authorized and directed to keep applications for such patents in the secret archives of the Patent Office, not open to disclosure even in cases of interferences.

For procurement and installation of one radiodynamic torpedo unit, $417,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be so expended unless the United States shall first acquire as heretofore provided the rights of the said John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York.

And to insert:

For the investigation of the discoveries and inventions of John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.), in the art of control by radiodynamic energy of the movement of water-borne carriers of high explosives, $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That such investigation shall be made by a board of three Army and three Navy officers, to be appointed by the President, who shall report to Congress as early as practicable upon the advisability of acquiring the exclusive rights to said discoveries and inventions.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the amendment be passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BRYAN. This is probably the only disputed item in the bill.

Mr. WEEKS. We can not on this side hear what is being said.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Oklahoma asks that the amendment be passed over temporarily.

Mr. WEEKS. I shall not object if we can have order here.

Mr. BRYAN. We will return to it in a few minutes. I understand it is the only disputed amendment in the bill.

Mr. GORE. I understand we will reach it in a few moments. I want to speak to the chairman of the committee and the Senator in charge of the bill in regard to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Board of Ordnance and Fortification," on page 15, after line 15, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. The services of skilled draftsmen, and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, may be employed in the office of the Chief of Ordnance in Washington, D. C., to carry into effect the appropriations made in this act for the armament of fortifications, to be paid for from such appropriations to the extent of $50,000 in addition to the sum of $140,000 authorized to be expended for similar purposes in the office of the Chief of Ordnance by the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, approved May 10, 1916: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall report in his annual estimates to Congress the number of persons employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 4, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. Not to exceed $5,000 of the funds appropriated by this act for the armament of fortifications may be expended for the rental of suitable space in Washington, D. C., or for the alteration or repair of any available building owned by the Government, for the use of the drafting force of the office of the Chief of Ordnance engaged in the design of matériel appropriated for in this and other acts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 12, to change the number of the section from 3 to 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 14, to strike out:

SEC. 4. That except as expressly otherwise authorized herein no part of the sums appropriated by this act shall be expended in the purchase from private manufacturers of any material at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government, or, where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 24, to change the number of the section from 5 to 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We now turn back to the amendment of the committee to strike out from line 11, on page 7, to line 22, on page 8, and to insert the matter included from line 23, on page 8, to line 7, on page 9. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STONE. What is the amendment?

Mr. BRYAN. I will explain it to the Senator. The House provision provides for the purchase of the invention of Mr. John Hays Hammond, jr., to control explosives by wireless, conditioned only upon a favorable report of a board of Army and Navy engineers, and it appropriates money to buy the invention, with all the rights of the inventor, in the event the commission reports favorably upon it, and provides $30,000 to enable the commission to make an investigation. The Senate committee amendment strikes out the authority to purchase the invention, but makes the appropriation of $30,000 for the investigation. The question in the mind of the committee was whether it was best to go ahead and purchase the invention before further investigation.

I may say that the matter has been under consideration for quite a while. The Army engineers have given considerable study to it. They have seen the experiment at Gloucester, I believe, where Mr. Hammond was carrying on the experiments, and without exception they are in favor of purchasing the invention, one of them stating, however, that, in his opinion, it would be impossible to keep the means of controlling torpedo boats a secret; the others believing, at least some of them, that it might be done.

The Navy has not passed upon it at all. Of course, the great object is to use this invention on the seacoast, where it will be operated from the shore, but it is claimed that these torpedoes or vessels can also be operated by aeroplanes, and that that experiment has been made, and successfully made.

There was a very exhaustive hearing by the House committee. The House passed the provision found in the bill, but, in the opinion of the Senate committee, the matter was not so far beyond dispute as to justify us in making this expenditure without further investigation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I was a member of the subcommittee which considered this measure, and at the time it was reported I reserved the right to vote against the action of the committee when it came before the Senate. This proposition was thoroughly investigated by the House committee, and its records are very complete in reference to it. It is a matter of serious importance, in my opinion, and the House provision should not be stricken out except after full understanding.

I am convinced that this invention is one which the Government of the United States can not afford to lose. That it is a really useful invention there can be no doubt, it seems to me. It was owned by Mr. Hammond and his associates, and he has a right to dispose of it as he sees fit. There is no doubt but that he could dispose of it to his great advantage to a foreign Government. I believe, however, that he is not actuated entirely by mercenary motives and that he, believing that he has a great invention, desires that his own country shall have it. His price is not one about which there has been any haggling; there has been no suggestion, to my knowledge, that his terms are unreasonable. If the device is what he claims for it, and what Army officers who have seen it work say it is, surely it is worth to the Government more than he asks for it. I am satisfied the he could obtain a much larger price for it than that for which he has offered it to the United States.

The House provision is to the effect that a board composed of three Army officers and three officers of the Navy, to be appointed by the President, shall investigate and pass upon its worth to the United States. It requires the approval of this board before the contract of purchase is completed. The Government can use $30,000 for the purpose of determining its worth, and that sum is to be deducted from the purchase price, if the United States concludes to buy it.

Now, it seems to me that in these uncertain times, in these times when we are preparing for defensive war, the United States Government can not afford to neglect an opportunity of this kind. We do not need to buy it unless the experts of the Government decide, after investigation and experimentation, that it is for the benefit of the country. The price, I repeat, is not questioned as to its fairness. It is a proper price. We can not afford to allow Mr. Hammond to turn it over to another Government. Perhaps he would not do so; but he has a right to sell it; and he would be doing only what the ordinary citizen would do if, having such an invention as this, he should dispose of it in the world for the highest market price. He, however, offers it to the United States.

His terms are extremely favorable. Out of the purchase price the Government is permitted to reserve $30,000 with which to satisfy itself that the device is what it is claimed to be. And what is the Senate provision? Why, it appropriates the same amount of money, namely, $30,000, with which the same Government board is to investigate the invention, if the owners will permit, but without any agreement to buy and without any assurance that if it can and does buy the price will be as low as that now offered. If the Government is going to investigate this device with a view to purchase, then surely the House provision is the wiser one.

Therefore, Mr. President, I feel, as I stated to the committee, that the Senate should not agree to the Senate amendment, and I hope it will be defeated.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, Gen. Scott made a statement before the House committee in reference to this matter. He was asked by Mr. SHERLEY:

Mr. SHERLEY. General, to what extent did they consider the military value? I mean, how valuable do you consider the ability to do the things indicated here from a military standpoint?

Gen. SCOTT. I could not estimate it in money.

Mr. SHERLEY. You think it is such a far step over any defensive or offensive methods now possessed as to be of inestimable value?

Gen. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. Did the board consider the question of compensation as suggested in the proposal of Mr. Hammond as to its reasonableness?

Gen. SCOTT. We considered it reasonable; yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The board made no investigation as to the expenses that Mr. Hammond had been put to?

Gen. SCOTT. No.

Mr. SHERLEY. They accepted his statement touching that matter?

Gen. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. And that was one of the elements that brought the board to the consideration of the reasonableness of the offer he made?

Gen. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the board consider that there has been sufficient investigation of the invention to satisfy it that the claims made by the inventor are warranted?

Gen. SCOTT. We believe that they are warranted.

There is further testimony here, which I shall not take the time to read, all to the same effect, by Secretary Garrison, Gen. Kingman, the Chief of Engineers, and a description of the test by Lieut. Decker. The House went into the matter with extreme thoroughness.

If the boat is a success, the House provision will pay for it. If the boat is a failure, it will not cost any more than the sum provided by the Senate committee provision. All that the Senate provision effects is to make delay, and nothing else in the world. If the boat is a failure, the $30,000 is spent under either provision. If the boat is a success, we want it; and, if we want it, we want it now. There is no sense in waiting a year if this boat is a success. If it is not a success, it will not cost the Government any more to adopt the House provision than to adopt the Senate provision. If it is a success, as I believe it will be, then under the House provision we get it, and we get it now.

This is not a time, as it seems to me, to engage in the somewhat familiar practice of pushing an appropriation over, having an investigation, and then perhaps pushing it over again, and making a delay. If this boat is good and we want it, we want it at once. If it is not good, nothing is lost by adopting the House provision.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator if he knows whether an investigation has already been made of the boat, and if so, by what officers of the Government?

Mr. LODGE. Such an investigation has been made. The whole case is stated in the report here. The investigation was made by Lieut. Stiles M. Decker, Coast Artillery Corps, at Fortress Monroe, Va. He was "detailed to examine into and report upon the feasibility of the invention of Mr. John Hays Hammond, jr., touching a radiodynamic torpedo." On pages 314 and 315 of the fortifications bill, hearings of the other House, a full account of the matter is given.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, the further examination would be for the purpose of proving the testimony that has already been given before a House committee? Is that the object?

Mr. LODGE. It could have no other purpose than making a further investigation of what has already been investigated. As I say, however, it will not cost any more, if the boat is a failure, to adopt the House provision than it would to adopt the Senate provision; and if it is a success, it seems to me, we want it at once.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not see why "we want it at once." We hear that day after day. We have got along for some considerable time without it. While it is true, on the one hand, that we may take the chance of losing this invention, on the other hand it is at just such times as this that matters are put upon the Government, oftentimes at least, that prove to be of very little value to the Government. I do not say that that is the case in this instance, but for the last two or three years we have been rushed along here all the time with the statement that we had not a moment to lose, with the result that we have piled up some very large expenditures that some one has got to meet by some process as yet unknown.

Mr. President, I know there are Members of the Senate who, I think, want to be heard on this proposition, and in view of the lateness of the hour and the fact that many Senators are absent, and that when they absented themseves we were considering another bill, it strikes me that perhaps it would be wiser to postpone final action on this subject.

I have not taken the floor in opposition to this proposition, but I do think that while we are constantly pressed with the importance of doing things at once, we should also bear in mind that it is under just such a stimulus as that that a great many things are placed upon the Government which afterwards prove to be a burden, and of no value.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think there is any attempt here to put anything on the Government. Mr. Hammond can sell this device abroad; there is no trouble about that. Foreign Governments are only too anxious to get it. I suppose everyone knows what it is. It is a boat carrying a torpedo, dirigible from the shore.

Mr. BORAH. I understand it is wholly immaterial which provision we adopt, as we spend $30,000 in either event.

Mr. LODGE. Under either provision.

Mr. BORAH. Under the House provision we spend it for investigation——

Mr. LODGE. And that takes the money so spent out of the amount to be paid in case the boat is purchased.

Mr. BORAH. We have a chance under the House provision to buy it, if we want to?

Mr. LODGE. Under the House provision we can buy it at once, if it is a success, while under the Senate provision we do nothing but spend $30,000 to investigate it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I beg leave to differ. Under the House provision we do buy it subject to the approval of certain officers, and, of course, we know what the result will be.

Mr. BORAH. I understand we take the $30,000 out of the purchase price.

Mr. CLAPP. We take that out of the purchase price, but we agree to make an appropriation to make the purchase per se subject, however, to the approval of the board of officers. Under the Senate provision we do not put ourselves in that position at all. We first proceed to make a thorough investigation, still being perfectly free to act under the report of the investigators, whatever their report may be.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Government can lose no money under either provision beyond the $30,000. There is no desire to put anything onto the Government. If the invention is not what it is believed to be by the experts, the Government will not buy it under the House provision; but we have done some of this postponing and letting things go, and some of the best of modern inventions, like the Maxim inventions, have gone to England, have gone to the Continent of Europe, and have gone elsewhere.

It seems to me to deliberately run the risk of losing this invention would hardly be consistent with our duty. We are not asked to buy it unless it proves absolutely to be all that is claimed for it, and we have the testimony of investigations already made. I think it very poor economy to put this thing off for a year, and run the serious risk of losing it altogether.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I still take issue with the Senator from Massachusetts, that under the House provision primarily we do provide for buying this invention, but we provide that the money shall not be paid unless a certain approval is made by certain officers, to be hereafter appointed by the President.

Mr. LODGE. The board is precisely the same under both provisions.

Mr. TOWNSEND. After a full demonstration has been made.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; but under the Senate provision we do not agree, even upon the approval of the invention, to buy it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We spend $30,000, and perhaps we will not have anything to buy when we get through.

Mr. CLAPP. That may be true; I concede that either way we are taking certain chances; but I do believe that, in view of the effort and pressure that is being brought to bear, it is well to take time to consider before we put ourselves where, on the approval of a board the members of which we do not yet know, we are committed to pay $750,000 for this invention.

Mr. LODGE. We have been taking time, Mr. President, about many things.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; and we have gained innumerable benefits by doing so.

Mr. LODGE. I believe I have the floor; I have not yielded it. We have taken time about our Army, and the result is that to-day we have not regular troops hardened and fit to take care of the affairs on the Mexican border and we have to take our militia, unhardened, largely untrained, not having had the opportunity to get into proper condition—we have had to take them from civil life, and throw them down there in that semi-tropical country, because we were waiting, taking time under the plea that we must not waste money. The result is that we are spending ten dollars for one. If we had had a little more preparation, we would have saved more money than will be spent to-morrow when the $26,000,000 deficiency bill comes over here.

Mr. CLAPP. That is a matter of speculation.

Mr. LODGE. One moment, Mr. President. I think I have the floor. I will yield if the Senator wants me to do so, but I do not care to have the floor taken away. I yield to the Senator, however.

Mr. CLAPP. I simply want to say that is a matter of speculation. It would depend on how long we had maintained it, and how big an Army we had maintained, to say that now we would be incurring unnecessary expense because we have not maintained some such Army heretofore.

Mr. LODGE. Well, Mr. President, it seems to me we have tried out pretty thoroughly the policy of not preparing. It does not seem to be working very well. It is so arranged in the House bill that we can, by no possibility, lose the money; we can not lose a cent more, and we shall not lose as much as we lose by the Senate provision, if nothing comes of it. The same board is provided for; there is nothing in the Senate provision but a mere delay; I suppose to keep the $750,000 out of the total.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to his colleague?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it has been suggested that the expenditure in either case for investigation would be $30,000. I am informed that there has been no negotiation whatever with the patentee of this invention providing for an investigation under the Senate provision, and nobody knows whether we can obtain the privilege of doing so; so that we may lose the possibility of purchase in case we adopt the Senate provision. Nobody has been called before the Senate Committee on Appropriations competent to testify on that subject or in any way to explain this invention.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will permit me to impose upon his generosity, I should like to say a word at this point.

Mr. President, I regard this matter as one of very deep concern to the public welfare, and I do not think it ought to be disposed of until the Senate understands what it has to pass upon. If we are to debate it to-night, very well; if it is to go over until to-morrow, so much the better. [A pause.]

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. I wish to address Senators on this side as well as Senators on the other side.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I was making a little noise here, and I was afraid I was disturbing the Senator, as I did a few days ago, and replied very abruptly when he called my attention to it. I think that he was right, and I was wrong.

Mr. STONE. I beg to assure the Senator when I turned in his direction I had not that in mind which he seems to think, but I did wish to say to him and to other Senators, that this is a matter of such profound interest to the public that it ought not to be lightly or indifferently passed upon or passed upon without a full understanding of its significance and meaning.

Mr. President, I desire to speak to my fellow Senators about this matter, for I have been looking into it, somewhat hastily and imperfectly I admit, during the last few days. I know how great the anxiety is to dispose of the appropriation bills, and I am in full sympathy with that desire; but sometimes, Senators, we may, in the desire to make haste, neglect to do something that later we may have great occasion to regret.

I fear we are facing just that peril now, and I do not wish the Senate to vote upon this question until Senators individually and collectively have thought it out and talked it out. I do not want them to pass upon it in a hurried way without mature deliberation.

If we are to go on to-night, all right. I will stay here if necessary and forego an engagement I have. If it is to go over until to-morrow, I will be better satisfied; but it must not be and should not be passed upon until it is talked about, discussed, and understood. It is a question of very grave consequence, as I see it, to the well-being of our country.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, and also to the Senator from Massachusetts, who said that the committee had not given hearings upon this bill, that the House committee did have hearings.

Mr. STONE. Very full hearings.

Mr. BRYAN. Very full hearings—over a hundred pages.

Mr. STONE. And that is enough.

Mr. BRYAN. That is enough for that, and the Senate committee did not report this matter without any investigation or study. The subcommittee considered it before they reported to the full committee. I have read the complete House hearings, and I stated to the full committee, perhaps more in detail than I have here in the Senate, just what was claimed; but I will state it now, for there are as many Senators here as will be here whenever this bill is voted upon.

A board of Army officers appointed by the Secretary of War have considered this matter and have been present at experiments made with this boat on numerous occasions for a year or more. They are in favor of purchasing this invention. Most of them believe that the secrets can be protected. Col. Treat, the assistant chief of the War College Division, says he has no idea that the matter can be kept secret. I will read to the Senate what he has to say:

> I considered it of sufficient desirability to obtain the rights to build and use it. I differed from some of the members of the board as to its relative efficiency over a submarine in a harbor. Although my desire was to be perfectly liberal with the inventor, as I appreciated to what expense he had gone and what he had accomplished, I did not vote for buying the exclusive rights for the reason that I thought within six months or a year after the actual use of it it would be in general use just as aeroplanes were after Mr. Wright completed his machine.
> * * *
> Mr. SHERLEY. Do you consider that the character of the invention is such as to preclude its successful concealment?
> Col. TREAT. I believe it is not possible to keep it concealed.

Then, again, he says that it would be just as valuable to us as it would be if we bought the exclusive rights.

That is, on the part of the Army. There has been no investigation by the officers of the Navy. The House bill provides that before this invention is purchased a board consisting of three officers of the Army and three officers of the Navy shall favorably report to the President after their investigation; and if a favorable report is made, then the contract is closed.

The contract has already been signed by the inventors. It is described in the bill as "Proposal Z," and only awaits acceptance by the Government, and then the matter is closed.

Now, the Army is in favor of it. If the three naval officers who are appointed favor it, then, under the House provision, the invention is purchased, and that ends it. Under the Senate amendment there is no purchase, and no board is authorized to purchase it. The board is simply authorized to spend $30,000 to make an investigation, to look into this matter further, and report back to Congress as to whether, in the opinion of the joint board appointed by the President, the invention should be purchased.

It is not a question, Mr. President, about which men can be very dogmatic. If you will look at these hearings, the hearings read like magic. They sit on the shore and direct a boat out at sea by a key, or they take an aeroplane and ride above it and control the boat on the water. That is what is claimed for it. That is what these Army officers say can be done with it. I think the Members of the Senate are as capable now of passing upon it as they will be hereafter. That is the substance of the hearing. That is all these men can know.

One of the officers who went said that he was invited to take a seat, and the boat was out in the bay, and the man who was operating it asked him to tell him which direction he wanted the boat to take. The officer asked to have it go to the right, and the man pushed the key once and the boat went off to the right. Then the officer said he would like to have it go to the left, and the man pushed the key twice, and the boat went to the left. Then the officer saw a buoy and said he would like to have it circle that buoy, and it did. This man could also stop it or start it again; he could light it and then put out the light again. They have the lights so arranged that they can light it from the shore temporarily. Now, that is what is claimed for this invention. That is what these Army officers say has been done with it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is there anything in the hearing indicating at what distance it can be operated?

Mr. BRYAN. They claim they can control it at a distance of between 23 and 28 miles.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It can not be controlled any farther than it can be seen, can it?

Mr. BRYAN. Well, I should think that would be difficult. Of course it is claimed——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator mean to say that it can be seen for 23 miles?

Mr. BRYAN. No; I did not say that. I suppose there was somebody on the boat, as there can be when they make——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, if there is some one on it you do not need any wireless apparatus.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, but the man on it is not directing it. The direction is from the shore. Mr. Hammond claims to have made a test of between 23 and 28 miles and to have operated the boat from the shore at that distance.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is manifestly impossible, Mr. President, because you can not see a battleship 28 miles.

Mr. BRYAN. He did not have to see it.

Then another unusual thing claimed for this invention is that if an enemy ship, for example, should undertake to control or direct the torpedo boat by its wireless apparatus, the boat would turn immediately and go to the enemy ship; and furthermore, that if the enemy's operator could get the same wave length or adjust his key so as to control it, the man operating it before that could change the wave lengths and confuse him, and he could not control it. In other words, they claim that they have developed this invention so far that it is impossible for anybody else to control the boat except the man who is directing it.

As I say, the Senate is as capable now of passing upon whether or not those things are possible as it will be to-morrow morning. It is a question that the committee thought might well await a little further investigation.

I realize that there is merit in what the Senator from Massachusetts says. We sometimes lose valuable inventions because we are not quick enough to accept the proposals of inventors.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In these experiments, has there been any actual experiment with regard to any effort to control the torpedo from an aeroplane?

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator means, of course, the boat with which they experimented. It is not a torpedo.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, the torpedo is on a float of some kind. It is on a boat.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; they have controlled that. They can control the boat from an aeroplane.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is there anything in the hearing that indicates that they have ever actually experimented with an aeroplane? I read some hearings in which they said they had a man on a tower, or something of that kind, that was supposed to represent an aeroplane.

Mr. BRYAN. That is all they have done with that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They have not actually used an aeroplane; have they?

Mr. BRYAN. No. The testimony is that they were in a tower above, and could control it from that; but they give it as their judgment that it will be more easily controlled from an aeroplane than it would be from the shore. They say they hang the wire down, and it would be above the boat; and they give it as their judgment that they can control it from an aeroplane, under the charge under which an aeroplane now operates, for about a mile.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Would it not be better to actually make the test with an aeroplane before buying the patent?

Mr. BRYAN. That was the idea of the committee, but that is a question for the Senate to decide.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Assuming that this invention will do what is claimed for it by the inventor, does not the Senator feel that it is worth the amount asked for it?

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, yes; I think it would be cheap at that.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understand the proposition contained in the House amendment, it is conditioned upon a favorable report by three Army officers and three Navy officers appointed by the President.

Mr. BRYAN. That is true.

Mr. POMERENE. Wherein is the Government taking any risk, assuming that that report is favorable?

Mr. BRYAN. The only risk they are taking at all, Mr. President, of course, is upon the judgment of the board. These Army officers have expressed their judgment that the invention ought to be purchased. There is a question there, of course, as to whether they have not become over enthusiastic, and want to buy up every new invention, and whether or not Congress would be willing to trust them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this is not a question as to whether or not those who have already seen these experiments are over enthusiastic or not. It is a question as to what is going to be the judgment of this board of three Army officers and three Navy officers to be appointed by the President. So far as I am concerned, I would rather have the opinion of a board of that character, appointed by the President, than the unanimous opinion of the Senate upon the subject.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to be perfectly fair.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida——

Mr. BRYAN. Just a minute. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that the men designated by Secretary Garrison were the Chief of Staff, the Assistant Chief of Staff, the president of the Army War College, the Chief of Engineers, the Chief of Ordnance, and the Chief of Coast Artillery.

Mr. POMERENE. That is, those are the men who have already witnessed the tests?

Mr. BRYAN. Not all of those men, however, went and saw the experiments take place, but some of them did.

Mr. POMERENE. But if there is any question about the wisdom or unwisdom of the conclusion to which they have come we are only to be bound, under the House provision, by the judgment of a board to be appointed by the President, and they may be officers entirely different from those who have already investigated the subject.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I was on the subcommittee which considered this matter, and I voted to strike out the House provision and to adopt the Senate committee amendment. I desire to call attention to the fact that this bill provides for the construction and installation of a torpedo unit at an expense of $417,000. That is necessary to be done and should be done, and then the purchase of this $750,000 invention is to become effective if the experiment which they make with that is a success.

Now, Mr. President, there is over a million dollars—$1,167,000—and to tie it up in such a manner that it is left to three persons in the Army and three in the Navy, it seems to me, would not be that due precaution which we ought to take. In the first place, we do not know what patents there may be. You know that a patent is not worth anything, as a usual rule, until it is tested in court. There are any number of things that might occur that might not make it desirable that the National Government should accept this proposal at all.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In just a moment. I want to say, however, that I believe that when the Senate amendment goes into conference the conferees, after discussion and examination of the matter, can make some sort of an arrangement that probably will be satisfactory. I believe in taking an option upon it. I believe in giving the inventor $100,000 in order to take an option upon it, to see whether or not it is satisfactory to the Senate.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, does the Senator know whether an option could be obtained under such circumstances?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; but I suppose it could be.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The Senator from Pennsylvania has been lost.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I simply wanted to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that this $417,000 is not to be spent until, after full investigation, this board has decided on the value and utility of the invention and the Government has purchased the patents and paid over the $750,000. In other words, after we have secured all the rights, knowing them to be valuable, then we proceed to put a station in operation at an expense of $417,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All of this is in the future. It is "if" and "if" and "if." That is the trouble about it. On that account, it seems to me that we had better have, or try to get, an option. I believe this is a valuable invention; and the only thing I want to do is to secure the Government, so that if there should be a fall-down we would not lose this enormous amount of money.

I recognize the fact that under certain conditions things will work, models have worked time and again, and yet, when tried on a large scale they have been failures. I do not know whether that would apply to this or not; but it seems to me that common prudence would dictate to us, just as it would to an individual, not to obligate ourselves to do these things until we have, by our own wish and our own judgment, confirmed our present knowledge on the subject after experimentation.

Mr. POMERENE. Is it not one of the objects for which this appropriation of $30,000 is provided to develop this model so that it may be of practical use, if that be possible?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly, and I think that ought to be done; and I think, in addition to the $30,000——

Mr. POMERENE. The expenditure of $750,000 will be conditioned upon what will be the result of the expenditure of $30,000?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but you know that when things are left to three or four men they are always begging us to approve the matter and getting people to become enthusiastic over it. It is not like a full report which is made to the Senate with relation to the matter.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask the Senator another question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will yield.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has referred to his doubt as to whether or not this is a patentable invention. Has the Senator's investigation indicated to him that the state of the art is such that it is perhaps not patentable?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; I do not pretend to say that. I do pretend to say that there are hundreds of thousands and millions of patents that have been issued by the United States Government that you could not enforce against a person because they are not patentable.

Mr. POMERENE. There is not any doubt about that as a general proposition, but I have not heard of anything save this invention in which it is pretended that this result can be had.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As a matter of fact, it may be all right. I hope it will turn out to be all right, and I hope it will be something which the Government can take.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. The only thing is, it seems to me the precipitate action of appropriating $417,000 and $750,000 without holding in our hands the right to determine this matter is not a wise policy, and I believe if it is sent to the committee of conference by adopting the amendment——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Just in a second I will be through. If we adopt this amendment of the Senate committee, it puts it in conference and gives them considerable time to investigate further, to modify the contract that may have been made or entered into, to try to get an option upon this matter, or make any other terms that are to the better satisfaction of the United States Government. Therefore I think the Senate committee amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] that another application for a patent has been filed for a similar invention, and the date of that application is considerably prior—I think perhaps two years prior—to the application on the part of Mr. Hammond. The invention was made by Mr. Clark, of my own State. I have seen the device controlled and directed. I have seen him direct three different going concerns at one and the same time. His invention is about a foot long, about 10 inches high, and about 10 inches wide, and I think he expended $1,500 in having the machine constructed.

I think this appropriation of $750,000 is out of all proportion to the price at which the other machine might be obtained, although I do not speak advisedly upon that subject. But I do know that there is a prior application for a patent for a similar invention, because I myself at the Patent Office on one occasion investigated the dates when Mr. Clark filed his application and when Mr. Hammond filed his.

So far as the success of the invention is concerned, I have no doubt but that you can operate a machine of this sort at a distance. I do not know but that it is a little precipitous to adopt the House provision. Undoubtedly some provision ought to be made. So far as acquiring the exclusive use of the patent is concerned, I doubt if the Government can do that unless there is an entirely different principle involved and it is a patentable principle, because the other man has a machine that will work. Of course, I do not know anything about radio electricity. It may be upon an entirely different principle, and both may be entitled to patents.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma, speaking of the price to be paid for this patent, that the English Government paid $500,000 25 years ago for a patent to control torpedoes by wire connection. That is a very simple process compared with the development which we have under consideration. If it is a question of price, I should think that the amount named was very moderate, based on the price paid for such patents abroad.

Mr. GORE. I think the price is moderate; and I will state to the Senator as to the purpose of the Government to obtain the exclusive control if somebody else has a patent upon a similar concern that would be available for others, of course there is really nothing to be gained by exclusive control. I felt constrained to make this suggestion.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, whether this boat is patentable or not, the information can not be acquired except from Mr. Hammond and the patentees. Whether it is patentable or not, this Government evidently desires to obtain it, judging from the report. If it is not patentable and the information gets out and other countries receive it, still this Government should need it that much more. I do not think that the value of it depends so much upon the patent as it does upon the secret and upon the ability of this Government to use it at once. Certainly this Government is not going to be in a position where it is going to deny the right of this patentee on any technical ground after all the investigations have been made. It seems to me that the question of title——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course, the chief reason why in the case of anything that is patented the infringement of it can not be prosecuted is because it has been in use before. From what the Senator from Oklahoma says it may be it is not patentable. Yet I am inclined to think perhaps it is to the extent that it has gone, and as perfected it may be better than any other machine designed for the same purpose.

What I believe ought to be done is to send it to conference and try to get an option and give him $100,000, and if we do I think we will protect our rights a good deal better than in the other way suggested.

Mr. PITTMAN. The question whether it is patentable or not is insignificant in this discussion. If it is patentable the Government can protect it only against local people; that is, against people of the United States. If it is not patentable the United States would nevertheless have to have the secrets, and it is not going to attempt to get the secrets from these patentees through any subterfuge or any unfair methods.

It seems to me that the value of the patent should not be taken into consideration. The value of this invention has already been indorsed by a board. As to the price of a little over $1,000,000, why, with an instrument of this kind, they can sink in 15 seconds a battleship costing $15,000,000. A submarine of the larger type costs as much as this boat will cost the Government at the present time. I agree with those who urge that this matter should not be delayed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to say a few words upon this question if it is to be decided to-night, but I do not wish to delay the Senate if the Senator in charge of the bill wishes to make any motion.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until 10.30 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I believe I have the floor. If it is the desire to go on with the bill, I will yield for a question.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I did not know the Senator from Connecticut wanted to hold the floor in view of the adjournment that is to be taken.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I say I do not want to hold the floor if it is the intention of the Senate to adjourn now.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understand that is the purpose.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Before a motion to adjourn is made will the Senator from Florida yield to me to report House bill 16677 from the Committee on Appropriations continuing current appropriations for one month where the regular bills are not passed? It will not take five minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 16677) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia and for the payment of pensions under certain contingencies, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of pensions under existing laws, which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1916, are continued and made available for and during the month of July, 1916, unless the regular appropriations provided therefor in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917; and a sufficient amount is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended for such operations than as the sum of one-twelfth of the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1916 bears to the whole of the appropriations of said fiscal year: Provided further, That the total expenditures for the whole of the fiscal year 1917 under the several appropriations hereby continued, and under the several appropriation bills now pending, shall not exceed in the aggregate the amounts finally appropriated therefor in the several bills now pending, except in cases where a change is made in the annual, monthly, or per diem compensation or in the numbers of officers, clerks, or other persons authorized to be employed by the several appropriations hereby continued, in which cases the amounts authorized to be expended shall equal one-twelfth of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1916, and eleven-twelfths of the appropriations contained in the several bills now pending when the same shall have been finally passed, unless the salary or compensation of any officer shall be increased or diminished without changing the grade or the duties thereof, in which case such salary or compensation shall relate to the entire fiscal year and run from the beginning thereof: And provided further, That the session employees of the Senate and House of Representatives now authorized by law shall be continued upon the rolls until the end of the present session of Congress and paid at the rate per diem or month at which they are now paid; and a sufficient amount is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the same.

Mr. JONES. I ask leave to put in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the report of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives with reference to this measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[House Rept. No. 851, 64th Cong., 1st sess.]

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 16677.

The Committee on Appropriations report herewith a bill extending the appropriations made for the necessary operations of the Government for the fiscal year 1916 during the month of July of the fiscal year 1917, and recommend its immediate passage.

The enactment of this bill is made necessary because of the failure of final passage of eight of the annual appropriation acts before the beginning of the fiscal year 1917, namely: Agriculture, Army, District of Columbia, Military Academy, Navy, Pension, Post Office, and Sundry Civil. The fortification act, which carries appropriations without reference to the fiscal year, has also not been finally acted on.

The Diplomatic and Consular, Indian, and legislative acts for the fiscal year 1917 have become laws or have been finally disposed of by both Houses of Congress.

Under the provisions of this measure sums equal to one-twelfth of the appropriations made for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for 1916 are appropriated for the month of July of the fiscal year 1917, or the proportionate part of such sums for such part of that period as shall elapse before the enactment of the respective appropriation acts for 1917; all amounts expended out of such sums to be deducted from the appropriations finally made for each purpose for the entire fiscal year 1917.

Joint resolutions or acts of a similar character, extending appropriations after the close of a fiscal year because of failure to pass the regular bills, were enacted in 1876, 1882, 1884, 1886, 1888, 1890, 1892, 1894, 1912, and 1914.

The accompanying bill is in the general terms of the joint resolution passed by Congress in 1914, providing for a condition similar to that now existing, except that upon that occasion the continuance of appropriations was only for one-half of the month of July.

The month of July is specified as the extreme period of time covered by the proposed extension of appropriations instead of 30 days, in order to avoid possible complications that may arise in settling salary or pay accounts under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906, requiring that in making payments all annual salaries shall be divided into 12 equal parts, and each of such parts into 30 equal portions, or computing 360 days as a year and 30 days as constituting each month.

The accompanying memoranda, compiled from the laws and from the records of Congress, are submitted for the further information of the House:

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill just reported by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

AMENDMENT TO THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion I made for the reconsideration of the bill (H. R. 15158) to amend the Judicial Code and fix the time when the annual term of the Supreme Court shall commence, and further to define the jurisdiction of that court.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] withdraws his motion to reconsider that bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If I may be permitted, I will say my reason for withdrawing it is that I have information that leads me to believe that the objectionable section of that bill will be eliminated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on neutrality in the European war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on neutrality in the European war. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Hay resolution to draft the militia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Hay resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS AFTER JUNE 30.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole the bill (H. R. 16677) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of pensions under certain contingencies.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole the bill H. R. 16677, for extending appropriations after June 30. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16677) extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of pensions under certain contingencies.

Be it enacted, etc., That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of pensions under existing laws, which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1916, are continued and made available for and during the month of July, 1916, unless the regular appropriations provided therefor in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917; and a sufficient amount is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended for such operations than as the sum of one-twelfth of the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1916 bears to the whole of the appropriations of said fiscal year: Provided further, That the total expenditures for the whole of the fiscal year 1917 under the several appropriations hereby continued, and under the several appropriation bills now pending, shall not exceed in the aggregate the amounts finally appropriated therefor in the several bills now pending, except in cases where a change is made in the annual, monthly, or per diem compensation or in the numbers of officers, clerks, or other persons authorized to be employed by the several appropriations hereby continued, in which cases the amounts authorized to be expended shall equal one-twelfth of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1916, and eleven-twelfths of the appropriations contained in the several bills now pending when the same shall have been finally passed, unless the salary or compensation of any office shall be increased or diminished without changing the grade or the duties thereof, in which case such salary or compensation shall relate to the entire fiscal year and run from the beginning thereof: And provided further, That the session employees of the Senate and House of Representatives now authorized by law shall be continued upon the rolls until the end of the present session of Congress and paid at the rate per diem or month at which they are now paid; and a sufficient amount is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the same.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is necessary because of the fact that thus far only three regular appropriation bills have been approved. The pension appropriation bill has been agreed upon and probably will be approved before the 30th of the month, and it is hoped we will have an agreement and approval on the sundry civil bill by Friday.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are working under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I recognize, of course, that it is necessary to pass this resolution, but I think it is proper that the House should be reminded how unfortunate it is that Congress has been so dilatory that nine of the appropriation bills are still on the calendar and it is necessary to extend their provisions by resolution.

Although necessary, it is unfortunate, and it is inefficient, because it always embarrasses the Government. It embarrasses the accounting officers. It postpones for one month any reform, either of economy or better administration, that has been prepared in the appropriation bills, and in a great many of the departments it absolutely demoralizes their service. In all those branches of the Government whose activities, being out of doors, can not go on in the winter they ordinarily use all the appropriations in the summer. Now, if they can not get by the 1st of July their regular appropriations, it stops the performance of their proper duties, because in the month of August they ought to use much more than one-twelfth of their annual appropriation.

So it is always most unfortunate not to pass the appropriation bills on time. And simply in the light of abstract truth, and that the facts of history may not be forgotten, I wish to point out to the House that this is the third successive Congress in which such a resolution as this has been necessary. It is necessary in this Sixty-fourth Congress, it was necessary in the Sixty-third Congress, and it was necessary in the Sixty-second Congress; but before the Sixty-second Congress it had not been necessary in any Congresses between that and the Fifty-third Congress. Why was this long hiatus between the Fifty-third and the Sixty-second Congresses? It is perhaps a mere coincidence, but it so happens—I hope I will not be accused of undue partisanship in pointing it out—it so happens that all the Congresses between the Fifty-third and the Sixty-second were Republican Congresses. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Fifty-third Congress was a Democratic Congress. In that Congress——

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that that side of the House does not care to have these facts of history brought to its attention, but I consider it my painful duty to the House to do so. In the Fifty-third Congress, which was a Democratic Congress, 12 appropriation bills had not been passed by the 1st of July, and a resolution like this had to be adopted. In the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, Fifty-sixth, Fifty-seventh, Fifty-eighth, Fifty-ninth, Sixtieth, and Sixty-first Congresses, all Republican Congresses, the appropriations every year were passed on time, and we never had to pass a single one of these continuing resolutions. [Applause on the Republican side.] In the Sixty-second Congress the Democratic Party again assumed control of this House, and again they reverted to their old Democratic practice, and a continuing resolution had to be adopted. It was so in the last Congress; it is so in this Congress. Obviously there is only one way to stop these continuing resolutions, and that is to put into power the party of promptness and efficiency which passes appropriation bills on time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Do not the facts stated by the gentleman simply show that when the Republican Party was in power the Democrats of this House did not resort to filibustering tactics, as the gentleman's party has done?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, that is a rather amazing proposition, and it shows that the gentleman was not here during those Congresses. Never has there been such filibustering as was resorted to by the Democrats. I remember in one Congress the leader of the Democratic Party, who is now the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], announced quite early in the session that he proposed to demand a roll call on every proposition, and to filibuster all he could on every bill that came up. He followed out that purpose all through that Congress, but that did not prevent the Republican Party putting the appropriation bills through on time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is it not true that the reason you were able to do that was that you did nothing except pass appropriation bills, and it was left to us to enact legislation in behalf of the people of the country? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is as unfortunate in that suggestion as he is in the first one. That is not true at all. The amount of general legislation passed during the Roosevelt administration was enormous.

Mr. NORTON. Does not the gentleman's statement show that he also has not been in attendance on many of the sessions of this Congress?

Mr. GILLETT. Whatever the reason is, the gentleman is wholly incorrect in his suggestions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the Republican Party passed appropriation bills, and that is about all it did do. In their indignation at such conduct the people put the Republican Party out of power and restored the Democratic Party to control of the Government. It was given power for the purpose of enacting certain important and imperatively demanded legislation. The Democratic Party was put in power to revise the tariff downward and to take the unjust burdens of taxation off the masses of the people, and to distribute the burdens of government more equally, and to impose a proper share upon the protected corporate wealth of the country, which had been shielded for so many years by the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Democratic Party, after interminable and unsuccessful efforts on the part of the Republican Party, enacted the Federal reserve act, to do away with money panics in this country and to permit business to be transacted without the danger and inconvenience resulting from Republican money panics. The Democratic Party passed the Federal trade commission bill in order to take out of the realm of uncertainty and chaos into which business had been plunged by the Republican maladministration, and to protect and encourage the honest, legitimate business of the country, so that it might be separated from those businesses which were exploiting the people in defiance of the law.

The Democratic Party enacted the agricultural cooperative extension act of inestimable value to those interested in agriculture, while by the Clayton law it extended a friendly and helping hand to the labor of the land by taking them from the oppressive grasp of courts, which had become inimical and hostile.

The last appropriation bill from the Committee on Appropriations in this session of Congress—outside of the deficiency bill, which is always reported at the very end of the session—was reported to this House on the 19th day of May. The gentleman from Massachusetts says that because of the dilatory tactics of the party in power those bills have not been passed. It was believed that there was certain legislation of an imperative character which must be enacted, even though the appropriation bills be deferred for a time. So the national defense act was passed by this Democratic Congress. It had to be passed before the Army appropriation bill could be prepared and reported. If the Republicans during their 16 years of control had made adequate provision for the national defense, it would not have been necessary for this Congress to spend so much time in endeavoring to put the defenses of the country upon an adequate and proper basis. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Democratic House has passed the shipping bill. The foreign trade of the country has been prostrate, because of the lack of tonnage to carry our over-seas trade. We have been at the mercy of the warring nations of Europe, and the commodities from the great West have been locked up in box cars, extending from the seaboard inland for miles, because there were no shipping facilities. The Republican Party never had a single notion or idea of relieving this situation, except by a scheme that would put money into the pockets of a favored few. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Democratic Party has proposed legislation which will enable the American people to dominate the foreign markets of the world, as they should, and to keep in this country the enormous sums paid for the carriage of our over-sea trade, which heretofore and at present goes to foreign shipowners.

The Democratic Party has passed a good-roads bill, to enable the people in the interior of the country to get their products to the railroads and to the seaboard, so as to open the markets of the world to our products without paying a prohibitive price for transportation.

We have passed the rural-credits bill, to extend to the farmers the same measure of relief that we have extended to the business men of the great financial centers. [Applause.] We have passed a bill to control the floods that for years have been devastating the Mississippi Valley and making unprofitable and disastrous the attempts of the people along that valley to conserve their lands and to protect their crops.

We passed a bill extending a righteous measure of self-government to the Philippine Islands, to give them the opportunity to demonstrate their capacity to control themselves. We have passed conservation bills, to enable the people of the country to utilize the great natural resources of the country, rather than to keep them locked up, like the man who buried his talent, unable to use it and not daring even to look at it.

We have enacted liberal pension laws, to provide generously for the survivors of our wars and for those members of their families who are dependent upon them. We have made provision for a nitrate plant, to supply the Government with means of defense in time of war and the farmers with cheap and abundant fertilizer in time of peace.

With such a great program of constructive legislation crowded into a short three-year period, naturally it has been necessary to defer action upon the appropriation bills.

But the Government has not suffered. The administration of the public service has not been embarrassed, not a single activity of the Government has been impaired or crippled, but under this Democratic administration this country has enjoyed a prosperity never before equaled. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And despite the criticisms and despite the taunts by the foes of this administration, regardless of any personal effect upon his political fortunes, the President of the United States has kept the United States at peace. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is not to be wondered that the brilliant, distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] should cavil and carp and criticize the Democratic Party because the appropriation bills may be deferred a day or two. Of course, he would like the country to forget the wonderful constructive program of legislation of the Democratic Party that has done so much for the benefit of the country, but he can not make the people forget it. They will not forget it; they will remember it; and he will recall it after his party has gone to inglorious defeat in the coming election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker [applause on the Republican side], I am not going to consume more than a minute. You can not fool the American people all of the time; you may a part of the time. If my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] had lived in the time of Dickens, instead of the character of Mark Tapley, who always wanted something difficult, his name would have been JOHN J. FITZGERALD. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, I came into the House just as Uncle JOE had started to speak. I inquired of some one what was going on. I had been in my office attending to and answering the requests of my constituents, which everybody does not do, you know. I think that Uncle JOE is the greatest and the grandest Republican in the United States. [Applause.] They talk, as I understand now, something about the defects of this present Democratic administration. Well, they are talking through their hats, gentlemen, and if I can get about three or four hours' time some day in this House I will tell you about the defects of the Republican Party. [Applause.]

A MEMBER. You will want longer than that.

Mr. THOMAS. I expect it would take longer than that, because they talk about the violation of our platform by Mr. Wilson. Why, gentlemen, I can cite you to 27 instances within the last 16 years where you have violated your own platform, and you never made a platform in your lives with any expectancy of carrying the platform out by legislation.

I want to call your attention to one thing in your platform at Chicago—that railroad plank, in which you say that you require every citizen of this broad land, if he has a complaint against a railroad company, to come to the authorities at Washington, come from his home, possibly a thousand miles away, to get his rights. Is any one of you going out on the stump among the people of this country and uphold that platform? No; you are going to dodge it; and I say to you that your leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], will not dare do it. [Applause.]

I would like to get out on the stump in some other States if it was not for the fact that there are so many Republicans down in Kentucky in my district that I have got to attend to them. [Laughter.] You all know why that is. [Laughter.] You Republicans in this House have been talking for years about the illiteracy among many people in Kentucky. That is true; it is so down in my district. [Laughter.] If the people of Kentucky were educated as they should be, and as they will be, there would be no longer any Republicanism in the State of Kentucky, and I would not have to confine my great abilities to the third district of the State of Kentucky. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, you people talk about Republicanism. I would be ashamed to vote the Republican ticket. [Applause.] You have got Roosevelt on your hands, and you do not know what to do with him. You are simply wandering somnambulists with a vanished dream. Some of you are for Roosevelt, but you dare not say so because you fear that you can not get in on the offices if Hughes should be elected. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask for three minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, gentleman, do not deceive yourselves; there is no danger in this world of Mr. Hughes ever being elected President of these United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Talk about hyphenated Americans! I do not know anything about that; I never took any stock in that one way or the other. But I know what he is; he has a hyphenated beard [applause], and the people of this country when they get through with him are going to say that he has a hyphenated brain [applause]; they are going to turn him down. Now, gentlemen, we are going to elect Mr. Wilson. [Cries of "What?" on the Republican side.] I say we are going to elect Mr. Wilson. [Cries of "When?" on the Republican side.] When? At the November election. What would you have done in Mexico? Your newspapers and you gentlemen talk and talk and talk.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given 10 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not want that long. You went to Chicago and you promulgated what you call a platform. Did you say in that platform that you would intervene in Mexico? Now, answer me, any man on that side of the House. Did you say it? No; you were too cowardly to say that if Mr. Hughes were elected, or if the Republican candidate were elected, that you would intervene in Mexico. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why did not you say it if you were so brave and you want war so badly? Why have not you enlisted—you who are young enough? You Republicans are only bluffers and have a nightmare on the brain, that is what you have. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MILITARY AND NAVAL ESTABLISHMENTS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16678) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes. Pending that, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if we can agree on time for general debate?

Mr. CANNON. I have but one request for time. Does any other gentleman on this side desire time in general debate upon the bill?

Mr. FESS. Is it confined to the bill?

Mr. CANNON. No; but it ought to be, I think. I apprehend that we can get whatever time we desire under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. I suggest the gentleman go ahead without agreeing on time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to make a short statement.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can easily do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one-half hour, half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and one-half by myself.

Mr. CANNON. That is satisfactory, so far as I know.

Mr. MANN. If gentlemen want further time they can get it under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion the gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate be confined to one-half hour, one half of that time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16678, to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, with Mr. PAGE of North Carolina in the chair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this bill as reported by the committee carries $25,952,068.83. An amendment will be offered by the committee increasing the amount carried by $1,584,000 for certain purposes for the Medical Department of the Army, so that the bill as agreed upon by the committee, with the amendment, aggregates $27,536,068.83. All of this sum is for the Military Establishment, with the exception of $326,000, which is provided for the Navy, so that $27,210,068.83 is for the Army. The necessity for the appropriation arises from ordering out the National Guard and their utilization upon the border, as contemplated by the recent orders of the President. In view of the many inquiries that have been submitted as to the status of appropriations at this session of Congress, I have prepared a statement, to which I shall refer and which I shall insert in the RECORD. The deficiencies, including this bill, thus far provided at this session of Congress aggregate $53,267,298.34. Of this sum $39,974,343.53 arise out of the situation on the Mexican border, and has been necessitated by the authorization to enlist the Regular Army up to its full war strength and to provide for the pay, subsistence, and equipment required by the ordering into the service of the National Guard. The deficiencies outside of these military purposes aggregate $13,292,954.81. At the last session of Congress the deficiencies were $12,316,343.90. There is yet to be considered and provided by the House certain appropriations that will be carried in the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The Agricultural appropriation bill, as reported to the Senate, carries $23,928,000, and the current law is $22,971,000. The Army bill, as it passed the House, carries $182,303,356.10, and the current law is $101,974,195.87. The Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, as agreed upon by both Houses in conference, carries $5,355,096.66, and the current law is $4,061,280.01. The District of Columbia appropriation bill, as it passed the House, carried $11,931,817.34, and the current law is $11,859,584.45. The fortification bill, as reported to the Senate, carries $25,120,110, and the current law is $6,060,216.90. The Indian bill, which has been approved, carries $10,967,644.88, and the current law is $9,971,902.76. The legislative bill, which has been approved, carried $37,925,690.25, and the current law is $36,904,799.75. The Military Academy bill, in the estimates submitted, amounted to $1,422,775.77. That bill has been reported to-day, but I have not the figures that it carries. I understand it carries a much larger sum. The current law is $1,069,813.37. The naval appropriation bill, as it passed the House, carried $269,892,137.74, while the current law is $149,661,864.88. The pension appropriation bill, as reported to the Senate, carried $158,065,000, and the current law is $164,100,000.

The Post Office appropriation bill as reported to the Senate carries $322,905,679. The current law amounts to $313,364,667. The river and harbor bill as passed by the Senate carries $41,723,935, and the current law is $30,000,000. The sundry civil appropriation bill as reported to the Senate carries $128,246,445.24, and the current law is $126,922,750.79.

The total of the regular annual appropriation bills, either as enacted into law, agreed upon in conference, passed by the House, or reported to the Senate, is $1,219,788,507.98, and the total for the current year is $978,722,857.78. The estimated permanent appropriations that will be operative for the next fiscal year amount to $135,074,673, and for the current year $121,567,207. Taking the regular annual bills and permanent appropriations as they now stand, without any eliminations or reductions, the total is $1,354,863,180.98, as against $1,100,290,064.78 in the current law. In addition to that, the sum of $20,000,000 was provided in the national-defense act for a nitrate plant; $6,000,000 is included in the good-roads bill, the conference report upon which has been agreed to by the Senate; $15,100,000 carried in the rural-credits bill and $50,100,000 is provided in the shipping bill, making a total of $1,446,063,180.98, as against $1,102,620,668.12. The deficiencies thus far are $53,267,298.34 as against $12,316,343.90, so that the grand total of the present session is $1,499,330,479.32, as against $1,114,937,012.02. In addition to the actual appropriations, the naval bill as it passed the House authorized contract obligations aggregating $188,290,000; the sundry civil bill, $1,827,000; the fortifications bill, $14,300,000; the river and harbor act, $2,724,950, a total of $207,141,950, and additional authorizations aggregating $50,600,000 are provided for in the so-called flood-control bill, making a total of contracts and authorizations of $257,741,950. In addition to these authorizations the naval appropriation bill as reported to the Senate makes provision for a very large increase in contract obligations. I shall put these detailed figures in the RECORD at this time, Mr. Chairman, for several reasons. In the first place, the Committee on Ways and Means is endeavoring to determine the additional revenue that will be required during the next fiscal year. These figures, while not definite, are as nearly definite as can be made while these bills are in a pending state. Moreover, there are numerous inquiries from sources both official and unofficial for this information; many Members of the House desire the information. In addition, it is deemed desirable that Congress, at least, may have this information as a sort of balance sheet in order to determine the wisdom or expediency of making authorizations upon an extensive scale in addition to the provisions which have already been made at this session of Congress.

At the end of the session the customary practice will be followed in making a complete and accurate statement of appropriations and authorizations. This is as complete as it can be made at the present time. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that each individual appropriation bill as it now stands, not only those that provide for the national defense, but those that provide for the ordinary civil activities of the Government, is larger than the corresponding bill of last year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not.

Mr. GILLETT. What exception is there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The sundry civil bill, as I recollect. It may be due to the fact the gentleman helped to prepare it. I mean as it passed the House—as reported to the Senate.

Mr. GILLETT. I say as they now stand—as it passed the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The pension bill?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; I think the pension bill is an exception. Every one but the pension bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That can be accounted for in two ways. The first is a situation exists throughout the country relative to measures of preparedness. A demand that has gone up through the country that very large provision be made has found ready response from Congress, regardless of political divisions. That has necessitated very large increases in a number of bills. The other reason is that the activities of the Government are continually increasing and extending. From an observation based upon 17 years' experience in the House I am convinced they will never be diminished; that it will be necessary from time to time to provide for the increasing activities of the Government and for larger participation by the Federal Government in many lines of activity that was never contemplated originally that the Government should be engaged in.

I have not had these figures prepared for the purpose of comparison of any character or to discuss them or explain them—simply to have them where they will be available to those desiring information from now on, either for the transaction of their official business or such other use as may be proper. I hope under these circumstances no one will use them for improper partisan purposes. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire at this time to make any extended remarks to the committee. I helped prepare this deficiency bill. The gentleman has stated the amount it carries, in round numbers, with the amendment that is to be offered, which ought to pass, between $27,000,000 and $28,000,000 by way of deficiency. What the future regular deficiency bill is to carry I do not know; we will know later on. I shall vote for this bill and I shall not discuss at this time why. As I stated a few days ago there is war in Mexico, and it has lapped over a little bit at times into the territory of the United States. Gentleman may call it an emergency. In fact, if it had been recognized months ago as a state of war we would be in much better condition than we are now.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. EAGLE. Does not the gentleman think that the sooner we say so in plain words and go in there and clean the situation up by restoring peace and order the better off we will be? I do.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has stated the question in a single sentence that I assent to, and stated it better than I can. Now take the newspaper reports, which I presume are correct. Shipload after shipload of munitions of war have recently been sent from New York and elsewhere and landed at Vera Cruz to the so-called de facto government; and there is one thing, while it is a de facto government in words, it is anarchy in fact. And besides that, I do not know, but I presume that under authority of law we are not shipping by land from the United States to Mexico in her condition further munitions to be used against the Regular Army and the militia that is now proceeding as rapidly as we can get it toward the border. I have not accurate information about this, but as I understand the law, there is power in the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, to stop the shipment of munitions to Mexico. Whether he could stop, without a declaration of war that is formal, the shipment of munitions of war from anywhere in the world to the Mexican ports I am not fully advised, but I understand the principle of international law is that the rights of neutrals everywhere in the world—and that would include Japan; that would include every country in the world—are such that until war is declared and the ports of Mexico are blockaded we have no right to prevent the shipment of munitions of war to Mexico. They are just bandits there, whether it is Carranza or Zapata or Villa. In this condition, when the papers contain statements coming seemingly from high authority that it is possible we may have to call for volunteers, in my judgment, prompt action is called for.

I am not making a political speech. If I were making a partisan speech, I could say a whole lot of things, but it does not avail greatly to talk about who is responsible for this condition upon our Mexican border. It will be legitimate to call attention to it later on if it becomes material, when the great American citizenry will be called upon to approve the actions of the administration, with a view to the elections that are to be held for the selection of a Congress and a President in November. I am not going to discuss it from that standpoint, but I will adopt the remark of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE] and his suggestion now, and put it in quotation, because I indorse it.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. GORDON. Has the gentleman from Illinois introduced a resolution declaring war upon Mexico?

Mr. CANNON. "The gentleman from Illinois" has not introduced a resolution to declare war against Mexico. The gentleman is one Member out of 435. Have you introduced the resolution to declare war with Mexico? You are one of the majority.

Mr. GORDON. I have not.

Mr. MANN. He has not, says the gentleman.

Mr. GORDON. But I am not complaining.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; you are not complaining. My God, if you occupy that position all along during the troubles that lead up to the situation, I greatly fear you will have to clothe yourself with sackcloth and ashes to escape the condemnation of a patriotic constituency. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GORDON. Well, if the gentleman will yield further, I will say that I do not know but that he and I are in the same boat. I do not know that I am responsible in this Congress any more than he is.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I do not go into the Democratic caucus; I am not called down to the White House for consultation; I do not help to determine things in Democratic caucus, which so far under this administration has dominated legislation, with scores of you on that side in private conversation growing profane. [Laughter.]

I will not call them by name, but I could. I do not want to be personal. It is a pretty serious condition that we have in this country. I stand ready. Whatever may have been the mistakes in legislation or in caucus of the Democratic House and Senate, obeying orders that come from a coordinate branch of the Government; whatever may have been the mistakes of omission or commission, I am not here to speak about them in extenso at this time. But I am here to say, speaking for myself, and, I believe, the minority in the House, that we stand ready to recognize the status and vote for any legislation and vote for any appropriation that is necessary to deal with the status. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman stand also ready to vote for any revenue measures in order to get the money to conduct the operations?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I will vote for the revenue measures, but I will wait to see what you propose. There are all kinds of rumors in circulation. Whether they are true or false I can not tell; but as I passed along just here within the last month a distinguished Member on that side said, "Well, it does not make any difference how we vote for expenditures; you fellows North have got to pay it." Thank God, we do not have to without at least showing what you are doing. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman knows that if he refers to sums paid by sections, the South has been paying more into the Treasury in return for what she has been getting back than any other part of the country for the last 50 years.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the bare statement of the proposition is so ridiculous that it does not require an answer. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am not here to fight a man of straw or language. We will meet the question of revenue when it comes, and whatever revenue is necessary to be raised and whatever means are necessary to provide for carrying on this common Government, I apprehend you will find, first, that you have the power to pass them, and, second, if you do not act fairly we have the power to criticize.

Now, I do not know that I desire at this time to say anything further, but one thing I will say, because it occurs to me: This Democratic Congress did insist that, as the Congress has the power to declare war, this condition of emergency should not be left to another, but would be shouldered by this Congress.

You recollect we did that the other day. Before a great while I apprehend we will adjourn, and I hope to God before we do adjourn that action will be taken by this Congress—positive action, manly action—that will tend to wipe out the present conditions of Mexico on our southern border; and not only soothing sirup, not only procrastination, but, as we have to risk the lives of our young men and patriotic people, it will be done thoroughly; and, in the language of my friend from Texas [Mr. EAGLE], who interrupted me a moment ago, it will be done thoroughly, so that we will not have to meet a similar condition 12 months from now or 12 years from now. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Do I understand from the gentleman's statement that he would go into Mexico and straighten out that country thoroughly? Is that what he means?

Mr. CANNON. I mean just this, that we have not troops enough to patrol that long border. How long is it—1,400 miles?

Mr. GARNER. Eighteen hundred miles.

Mr. CANNON. Eighteen hundred miles—two-thirds of it, substantially, being the southern boundary of the State of Texas. I mean this, that it is absolutely patent that things have been going from bad to worse down there since Huerta was put out of Mexico. It took a year to put him out, with a copartnership between the President of the United States and Villa and Carranza. Finally they put that bandit out, and, inasmuch as it took that long to put him out, I guess he had some red blood in his veins. When he was put out, then the copartnership was dissolved, and in the fullness of time, after great consideration, Villa became the unworthy bandit and the other bandit, Carranza, was recognized as the de facto government, and we have been going from bad to worse from that day until this. I mean I would go in there for the benefit of civilization, for the benefit of the whole world, for the benefit of that unfortunate population in Mexico, for the benefit of the people of the United States for our peace and comfort. Why, the great mass of the population of Mexico are terrorized——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I would like a minute or two longer.

Mr. GARNER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. God knows I do not want Mexico. I agree that we do not need Mexico and do not want it; but I say further that you can not feed those bandits with Mrs. Winslow's soothing sirup and temporize with them——

Mr. GARNER. What would you do?

Mr. CANNON. What would I do?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If I had supreme power I would go into Mexico, not as an excuse. I would go into Mexico and have the manhood to say that we can not have permanent peace, that you can not be protected in Mexico, and that we can not be protected in the United States until there is set up in Mexico a government, a military government, a government of force to start with; and then, after setting up a government of that kind, let it be administered until a Mexican is found who is strong enough——

Mr. GARNER rose.

Mr. CANNON. Wait until I answer your question—until a Mexican is found strong enough to maintain order in that country. I would support that government, for we have got to keep law and order; and I would see that there was written into their government law the assurance that when in the fullness of time—God knows how long—they are competent for self-government they shall have it; that if they do not maintain law and order, the United States shall maintain law and order, as we have once and may have to do again in Cuba. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman realize that to do what he has just said he would do if he had supreme power means war with Mexico?

Mr. CANNON. Well, we have got war with Mexico. Good God, do you not know, coming from Texas as you do, that it is war now?

Mr. GARNER. Then if I understand the gentleman, he indorses the war that we are having with Mexico. Is that it?

Mr. CANNON. I would have this war proceed in Mexico until we can have a permanent condition that will guarantee their protection and our security. If you want me to say that I indorse the course of our President, Woodrow Wilson, God forbid. Do you?

Mr. GARNER. A good deal.

Mr. CANNON. "A good deal," says the gentleman!

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. TAGGART. I do not want to use the gentleman's time.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TAGGART. In addition to establishing a stable government, would you not have them pay for it, instead of squandering money of the American people? Would you not make that rich country pay for having a civilized government established?

Mr. CANNON. That is a question that will come up hereafter. I would have action now that would protect, so far as we can protect, the Regular Army, and protect the militia, over 100,000 strong, our best blood that is going in there, not properly armed, to meet the bandits who have been buying our munitions of war to shoot our boys. You ask me, do I indorse what has been done? I did not intend to say anything about it. God knows I would not and do not indorse it. It has been dillydally—wishy-washy—hogwash! [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

Signal Service of the Army: For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, including the same objects specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1916, and for radio installations, motorcycles, and motor-driven vehicles used for technical purposes, $250,000.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I see repeated in this bill the same phraseology—

Including the same objects specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1916.

That does not in any case, as I understand it, duplicate an appropriation made in the Army appropriation act or the Naval appropriation act, but only duplicates the specification of the object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These are deficiencies, and the language of the appropriation in the Army act enumerates a great number of different purposes for which the expenditure may be made. Instead of repeating all of that language in these provisions, this expression is used.

Mr. HILL. But in no case duplicates any part of the appropriation which has already been made?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the gentleman from New York whether this bill includes practically all of the deficiency estimates which have been submitted in reference to the Army, or growing out of the enlistment or calling of the National Guard?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Everything submitted by the War Department, with the exception of printing items, is in this bill. All these items practically grow out of the ordering out of the National Guard. There may be one or two things where there is an overlapping, but practically the entire sum is due to the calling out of the National Guard.

Mr. MANN. Have there been no estimates come in since the bill was considered?

Mr. FITZGERALD. When the subcommittee was preparing the bill, attention was called to the fact that an estimate was coming in that day, which was Monday, and the Quartermaster General went over all the items in that estimate that belonged to his department. When the estimate was printed, which was to-day, it appeared that there was an item of $1,584,000 for the Medical Department. The representatives of the Medical Department were before the committee this morning, and an amendment will be offered to put that sum in. That is the only thing.

Mr. MANN. When the Army appropriation bill had been agreed upon, I think possibly before it was reported to the House, and when reported to the House it carried an item for aviation under the office of the Chief Signal Officer of a million and some odd thousand dollars, which was increased in the House on the consideration of the bill. I think at that time they submitted an estimate requesting authority for the employment of additional help here in Washington, stating that with that appropriation of a million and some odd thousand dollars it would not be practicable even to expend that sum without additional help here. Now, we increase that sum to over $3,000,000. Has any consideration been given to the question of increased help in Washington growing out of the increase in the appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will find that on page 6 of this bill. We increase the appropriation from thirty thousand to fifty-three thousand.

Mr. MANN. I see it. The reason I did not catch it was because it was not under the Chief Signal Officer. But the original item was for a million and some odd thousand dollars, and we increased it to over $3,000,000. What will be done in reference to additional help in the offices in Washington in the War Department, where it is plain that they will need additional help growing out of these increased appropriations?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is all they want. Col. Squier, who has been put in charge of the service, stated that they wanted some additional draftsmen, but the chief purpose is to organize an inspection force to put in the factories where the machines are to be manufactured. The committee gave everything they said that they needed and made inquiries along certain lines to ascertain whether they contemplated the situation arising in the House.

Mr. CANNON. The increase from $30,000 to $53,000 is not an increase in the clerical force.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not for clerical hire; it is for draftsmen and an inspection force.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that there is no doubt that in these various bureaus of the War Department there will be a necessity for the increase of temporary clerk hire.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are preparing estimates and will send them in soon. We inquired about that, but we have not received them yet. This bill has not been delayed on that account for the reason that the department has gone ahead inviting bids and awarding contracts for many things for which provision is made here. We believe that they ought to have the money at once.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on another item of appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes on another appropriation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak briefly to the House with reference to a matter which concerns every Member of the House, because it pertains to the reputation and standing of the House as a whole before the country.

Notwithstanding all that has been said in debate and the elaborate discussion in the House, I observe that the newspapers of to-day and yesterday reiterate the statement that Congress was responsible for the fact that our forces likely to be engaged in war in Mexico have not a sufficient number of machine guns. I do not know that anything I can say will reach the country at large, because so much has already been said in the newspapers that has caused a false impression to prevail, but I shall at least set the record right concerning it, and definitely show where the responsibility lies.

For three years this House has been appropriating for machine guns and the Ordnance Department has either returned the money or has not used it, as in case of the last appropriation. They have been saying that they could not find a machine gun that was entirely satisfactory. I notice that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], as a supplement to his remarks in the RECORD last Monday, printed a report from the Bureau of Ordnance showing that Army officers were still engaged in experimenting and testing, but evidently were not fully satisfied as to the type of machine gun that ought to be used. I am astonished at this report. For nearly two years they have been testing machine guns in this war in Europe under actual conditions of warfare, under tests more severe than could possibly be instituted by the Ordnance Department—tested in the field, in the trenches, in aeroplanes—and still the department thinks it necessary to make more tests in order to find out the proper type of gun.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman know that we can not get any information at present as to the results of the use of the machine guns in Europe?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall have to differ with the gentleman to a certain extent. I know some reports have been made. We have observers with the armies in Europe, and they have either made reports on the machine guns used or they are derelict in their duty, and if they have made their reports, as I assume they have, the Ordnance Department is derelict in not making any use thereof.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are not permitted to send out any information they please. The information that is sent is controlled by the Government, and in many instances the observers think that they have not been given much opportunity to observe anything.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is, of course, correct; but does the gentleman suppose for a moment that the English would object to a report on the Lewis guns, 4,000 of which have been manufactured in this country and sent over there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it would. I think it is very important from the standpoint of any Government engaged in war not to permit a report to be made upon the value of any particular implement, which might find its way into the hands of its enemy. They do not permit that character of information to get out, and we have had that statement made to us.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not for general publication; but they have been making reports.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know; but once it gets out, some people have very great facilities for finding out that information. These Governments now engaged in war do not want any information to be transmitted to anybody that might possibly find its way into the hands of the enemy and furnish information of value to them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is true, of course, if the information would be of value to them; but this would be of no value.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it would. The Germans could manufacture these guns if it was to their advantage to do so.

Mr. FARR. Where do the Mexicans get their machine guns?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Apparently in this country. As I said, there have been some 4,000 of these Lewis machine guns manufactured in this country and sent to England, and in addition to that, England has been manufacturing in Canada. It has been said here by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that England had to take any old kind of machine gun that she could get. On the contrary, she could take the newest and select the best when she had them manufactured in this country, and that is exactly what she did, according to the opinion of her experts.

Of course, the Lewis gun is not the only gun used by the English, for they have another gun that is largely used; but the Lewis gun has been used by them, so far as information goes, with perfect satisfaction. We have recently read in the newspapers that the English loaned 400 of these Lewis guns to the French to be used in the defense at Verdun, and that they were so used. I do not say that the Lewis gun is the best gun that can be manufactured. My opinion upon that point would not be of much value, but I can quote from the commander of the eastern department to the effect that the Lewis gun is three to one better than the Benet-Mecier or Springfield gun, which is the one used by our Army.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Does the gentleman know whether or not it is a fact that Lewis never gave our officers a gun to try?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The department experimented with the Lewis gun on several occasions.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understand the only one they ever experimented with they had to make the experiment with ammunition not fitted to the gun. The gun was so light it went to pieces under the heaviest test, and he never furnished another.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not say as to that occasion. They made a more recent experiment only a few months ago.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is when it was, a few months ago.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I think the gentleman is referring to the original experiment. The experiment made a short time ago was made with a gun fitted first for the English ammunition and also one fitted for our ammunition. But what I was going to say with reference to the gun which our Army is now using is that it is inferior to the standard types of guns now being used in Europe and that could be obtained in this country. It is not simply my opinion that I am expressing. I am expressing the general opinion of the officers that have used it. The general in command of the Department of the East has not hesitated to say that the Benet-Mecier gun was unfitted for military service; that it was complicated, easily got out of order, and was unreliable. Thus, as a result of the indecision of the Ordnance Department, in not being able to come to a conclusion in three years as to what kind of gun we ought to have, and what kind of gun was suitable for our Army, we not only do not have sufficient machine guns at this time, but those that we do have are of inferior type and unsuitable for service of the Army. I understand there have been some 53 of these guns furnished to the militia, and that is all that the militia has. If we have a hundred thousand militia on the Mexican border, as I suppose we will eventually, they ought to have more than ten times this number of machine guns. Some one asks whether they can be obtained. I think so. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] said the other day that the company which was manufacturing the Lewis guns had on hand 250 of those guns. I understand also that the Vickers Co. is prepared to turn out the type which the department in a sort of half-hearted way recommends for the use of the Army, but will the department get them? What we need now is more action and less red tape. If the department is not disposed to act quickly, then this Congress ought to act in defense of itself and in defense of the Government. It should make not merely an appropriation to buy machine guns but specifically direct that they shall be purchased with the money. We can not experiment forever while our brave soldiers are mowed down by their better armed adversaries.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is an easy matter for a man, who does not know anything about mechanics, to criticize the experts who are best qualified to discuss such things. We have in the Ordnance Department of the Army of the United States the most expert men in the world. They have been trying for years to devise and perfect a machine gun that will be satisfactory. They have not been able to do it. They use a type of gun in the Army that they have been manufacturing, but they have not been accumulated in great numbers, because experience has demonstrated that they are not as satisfactory as desired. The so-called Lewis gun has been under test. It has defects that it is hoped might be cured.

The ordnance experts have been working and conducting experiments and tests to endeavor to find a gun that, when adopted, will not only be free from the defects these guns have but be the most efficient weapon of its kind that any army possesses. Now, the United States Congress could not make itself any more ridiculous than by saying it is impatient, by finding fault with our experts because they can not solve the problem, and by compelling them to expend great sums of money for weapons that they say are not the most satisfactory that can be obtained.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe that these criticisms of the men, who alone are competent to determine this question, are neither justifiable nor appropriate at this time. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FARR. Are not machine guns being made in this country and exported to European countries for use in the European war?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. What of it?

Mr. FARR. Thousands of them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly, they are.

Mr. FARR. Those countries would not buy those guns unless they were effective?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are probably the best they can get.

Mr. FARR. Why can not we get guns that are as effective as those we are sending over there and which are being used in this war in Europe?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why should we obtain guns which, while they may be as satisfactory as we can get, do not meet the requirements that our experts insist they should have? Of course, the gentleman from Pennsylvania may know more than the experts——

Mr. FARR. I do not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Than the experts of the Ordnance Department, and if we were in a position where we had two or three million men on the firing line, and our own concerns could not turn out the types of guns we were using, and we could get a type of gun from some other county, we would take that gladly and use it; but nobody has yet said the Lewis gun is the most satisfactory gun, and the men in the service, who speak most loudly about these matters, are the ones who are the least expert about them. I believe Gen. Crozier and his assistants in the Ordnance Department are the only men who are qualified to determine the question. I have more confidence in him than all the volunteer experts that can be marshaled either in official or unofficial life.

Mr. FARR. I do not know anything about these guns, but I do know this: We have not the guns at places where we need them. We did not have them at Columbus, which was the cause of the present trouble, and the Mexicans did have them at Carrizal and they riddled our soldiers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, we did have them at Columbus, that is where the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FARR. Well, they were not effective.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The machine guns clogged, and the most perfect gun made so far is apt to clog under certain circumstances, and that is why the Army has not been expending millions of dollars because it is not satisfied with the type. Of course, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to heap up these guns that happen to clog, it is fortunate for the country that he is not in a position to do so.

Mr. FARR. If I may be permitted to do so, I desire to say that I want machine guns in order to protect our people.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman thinks we could improve on them by experiment and not allow the other side to mow down our men with their machine guns.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes about this machine gun.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make this observation in regard to these machine guns, and especially in regard to what is known as the Lewis gun.

It so happens that not a very great while ago I heard a conversation of some Army officers in reference to the Lewis gun. I did not take part in the conversation, I was merely a spectator, but from all I heard at that time I am satisfied the Lewis gun has been duly tested and that it was found to be imperfect. As I remember the conversation occurring there and the facts that came out at that time, Mr. Lewis furnished a gun to be tested by our officers, but it was not suited to our ammunition. Our ammunition was much heavier than the gun was constructed for and the consequence was that in a few rounds it went all to pieces, and Lewis since that time has not furnished the department any guns to test. Now, those are about the facts as I remember, and the further fact, as I have gathered from these discussions, Lewis is a discontented, disappointed, ex-officer who is more interested in making trouble than in furnishing the guns.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; for a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman I am not interested at all in the Lewis gun and I do not know it is the best gun, but I want to see the department purchase some kind of a gun, whatever kind they think best.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understand; but I simply wanted to emphasize the fact that Gen. Crozier and the men whose duty it was to test this gun understand their business, and I believe they have performed their duty, and I think all of this talk, or much of it, has been in favor of Lewis because the Government has not seen fit to buy his gun.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. For a question.

Mr. DOWELL. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Washington, if the officers have been doing their duty why it is that the National Guard are not equipped with these machine guns?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman need not ask me.

Mr. DOWELL. Then I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee why they are not equipped, if the officers of the Army have been doing their duty?

Mr. HOPWOOD. Mr. Chairman, some strictures have been passed upon a young man by the name of Lewis, not young any more——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. About 80.

Mr. HOPWOOD. No; he is about 60 or 65. He was born and raised in my district. I knew him when quite a young man, and I knew his father before him, and his mother; and he comes of as fine stock as there is in the United States of America. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has gone far afield in attacking Mr. Lewis personally because the War Department has not accepted the Lewis gun. I do not know anything about guns, but I believe Mr. Lewis has the best gun that has ever been gotten up in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] I believe that, although I am not an expert on guns. But I just want to say that when the gentleman attacks Mr. Lewis he attacks the wrong man. Mr. Lewis is as distinguished a man as there is in the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have not attacked him, but what I said I do not retract. I make no retraction or apology for what I said.

Mr. HOPWOOD. I do not care whether you do or not. But I want to reiterate here that Mr. Lewis comes from as good stock as anybody in this House, and I will not sit here, knowing him as I do, having known him as a boy and as a man for 50 years, and remain silent while a slur is attempted to be put upon that man. He has done as much, and more, probably, for his country, considering the position he has occupied, than any man in this House has done. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted a word, I just simply stated, from the information that I had, that a good deal of this trouble has been started by Mr. Lewis because the War Department had refused to take his gun. I make no apologies for that statement. I believe the RECORD shows it. I do not care what family Mr. Lewis comes from or who his ancestors were.

Mr. HOPWOOD. And I do not care what the gentleman thinks about it either.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word. This is not a question that Mr. Lewis has stirred up, as suggested by the gentleman from Washington. The question here is, the National Guard have been ordered to the front, and they have no machine guns. It is not a question that anybody has stirred up, except that it is a question as to lack of equipment for the Army that has been called out in the defense of the Government.

It seems to me that the officers in charge are derelict in their duty in not supplying the National Guard with proper equipment when they are called in the service of the country. They have had two or three years testing these various guns, and the time to quibble about whose make of gun shall be used has passed, and these officers ought to secure the best equipment possible. They ought to get it, and they ought to get it immediately. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That all the money hereinbefore appropriated under the titles Subsistence of the Army; Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps; Incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps; Transportation of the Army and its supplies; Water and sewers at military posts; and Clothing and camp and garrison equipage, shall be disbursed and accounted for by officers and agents of the Quartermaster Corps as "Supplies, services, and transportation, Quartermaster Corps," and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment by Mr. FITZGERALD: On page 5, after line 2, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"Medical and Hospital Department: For Medical and Hospital Department, including the same objects specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for 1916, $1,584,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendment to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee having, as Speaker pro tempore, assumed the chair, Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16678) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, had instructed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FEDERAL AID TO ROADS.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 7617, the roads bill, and I ask unanimous consent for a few minutes in which to make a preliminary statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 7617, the roads bill.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to make a statement, and for that purpose I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask if there is a written statement accompanying the report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, there is a little embarrassment about this conference report concerning which I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent.

When this bill went to conference there were some gentlemen who objected to section 8, the forest-reserve section in the Senate substitute, and a portion of the conferees on the part of the House gave those gentlemen to understand that before a conference report was agreed to they would be given an opportunity to have a separate vote on section 8. In the midst of the pressing business the conferees on the part of the House by an oversight made the conference report to the House without having first given the House an opportunity to vote upon that section separately.

What I desire now is to ask unanimous consent that before the vote is taken on the adoption of the conference report a vote may be taken to express the sense of the House on section 8.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman from Missouri to say that if objection is made to his request for unanimous consent the conferees will not be able to keep an agreement which they made?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is true, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MONDELL. I am very much interested in section 8 and think it is the best part of the bill, and therefore I regret to have section 8 separated from the balance of the bill and put to the test of a separate vote, but I certainly shall not object to the request if the gentleman assures us that it is necessary in order to give the conferees an opportunity to carry out an agreement they made.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I think that is true.

Mr. CARTER. Is section 8, which is being discussed now, included in the conference report, or was it rejected by the conferees?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. It was adopted in the conference report.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOWELL. In the event that section 8 is submitted to a vote and is not adopted, what is the status of the conference report?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. As I understand it, if that is voted down, then the question would arise as to whether the conference report should be adopted. If the sense of the House is that section 8 should go out of the bill, I suppose the next thing would be to disagree to the conference report and send the bill back to conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the request of the gentleman from Missouri is that it shall be in order, pending the consideration of the conference report, to consider a resolution something like this: Resolved, That it is the sense of the House that section 8 of the Senate amendment to this bill ought not to be agreed to.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is my understanding.

Mr. MANN. And if that motion should prevail, then the conference report would be rejected by the House. If the motion should not prevail, then the question would be on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That presents the situation.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not have the same understanding of the gentleman's request that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has. I do not understand that the gentleman requested the adoption, by unanimous consent, of a resolution that it was the sense of the House that section 8 should go out. Those of us who are in favor of section 8 could not agree to that sort of unanimous consent.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman misunderstands my request.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood that the gentleman's request was for a vote on section 8.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is correct.

Mr. MONDELL. Without any expression on the part of the conference committee as to whether it ought to stay in or go out. It is to be assumed that the committee desire to have it remain in the conference report, they having brought it in.

Mr. MANN. There is no way of taking a vote on section 8 while the conference report is undisposed of, except by unanimous consent, in the method I have suggested.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is the only way.

Mr. MANN. It is to avoid rejecting the conference report, which I think under the agreement that was made would probably be rejected, except for a unanimous-consent agreement like this.

Mr. DOWELL. I desire to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Let me answer this and then I will. What I intended to ask is that before a vote is taken on the adoption of the conference report a vote shall be taken to express the sense of the House as to whether it desires section 8 to remain in or go out of the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, if the House rejects section 8, does that reject the conference report?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I think it would take a separate vote.

Mr. DOWELL. I understood that it would reject the conference report.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. No; it would take another vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Now, will the gentleman state his request.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I ask unanimous consent that pending the consideration of this conference report a vote of the House be taken as to whether it desires section 8 of the Senate substitute to remain in or go out of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have section 8 read for the information of the House, so that we will know just what it is.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. It is the forest-reserve section.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to know just what it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read section 8.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, out of any moneys in the National Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and each fiscal year thereafter, up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, in all $10,000,000, to be available until expended under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, upon request from the proper officers of the State, Territory, or county for the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within or only partly within the national forests, when necessary for the use and development of resources upon which communities within and adjacent to the national forests are dependent: Provided, That the State, Territory, or county shall enter into a cooperative agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture for the survey, construction, and maintenance of such roads or trails upon a basis equitable to both the State, Territory, or county, and the United States: And provided also, That the aggregate expenditures in any State, Territory, or county shall not exceed 10 per cent. of the value, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, of the timber and forage resources which are or will be available for income upon the national forest lands within the respective county or counties wherein the roads or trails will be constructed; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall make annual report to Congress of the amounts expended hereunder.

That immediately upon the execution of any cooperative agreement hereunder the Secretary of Agriculture shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the amount to be expended by the United States within or adjacent to any national forest thereunder, and beginning with the next fiscal year and each fiscal year thereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall apply from any and all revenues from such forest 10 per cent thereof to reimburse the United States for expenditures made under such agreement until the whole amount advanced under such agreement shall have been returned from the receipts from such national forest.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Do gentlemen desire some time for discussion of this?

Mr. LENROOT. I would like some time.

Mr. MONDELL. We would like some time.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. How much time?

Mr. MONDELL. Would 45 minutes on a side be too much?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Let us have as little as we can get along with.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Forty-five minutes on a side will be all right. Is that enough for the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. LENROOT. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. MONDELL. There are quite a number of gentleman who want to be heard, as I understand it. I do not want to delay action, but have not quite a number of gentlemen asked the gentleman from Missouri for an opportunity to speak?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Not very many. There have been some.

Mr. MONDELL. I think 40 minutes on a side would cover it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I will ask unanimous consent that there may be 40 minutes on a side to discuss section 8, half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] asks unanimous consent that there shall be 80 minutes debate on this proposition, half of it to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that I want to get 15 minutes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. In view of the number of applications for time that have suddenly come in, I do not think anybody can get more than five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, section 8 of this bill provides an appropriation of a million dollars annually for 10 years to be used for building roads in forest reservations under cooperative agreements to be made between the Secretary of Agriculture and the authorities of the State, the money to be reimbursed from the receipts from the forest reserves.

Ultimately, therefore, not a dollar of this expenditure, which can not exceed $1,000,000 a year, will come out of the pockets of the American people, or will be money raised by taxation. Every dollar of it will be money received from the reserves, and a considerable part of it will be money the flow of which into the Treasury will be quickened by building the roads which will make it possible to reach the resources of the reserves now locked up on account of lack of transportation.

The forest reserves of the United States occupy approximately 160,000,000 acres of land, an area between four and five times the size of the State of Iowa, and unless there is some provision of this kind in the bill this vast area will receive no essential benefit by the terms of this bill. Nearly 20 per cent of the State I have the honor to represent will not be affected or helped in any way by the general provisions of the good-roads bill. There are few post roads in the forest reserves; there is little population in the forest reserves except those that are there temporarily at certain periods of the year, and unless this provision remains in the bill it will be equivalent to excluding from the benefits of the bill an area as large, as I have said, as five or six good-sized States in the Union.

Furthermore, the money proposed to be expended under this section of the bill is the only money proposed to be expended under the bill that will not be drawn from the people in the way of taxes, for it will come from income which the expenditure will itself largely create. This provision was adopted by the conference committee. They believe in it; they are for it; but they had made a promise to present this forest reserve road section for a separate vote in the House, and we are bound to respect that promise, and therefore we did not object to this request for unanimous consent. But we ask every Member of this House who is in favor of the bill, who proposes to vote for it, to vote for section 8 and do justice to that great forest-reserve section of the country, as we hope to do justice to the balance of the country in the enactment of the general provisions of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this proposition for two reasons: First, assuming there was merit to section 8, with the present condition of the Treasury, the Congress is not justified in voting a $10,000,000 appropriation for this purpose at this time. It ought not to require any argument, with Democrats especially, who are responsible for the appropriations made by this Congress, to convince them that they should vote to remove section 8 from this bill.

Mr. Speaker, aside from that, upon the merits of the proposition itself, section 8 as framed is without merit. There is a very clever joker concealed in the section, and I want to try to make it plain if I can. If this was a proposition to expend $10,000,000 upon the roads within the forest reserves, there might be, and indeed I am ready to say there would be, some merit to it. But, if you will observe the language of the bill, not one single penny of the $10,000,000 will necessarily be expended upon the roads within the forest reserves. The language is:

In all, $10,000,000 to be available until expended under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, upon request from the proper officers of the State, Territory, or county for the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within or only partly within the national forests.

That means that if here is a road 50 miles in length, and a half a mile of the 50 miles is in a forest reserve, this money can be expended, not upon the half a mile within the forest reserve necessarily, but on the 49½ miles outside the forest reservation.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. BROWNE. I would like to ask the gentleman, if the bill is subject to the construction he places on it, would it not be the fact that if a Secretary of Agriculture should approve of the construction of that kind it would forever relegate him to private life and the administration under it?

Mr. LENROOT. No; because under the provisions of the bill the Secretary of Agriculture is empowered to do two things—to approve the plans and specifications of the project, and if the road, the proposed plans and specifications of which meet the standard that is prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, in my mind he has no option but to approve that project. With reference to this very section the provision is:

Provided, That the State, Territory, or county shall enter into a cooperative agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture for the survey, construction, and maintenance of such roads or trails upon a basis equitable to both the State, Territory, or county and the United States.

That would mean, if it means anything, an arrangement between them with reference to the expense of the road, and the language of section 8 declares that the $10,000,000 may be expended within or without the forest reservation, and that deprives the Secretary of Agriculture of any discretion of saying that the money shall be expended within the national forest reserve.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would it not be the case that a road running 1 mile in a forest reserve and 20 miles outside, the Forest Department would say that the expense would be enough to take care of 1 mile?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not; because the section expressly declares that the money may be expended on roads within and without the forest reserve.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Would it be helpful to the gentleman if I told him that the Forester, when testifying before the Committee on Agriculture, stated that in some cases it would be necessary in developing the resources of the national forests to improve the roads altogether outside of the national forests?

Mr. LENROOT. That may be; but no such discretion is reposed in the Secretary of Agriculture or in the Forester in this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman think it is fair for a county—say, my county—to spend $100,000 of its money to build roads in the forest reserve—in other words, on the public domain?

Mr. LENROOT. No. I stated a moment ago, as the gentleman knows if he was following me, that if this was a provision which provided for the expenditure of money upon roads within forest reservations there would be some merit to it. In addition to this the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has just made a plea to the House that an injustice was suffered by these western States, because so much of the area was taken up in the forest reservations, and therefore that they would not receive any benefit from the major portion of this bill because of that fact. But I want to call to the attention of the House the fact that in making the apportionment of the $75,000,000 appropriated in the bill under the other sections credit is given to those States for every acre of land within the forest reservations; they receive a full share, counting in every acre of the forest reservations; and, not satisfied with that, they come in with section 8 and ask for $10,000,000 additional.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it not also true that this apportionment is made according to population, which is comparatively small in the public-land States?

Mr. LENROOT. One-third is made according to population and one-third is made according to area, and that means that you will in the State of Idaho include every acre of land you have in forest reservations in determining the amount that you will receive of the $75,000,000. Mr. Speaker, is there anything just in this kind of proposition? Is this House warranted in voting to expend $10,000,000 under this kind of a proposition? If they wanted a proposition that had some merit to it, that would appeal to this House, this language would have confined the building of roads within forest reservations, or at least have given to the Secretary of Agriculture in section 8 the absolute power over the matter, and provide that no money should be expended outside forest reservations except when it was necessary to complete the scheme of roads within a forest reservation.

I frankly say from the way things go in this House that I expect the House will vote to appropriate this $10,000,000, not because it is a good business proposition, not because it is good economy, not because a single Member of this House if he was treating this question as a business question would vote for it, for I know they would not do so, but I realize the force behind this bill, and that many Members will fear that if anything is done or any change is made in it, the entire bill will fail. So far as the body of the bill is concerned, I have said repeatedly that I am heartily in favor of Federal aid to roads, but I have said, and I repeat it, that with the present condition of the Treasury appropriations are not justified either for new public buildings or any unnecessary expense, but they should be confined to the absolutely necessary expenditures of the Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. I understand the gentleman to say that in the general appropriation of the whole sum these States that have forest reserves within them have apportioned to them that portion to which their whole growth entitles them, and then in addition $10,000,000 are added as a superfluity over and above the other States.

Mr. LENROOT. That is correct. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But this superfluity would be paid back by the other States, would it not? Are not the States to return this million dollars per year from returns given them from forest reserves?

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman really think that the National Government in the next 50 years will receive any substantial return from this $10,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I certainly do.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the gentleman takes a position contrary to the position he has taken every time when the matter of national forests has been before this House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I base my opinion upon the reports of the chief forester in which the estimates in the three reserves in my district show an increase from year to year over that which is cut, and until you have these roads you have no returns into the Treasury. The roads themselves will not cost what they will save in fire protection alone. You make this Government build fire trails, when you ought to build roads.

Mr. LENROOT. I have simply to say to the gentleman that if he was talking about something in the bill there would be merit to it, but the gentleman is not talking about the provisions of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will give me time I will.

Mr. LENROOT. The provisions of the bill do not confine the $10,000,000 to roads within the national forests. That is the answer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In or adjacent to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must not break in upon a Member's speech without his consent.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The one item in it that was winning my sympathy was the promise that the money would be paid back again. Am I to understand that there is no force to that at all?

Mr. LENROOT. Practically none, at least for a generation to come.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does not the bill provide that 10 per cent of the receipts from forest reserves shall be returned to the Federal Treasury each year?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but will the gentleman state what those receipts are?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I do not know what they are.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, the gentleman knows.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman knows as well as I do. It stands to reason that when these forests are opened up, and this timber goes to the market at a reasonable price, there will be a lot of it sold, instead of allowing the lumber companies to combine and charge any price they demand for the lumber, as they do now.

Mr. LENROOT. It is quite apparent, Mr. Speaker, that these gentlemen from the West desire to talk about something they would have the House believe is in the bill which is not there. The provision for reimbursement to the Government of 10 per cent of the receipts from forest reserves means nothing, for these very receipts from which the 10 per cent will be taken are money belonging to the Government and now paid into the United States Treasury; so the provision for reimbursement is a fraud upon its face.

In conclusion, I want to say that the application of this $10,000,000 will not be primarily for roads within national forests, but for roads outside of national forests. That is human nature; I do not blame them. They want all the money they can get out of the Federal Treasury, and this is a scheme to get more than their share out of the National Treasury because of the use of the words "national forests."

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 14 minutes.

DRAFT OF THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, through the courtesy of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] I call up the conference report on House joint resolution 242 and move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up House joint resolution 242 and asks that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced the conferees as follows: Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. ANTHONY.

FEDERAL AID TO ROADS.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, there are practically three points the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has made against the bill, or, rather, section 8. First, that the condition of the Treasury does not warrant the appropriation provided. Well, now, whatever is necessary to appropriate for proper development this Government and the people of this country are ready and willing to provide the money to the end that the people may have roads that they may take their produce to the markets. So as to the first objection I believe that it is not well founded. The American people want development and are willing to provide the means therefore. All they ask is honest and proper expenditures. The other propositions I will take up in order, and the next proposition of the gentleman is that this is "pork."

I say that is only to scare Members, that there might be "pork" in this bill, whereas it is a clean-cut proposition for this Government to improve and develop its own property, that belongs to it and that it handles and that it controls. Then, after this money is expended, which is obtained from the proceeds of the timber and forests now controlled by the Government, it will be returned to the Government as the proceeds are received from proper sales, rentals, and so forth, from the forest reserves. The joker that our friend refers to in the bill, while ordinarily he reads the whole of a statement, in this instance I do not believe the gentleman read it all. The restricting clause in this bill his argument would not apply to, and I want to read it for the benefit of the House.

For the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within or only partly within the national parks.

That is practically what the gentleman read. But we find the following language, following the above, read by the gentleman from Wisconsin:

When necessary for the use and development of resources upon which communities within and adjacent to the national forests are dependent.

Now, the question of constructing, when, where, and how, provided for in the bill must be determined by the proper official; that the road, if any is built without a national forest, must be for the purpose of developing the national forests. It must be dependent upon and must be necessary to assist the communities within the national forests——

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. Is there any language that says it must be necessary for the development of the forests? Is it not confined to the development of resources of the community outside of the forest?

Mr. RAKER. No; I do not think so. It says the development of resources upon which the communities within and adjacent to the national forests are dependent. For instance, here on that road is a large national forest that is distant 10 or 15 miles, sometimes 5 miles, running to another national forest with another 15, 20, or 50 miles. The question is whether or not you would build a road in that forest and then, with this 10 miles outside of the national forest, say that no money could be expended to make that road available so that both forests might be connected and the people in the intermediate part might receive the benefit of the development, to the end not that their property be developed but that the Government property be developed.

It is not for the purpose of constructing roads outside the national forests. That is furthest from the object of the bill. But there may be instances where it is absolutely necessary to construct some part of the road outside the forest reserve. When this occurs the road should be built. Those in charge must determine that it is necessary to develop the land within and adjacent to the forest. They must determine it is dependent upon that fact. Then they will use a part of the money or some of the money for the purpose of constructing these roads. Why, gentlemen, you have set aside these great national forests. They belong to this country; they are owned by all the people. It retards the development of the rest of the country in many, many ways, and why should you not appropriate the money from the sales of timber and other products of these forests, to the end that it may be used to develop, or at least assist in developing, the surrounding country; and when the timber is sold and the minerals in these forests are disposed of and the coal and water power is developed, then is returned this 10 per cent used, and the whole country is benefited. Section 8 of the conference report should be adopted. I firmly believe that the good judgment of the House will be exercised and the provisions of the bill providing for roads in the national forests will become a part of this bill when it is finally approved by the President. This legislation means immediate and great development in the Western States in which there are national forests. California is behind this bill and its people will be much pleased when this bill is finally a law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the House will agree to section 8 of this bill. I have read it carefully, and I certainly do not construe it as does my good friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. As I understand it, it simply provides that $1,000,000 shall be appropriated each year for the next 10 years for the development of roads within or partly within forest reserves. The reason that language was inserted was because the Forester determined that in building a road in a national forest engineering reasons would make it necessary at times to build a short stretch of road without the limits of the forest reserve, and that to compel them to discontinue the improvement of that link of the road simply because it ran for a very short distance outside the forest reserve would not be wise.

Now, from the standpoint of the Government, can we believe that it is the purpose to make this a vehicle for the construction of roads entirely without the forest reserves? It is difficult to believe that fact possible, because it is provided that the Secretary of Agriculture must approve the project, and he would not approve of any project not within the spirit of this law. It is further provided:

That immediately upon the execution of any cooperative agreement hereunder the Secretary of Agriculture shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the amount to be expended by the United States within or adjacent to any national forest thereunder; and, beginning with the next fiscal year and each fiscal year thereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall apply from any and all revenues from such forest 10 per cent thereof to reimburse the United States for expenditures made under such agreement until the whole amount advanced under such agreement shall have been returned from the receipts from such national forest.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I regret I have not the time.

Mr. LENROOT. I will yield time to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I will ask the gentleman where that money comes from that the Government is going to reimburse itself with?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It comes from the forest revenues, and, as I am informed, the revenues from that source last year amounted to more than $2,000,000, and it has averaged that for a number of years.

Mr. LENROOT. Whose money was the $2,000,000?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It has come from the forest reserves.

Mr. LENROOT. But whose money was it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is the money of the Government. It is placed in the miscellaneous fund.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; so that if we vote to reimburse 10 per cent of this fund, we are taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another. That is all.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It comes from the forest reserves. The gentleman from Wisconsin overlooks the fact that these forests are now there. Will you abandon them or develop them? If you develop them, you must provide these roads in order to procure revenues for them. You can not expect the States to provide them, because, as you state, the revenues now go to the Government and not to the States.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I can not yield; I have not the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This whole question boils down to this, that this Government is not spending one cent of money for the improvement of land that is not its own land. It is for the development of the forest reserves owned by the United States Government, and these roads will make more valuable the forest reserves that are the property of all the people of this country.

When we know that this conference report is already approved by the Senate and to become law needs only our approval, will you vote against section 8 and send the bill back to conference and run the risk of having the bill defeated? The Senate has indicated its determination to stand by section 8. If you by your vote approve of section 8, then this conference report will be agreed to this afternoon and the Government will commit itself to the policy of developing the roads of this country. If you vote against it and send it back to conference, the chances are it will meet the fate it has for the last six years.

I wish to ask every Member of the House on this side not to be carried away by the arguments of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. Remember you are voting to improve lands belonging to the United States Government, and when you appropriate money for that purpose it is coming back into the Treasury from the revenues of the Forest Service. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wisconsin use some of his time?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield five minutes, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if you were to listen to the advocates of this unfair proposition from the western country, you would think that the Western States are not receiving any return whatever from the building of roads at the present time. But we have a law that grants 25 per cent of the returns of the forest reserves, to be used for school purposes and for roads in the counties where the forest reserves are located.

In addition to that there is another law that requires 10 per cent of the net results of the forest reserves to be expended upon roads in the Forest Service. We are granting to these Western States that contain these forest reserves an advantage to the extent of 35 per cent of the revenues resulting from the forest reserves, and yet they come here and ask not to be treated on a par with the rest of the country, based upon territory, based upon population, and based upon rural and star routes, but they ask to be singled out and in addition receive $1,000,000 annually, besides the amount appropriated every year in the Agricultural appropriation bill, besides the 35 per cent that I have already referred to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at present. I have only five minutes. In the Agricultural appropriation bill passed at this session $400,000 is appropriated for the building of roads, in addition to the 35 per cent of the forest reserves receipts that the law grants to these States—first, 10 per cent for roads exclusively, and in addition 25 per cent to be apportioned at the discretion of the States for the support of schools and roads.

Why, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who I thought had some acquaintance with the conditions in the Western States, says that in those forest reserves there are no post roads. I have not much acquaintance with them, but last summer I spent three weeks in the Yosemite National Park, and I went about the various forest reserves thereabouts, and I saw with my own eyes roads covered by the rural mail service in the national reserve parks——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Those roads that you saw in the Yosemite Valley were built by this Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not referring to roads in the Yosemite Valley but to roads in the forest reserves adjacent to the Yosemite National Park.

Now, they say that they want this fund for the development of the forest reserves. Who ever heard of the building of a carriage road for the purpose of aiding logging operations? Any person who knows anything about the building of logging roads in the development of a timber country knows that they do not build those logging roads along the line of a permanent highway. The question before us is whether these Western States shall again get an unfair advantage at the expense of the rest of the country.

We have treated them fairly by portioning out 25 per cent of the net receipts of the sales of the forest reserves, to be utilized by the States, and apportioned to the counties where the forest reserves are located for the use of schools and roads. Then, again, we provide for an additional 10 per cent, to be used solely for the building of roads and trails and telegraph and telephone lines in forest reserves; and, in addition to that, to which they would be entitled under the general provisions of this bill—and no one questions that they have vast areas which entitle them to their proportionate part, based on area, and that they have star routes and rural routes, besides—they want you to vote, in addition to those large amounts, other millions annually. They want you to vote $1,000,000 annually in addition to all these amounts. I submit to you gentlemen whether it is right for them to ask it, whether it is proper for us in the condition of the Treasury, when we are going to vote $75,000,000 here, to vote an additional $10,000,000 as a favor to States that are already amply provided for in existing legislation and in existing appropriation bills?

I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not have any remaining to yield back.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if the Forest Service is already losing over $3,000,000 a year, that is about all the Government should stand. If the States in which the forest reserves are located are getting their just proportion of the money appropriated for the construction of roads by the aid of the Federal Treasury, it seems to me that is all they ought to expect. We are already paying the States in which the forest reserves are located 25 per cent of all the revenues that come from forest reserves, and we are paying them 10 per cent in addition for other purposes; and if we ever get any money back, which I doubt, we will be getting our own money back.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Why does the gentleman doubt whether the Government will get any money back, when the law provides specifically that 10 per cent of the yearly receipts shall be turned into the Treasury?

Mr. MADDEN. Because, if we do get any money back, it will be our own money that we have already paid them; so that we can not get money back without getting our own money back, for we have already handed it to them.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman realize that a large amount of the receipts from forest reserves come from the grazing privileges, from the stock pastured in those States and owned by residents of those States?

Mr. MADDEN. It does not make any difference from what source the receipts come.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. How can it be your money?

Mr. MADDEN. It goes into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, and it belongs to the United States Government, and not to the people of the States in which the reserves are located. We ought not to do for the people who live in these territories more than we do for other people. We ought not to do for them more than we do for those who pay the taxes to meet the bills.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the Government will not build trunk-line roads into its own property, the forest reserves, where it hopes to have returns, who will do it?

Mr. MADDEN. If I were going to run the forest reserves on a business basis, with the expectation of marketing the timber, I would not build highways over which to run wagons to move the timber that I wanted to move to market. I would build tramways, that could be built for almost nothing, over which the timber could be moved to a place where it could be marketed. You can not move timber economically to market by horses and wagons, and to talk about the construction of highways for that service is absurd. It is ridiculous, and no man with an ounce of sense, running this timber business for his own profit, would dream of it—not a man.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. As a great captain of industry, which the gentleman from Illinois is, I want to ask him, if he owned 100,000 acres of fine timberland, would he build roads in it to get the timber out, or would he allow the timber to mature and decay?

Mr. MADDEN. If I wanted to market the timber I would build tramways, and I would put locomotives on the tramways, and I would haul the timber to market in that way, and not by wagons with horses or mules. You can not do it by building highways. There is no use to talk about it. It is ridiculous; it is absurd. It is nonsense, and it is not business.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman vote for an amendment providing for the building of railroads in there and buying locomotives to haul the timber to market?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not have any left to yield back.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, there are 138,000,000 acres of forest reserve in the 17 Western States of this Republic, and we are all in favor of conservation, and we all ought to be in favor of it. I say to you now as a friend of conservation and as a friend of the forest reserves those of you who are fighting these roads in the forests to-day are cutting off your noses to spite your faces. You are making the forest reserves in the West so unpopular that sooner or later the people of those States will come in here and break down the forest reserves, and you will have no conservation and no forest reserves. My good friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and my other good friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], neither one voted for the roads bill when it first passed the House, and they are evidently not in favor of it now. They both voted against it when this section relating to forests was not in the bill. Are you gentlemen on this side of the aisle going to let them fling dust in your eyes on some side issue when they are opposed to good-roads legislation altogether? Are you gentlemen over on this side going to be misled into striking down conservation and helping to make it unpopular because a few gentlemen here—a very few—are opposed to any appropriation here for roads? During the last three days we have sat here, silent witnesses, and have seen millions appropriated on this floor without ever having been considered by a committee, without ever having any department reporting in favor of it. This proposition is favored by the department; it is reported on favorably by the department; it is asked for by the department; it is needed by the department; it is agreed to by the conference committee. The conference report is adopted by the Senate. The West is entitled to this consideration. It is only fair to them; it is only just to them. We ought not quibble and beat around the bush in giving it to them.

Let me call the attention of this House to one thing: You appropriated $35,000,000 for an Alaskan railway to open Alaska. Now you are asked to appropriate $1,000,000 a year for 10 years, to be returned to the Treasury out of these receipts, to help build roads in the 138,000,000 acres of forest reserves of the West. This is only advancement. These reserves are right here on the mainland of the United States. The roads are needed; the local communities are not able to build them. Are you going to do it, or are you going to screw up your faces and say, "This is wild abandonment of economy"? Are you going to try to break down the Forest Service? I do not believe this House is going to take the back track.

My good friend from Illinois, MARTIN MADDEN, comes in here every year and tries to break down irrigation. He would accomplish that if he could. I do not expect Chicago to do much irrigating in the West, and I do not expect my beloved friend, MARTIN MADDEN, to do much for irrigation in the West. I do not expect him to be in favor of it, but it is the duty of the rest of us to see to it that the Reclamation Service, that the Forest Service, and that conservation are not broken down in the West. It is easy for some one to come in here and start up a big hurrah and try to scare Members to death. I should think in the interest of good administration you would at least have selected two fellows in favor of the good-roads bill to wage this fight. I have called attention to the fact that the gentlemen from Wisconsin, both of them, voted against this very good-roads bill when it passed the House, and they were in slim company then, and if the House does its duty they will be in slim company to-day. Seventeen States out West can not carry the whole conservation propaganda for a hundred million people. You keep it up and the injustice so practiced will finally overthrow the forest reserves. The 17 Western States have 34 Senators and they, plus the industrious and diligent Members of the House from out there, will focus attention on it until it will break it down. The true friends of the forests will try to make them popular, not unpopular. This road provision will help popularize them and will help reconcile the West to these large reserves.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I have but five minutes, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDY. If the forest reserves were cared for by section 8, why were they considered and allowed for in the general apportionment?

Mr. FERRIS. They get a very small amount—10 per cent of the total receipts—not enough to make 1 per cent of what they ought to have.

Mr. HARDY. I do not think the gentleman appreciates my question. They are estimated as a part of the area of the State, and they get their proportion of the general fund. Is not that an injustice to other States if you take care of them in this section?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think so. Here is a great Government reserve that pays no taxes, that is held there without use, without occupation, without productiveness, and what for? In order that the rest of the country may have conservation of timber, lumber, and all the uses for which timber can be used. I say to you that the little, sparsely settled, arid States of the West can not longer in justice carry the whole conservation propaganda for a hundred million people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 15 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I have read the provisions of this bill and I wonder what my colleagues on the House Committee on Roads think of the measure that has come back to this House after the glowing representations they made here on the floor of the House as to the perfect piece of legislation that they had evolved when it was discussed last January. I stand somewhat amazed at the remarks of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] when he gets up here and holds out something akin to a threat to the House, and says that if you do not leave this section in the bill 17 States small in population, 17 half-settled States in the West, are coming in here and overthrow and tear to tatters the great program of conservation which has heretofore been followed. These 17 States have Representatives on the floor who believe in the conservation of everything except the Public Treasury. Section 8 was evidently put into the bill, Mr. Speaker, to give it a little air of respectability.

Mr. FERRIS rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. WALSH. No; I do not yield. It was put in there to give the bill some semblance of respectability. A provision is put in here about the reimbursement of the Public Treasury.

If it is a good thing for the United States Government to reimburse itself out of its own funds, why isn't it a far better thing for the States within which these roads are to be built to reimburse the Government for the funds that will be used in the building of the roads? That would hardly be a pleasing prospect to these States or the States who have for years neglected a plain duty in relation to taking care of their internal improvements. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that section 8 ought to be stricken from the bill. The whole bill ought to be defeated, as it is an unnecessary burden for the Nation to assume at this time. It is colossal in its raid on the Treasury and is barefaced in its discrimination against the States that pay the major portion of the taxes now assessed as a result of Democratic policies.

Mr. RAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. WALSH. I do not. I say that this section ought to be stricken from the bill for another reason, and that is because it is a subject entirely apart from the purpose of this bill. It is not to promote or facilitate the carrying of the rural mails on any roads on which they may now or hereafter be carried. It is an entirely foreign subject. It ought to come in here as a separate proposition, and should come in here connected with some measure having to do with forest reserves or national parks. Where, oh where, has the $65,000 slice of park gone to, Mr. Speaker? That apportionment which was so vigorously defended by the farmers' friends from the vast agricultural States of Virginia, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, and South Carolina. Truly, those gentlemen have just cause to weep.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will not. The appropriation of $25,000,000, which the Shackleford bill called for, in a few years will be increased by this glorious measure to $75,000,000 for rural post roads, and we will then only have just begun this enormous program for the construction of roads throughout the States of this country under Federal auspices, and paid for by the dozen or so really progressive States of the Nation. Under the proportions established by this bill these 17 sparsely populated Western States are going to get the lion's share, because they are going to get it under the seven other sections of this bill and because of their vast areas of nonproductive, lightly taxed land, and if this section is allowed to remain in there they are going to get it also under the pretense of assisting in the development of the forest reserves. [Applause.] They will get an unfair and unjustifiable proportion of the sum herein appropriated, and at the expense of New England and the great manufacturing States within our borders.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill, but I believe if section 8 is voted down it means no good-roads legislation at this session of Congress. There have been arguments made by the opponents of this bill that section 8 of this bill does not provide that the roads shall be made within the forest reserves; that the State having forest reserves can obtain aid for roads located any place within the whole State where the forest reserve is located. I call your attention to section 1 of the bill, which seems to have been overlooked. If anyone will read this section of the bill, they will see that any road that is located under the provisions of this bill must be located with the consent of the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway departments must agree where the road shall be located. Therefore the roads provided for under section 8 must be located in and adjacent to the national forests for the development of the national forests and making the resources of the national forests available. Unless the Secretary of Agriculture and the State authorities conspire together to evade the law, these roads will be located fairly, and with this object in view, as clearly expressed in the bill.

I do not believe that a public officer like the Secretary of Agriculture is going to do anything wrong or unfair in locating a road upon which Government aid shall be expended. The Government is simply improving its own property and is advancing money that it will receive back from the forest reserves. The resources of the forest reserves are not available unless we have roads to those resources. These large forest reserves located throughout the West, exempt from taxation, retard the States' development, and it is only fair that the Government do something toward building roads through its own property to connect the State roads on each side. Even an individual would be compelled to do as much as this. The State also is obliged to contribute an equitable amount toward the building and maintenance of these roads.

Another thing. I think that many of our eastern friends who are opposing this road legislation will want to go out and visit our great national parks and forest reserves, and the only way to visit our national parks is to make the beautiful scenery and rich resources of the parks accessible to the public by building good roads in these parks. People spend millions of dollars every year in going to Europe to view scenery that does not begin to be as good as that which we have in our national parks, and I think it is only fair and just that some of the money coming from these great forest reserves be used to make roads within the national parks and forest reserves. Mr. Speaker, I have noticed that almost every man who has spoken against this provision of the bill spoke or voted against the good-roads bill when it first passed the House. They undoubtedly know that it means, if this eighth section of this bill is defeated at this time, that this bill goes back to conference, and it is extremely doubtful whether we will get any good-roads legislation at this session of Congress. We can not ever get a road bill which everyone will be perfectly satisfied with. We have to concede certain points in a great country with so many diversified interests when we legislate for the whole country on a question like roads.

In all great national projects we have to concede certain points, and even if this road law does not meet with the approval of everyone in every particular, I think on the whole it is a step in the right direction, and it will start us in on a great project of national aid to roads which is going to be of inestimable value to all of the people of the country. By passing this bill at this time, voting in favor of this eighth provision and the conference report, we will have a good-road law, and we will at least have national aid given to wagon roads which the people of this country have been trying to get for the last 50 years. [Applause.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, as a believer in the conservation of our national forests, I do not look upon it that that means that they are not to be developed. We nationally conserve them in order to avoid waste or abuse by private industry, and as a believer in this principle of conserving them I also believe in developing them. [Applause.] I am not opposed to the extension of conservation, but I desire to see the forest reserves made usable for the Government instead of for the individual, and if that is true, then we do not want them to stand unused or undeveloped. I want to make them usable, and I think the Government is justified in advancing, if necessary, a certain portion of the money to develop the forests, with the understanding that that is to be returned to the Government. Believing that it is the policy of the Government to use the forests in our conservation scheme rather than to allow them to be regarded as something too valuable to be utilized, I am going to vote for section 8. I think I am justified in it, and I also believe in the building of roads with Federal aid. I think that is a justifiable expenditure of money. For that reason I shall vote not only for section 8 but for the bill as reported. [Applause.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, much has been said in opposition to section 8 of this measure, which is calculated to mislead the House as to the real purpose and intention of this section. It has been suggested that this money may not be expended for the purpose of developing roads in the national forests, and for opening up the national forests, but may be expended outside of the national forests. In reply to that, I will say to the House that this measure was prepared and is asked for by the Secretary of Agriculture, who has the national forests under his care and charge. Furthermore, the bill provides that before a dollar can be expended a contract must be entered into between the State on the one side and the Secretary of Agriculture on the other; nothing can be done without his approval; he is there to protect the national forests, as it is his duty to do, and it is his duty to see to it that the proposed roads shall be such as will develop and open up the national forests. There is nothing in the objection that this money may not be spent to open up the national forests unless you assume that the Secretary of Agriculture will neglect his duty. What is the situation in my State and in other Western States? Gentlemen from Eastern States demand that some of our Western States shall be set aside in reservations as wood lots, I might call them, for the use and welfare of the future. We do not object to having our States set aside as wood lots, but if they are set aside as wood lots, we do not want these wood lots running across and lengthwise of our States as impassable barriers, as they are in the State of Oregon. Running across my State for 275 miles there is an enormous forest. It renders one side of the State during a large portion of the year inaccessible to the other side of the State, except that there was built by public-spirited citizens and counties at the northern boundary along the Columbia River, at a cost of nearly $1,000,000, the great Columbia highway. Otherwise this forest renders the eastern part of the State practically inaccessible to the western part of the State. We have in the State of Oregon 13,000,000 acres in forest reserves, worth four or five hundred million dollars—an area almost three times the size of the State of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who is objecting so strenuously to section 8 of this bill. We can not tax this great area which is almost three times the size of his State. If we could tax that area we would build, at our own expense, roads from one end of the State to the other. Last year that enormous area only brought into the State treasury for road and school purposes the small sum of about $49,000. We do not think we are making an unjust demand on the Government when we ask that money be appropriated to open roads through these forests to develop them and to make one side of our State accessible to the other.

I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague, Mr. MCARTHUR.

[Mr. McARTHUR addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the request to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have five legislative days to extend their remarks upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill for five legislative days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I earnestly hope that the House will agree to section 8, authorizing the expenditure of $1,000,000 per year for a period of 10 years for the construction of roads in the forest reserves in cooperation with the States and counties in which such reserves are situated. This section enables the Government to improve and make accessible and salable the timber, grazing, and other resources on its property. It also makes it possible for the people who live in and adjacent to the reserves to have the means of communication and transportation absolutely necessary for their growth and development, and to give them opportunity for obtaining proper mail facilities. During the past year Oregon received three-eighths of 1 cent per acre in lieu of taxes for forest-reserve lands. No one will maintain that such an amount gives any appreciable relief to the counties in the construction of roads. The proposed appropriation in this section gives, it is true, small relief in a very difficult situation. If the Government intends to hold these vast reserves, it should not leave them in a wild and inaccessible condition. They should be improved by the Government, at least in construction of roads, to the same extent that they would be required to be improved if they were held in private ownership. Such improvement is only the merest justice to the States in which great areas are withheld from taxation. I am not advocating any utopian scheme at the expense of the National Government, and nothing of that kind is possible under this section. These roads will be built in cooperation with the States and counties, and every dollar expended will be profitably expended. Moreover, the Forest Service in its road construction has proved that it builds good roads at minimum cost also.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two and one-half minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express the full appreciation on my part and of my colleague [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] of the kindness of friends on both sides of this aisle which has enabled us, through the medium of unanimous consent, to make effective an understanding which through inadvertence had been overlooked.

The immediate proposition before the House this afternoon, is the very simple one whether the United States Government shall improve its own property. That is the kernel of this controversy. I do not think it was ever contemplated that these forests should remain wholly undeveloped and unprovided with roads or trails. The addition of roads will plainly increase the value of the vast area included within our forest reservations. Section 8 provides that the United States shall improve its own property. Is there any valid objection to that action, particularly when we find included in this section a provision for the reimbursement of this expenditure out of the revenues derived from this forest property? In what other legislation for the development of the country, and surely no one can deny this is a proposition of national development, do we find a provision for the reimbursement of the Federal Treasury for the amounts proposed to be expended?

It was only a day or two ago that this body provided hundreds of thousands of dollars for the development of roads in Alaska with no provision or suggestion of provision for reimbursement. Speaking for myself, I see much greater merit in a proposition which looks to the development of the States in the West which hold these great forest reserves than in one looking solely to the development of Alaska. [Applause.] This proposition commends my unreserved support on its merits. It is a project of real conservation. In this connection I desire to call attention to the fact that every gentleman who has opposed this section, is a gentleman who by antecedent vote and speech has shown that he was opposed to the entire policy of Federal aid to road development. It is not that this proposition is particularly obnoxious and objectionable, but that these gentlemen now in opposition are fundamentally opposed to the plan for the Federal Government to aid in the development of the United States through the construction and maintenance of roads over which the mails and traffic of the entire country will be carried.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I know that the gentleman from Virginia wants to be correct.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Why, certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. He does not want to state that speeches made in opposition to this section of the report are all made by men who are opposed to the bill for good roads as it originally passed the House?

Mr. SAUNDERS. So far as I am aware——

Mr. MADDEN. I voted for the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. So far as I am aware every speech that has been made this evening in opposition to section 8 has been made by some gentleman who was originally opposed to the road bill.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman must be mistaken, for I voted for the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Did not the gentleman speak against the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. I spoke for the bill and voted for it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. My recollection was that the gentleman's attitude toward the bill when it was under consideration, was one of antagonism to the bill, and his speeches were to that effect; but I do not recall how he voted. Of course I accept the gentleman's statement in that connection.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I find that I have promised seven minutes more than the time I have, and I want to ask unanimous consent to extend the time——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, what is the request? [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. There is only one more speech on this side.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri have any request to make?

Mr. LENROOT. I stated to the gentleman I had two more speeches. Now, if the gentleman wants to hold me to it——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I have only one on this side. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman object to my having two short speeches?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. No; go ahead.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota. [Mr. ANDERSON.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the good-roads bill when it passed the House. I have always been for Federal aid for the construction of roads. I am for Federal aid now, but I am opposed to section 8 of this bill.

The question presented by section 8 is not the question of whether we will do something for the development of the national forests or for the development of roads in national forests, but a question of how much we will do. We are now appropriating $400,000 a year for the construction of roads and trails in national forests.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not yield in five minutes. In addition we are turning over to the States for expenditure in the counties in which the national forests are situated for schools and roads 25 per cent of the proceeds of the national forests and in addition 10 per cent more for roads alone.

Now, the statement has been made that the amounts which will be paid under this bill for the construction of roads in the national forests will be reimbursed out of the proceeds arising from the sales of timber in national forests. As a matter of fact, nothing of the kind will be the case. Instead of paying for these roads out of the proceeds of national forests, we must pay for them out of the money which we collect from the taxpayers' pockets. We are now paying for the maintenance of the national forests approximately $5,000,000 per year, and we receive from the sales of timber in the national forests approximately $2,500,000 a year, so that there is now in the operation of the national forests a deficit each year of $2,500,000, out of which we are proposing to reimburse the Government for the additional million dollars that we propose to expend under this bill.

Of the $2,500,000 which we receive from the proceeds of national forests, as I said before, we now spend approximately $1,300,000 in the construction of roads and trails in these national forests, and we are now proposing to spend an additional one million, although the national forests are not now self-supporting, and we are unable to find out from the Forest Service when they will be self-supporting.

If, as a matter of fact, the Forest Service were self-supporting; if, as a matter of fact, we were getting more from the national forests than we were putting into them, then there would be some justification for this proposal to pay a million dollars more than we are now paying for the construction of roads and trails in those national forests. But the proposition to pay it out of a deficit is absurd and a pure humbug.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does not the gentleman know that the Forester tells the committee that the reason, or the principal reason, why the receipts from the national forests are not larger is that the development is retarded by lack of roads?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not remember any such statement having been made to the committee.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It has been made year after year.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have not heard it made, and if it has been made, I doubt whether it is correct. The proposition suggested by the gentleman of building roads in national forests for the purpose of aiding logging operations is absurd, as it will be seen to be by anybody who knows anything about logging operations on a large scale. The purpose is not for the development of the national forests, but it is to build roads for the settlers in the national forests and settlers who have settled in areas adjacent to the national forests. It is a proposition to give the national-forest States a sum in addition to that to which they would be entitled if they were treated on the same basis as the other States are treated and in addition to the $1,300,000 they are now getting.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, the course of this debate has taken a turn that was quite expected by me. Nearly every gentleman who has spoken on this subject at some time or other in his speech has warned the Members of the House that if they vote against section 8 there will probably be no good-roads legislation, which leaves the proposition a logrolling one—that you tickle me and I will tickle you, or else we can not get any legislation at the hands of Congress at this session.

Now, in the first place, Mr. Speaker, that is not so. This House can vote to express itself under this motion that section 8 should be stricken out, but the House will hereafter have opportunity to recede from the position that it may take to-day and adopt the provision of section 8 included in the Senate bill if later it shall be found necessary.

Mr. Speaker, another phase of this subject: My good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] in the speech that he made said that he took the position he did because he was afraid that unless legislation of this character was enacted the whole system of conservation would be broken down.

Mr. Speaker, I think I can say that I have been somewhat active in pressing conservation measures before this House during the years that have gone, and one of the reasons why I am opposed to section 8 is that if we are going to legislate in this manner conservation is in danger of being broken down. In time to come, if these conservation measures relating to the West shall be broken down, it will not be because of pressure against them from the West, but it will be because of the millions of dollars that have been paid out of the United States Treasury, coming from the taxpayers as a whole, from which there is no direct return to them, but only to the people who inhabit the Western States.

That is the danger there is to the conservation movement to-day. On these forest reservations we are spending out of the United States Treasury two and one-half million dollars more than is received, and when section 8 becomes a law we will be expending $3,500,000 out of the money of the taxpayers of all the United States for the benefit of the people of the Western States alone, and we must call a halt somewhere, so far at least as extravagant expenditures are concerned.

Now, in the opening speech that I made I said that I am not opposed to roads upon national forests. I am not. We do need them, but we do not need them in the manner proposed in this bill, where in all probability we will not get them. If we are going to build roads upon national forests—and we ought to—the Government ought to build the roads from beginning to end. They ought to be appropriated for in the Agricultural appropriation bill, and the Government ought to have the right to supervise and construct the roads from start to finish, which it will not have under this bill.

Now, it has been said a number of times by a number of speakers that I and my colleague [Mr. STAFFORD] voted against the original bill before this House, and therefore our arguments should not be given any great amount of weight. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that I voted against that bill, not because I am not in favor of the principle embodied in that bill or in this bill, because I am in favor of it. I did have an idea—there were not many of us, it is true—but I was one of a small number who had the idea that under the present condition of the Treasury, with a daily increasing deficit in the Treasury, there ought to be some halt upon expenditures by the Government during this time of stress and of trial.

Reference has been made to the Alaskan bill. I voted for the Alaskan bill. I want to say to this House that if the Alaskan bill had come up in this session as a new proposition, under the present condition of the Treasury, I should not have favored it. I should have voted to postpone the building of that railroad in Alaska until the Treasury of the United States was in better condition. True, I was in favor and am in favor of going on with that construction in Alaska, because unless we go on we will lose a very large percentage of the Government money already expended upon that railroad, and we should go on with the work for exactly the same reason that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors were justified in appropriating for continuing improvements upon harbors wherever to stop the improvement would mean a loss to the Government of the money already expended. But, Mr. Speaker, to launch out upon new propositions, however worthy they may be, and however desirable they might be when the Treasury was in a normal condition and we had normal times in the country, this is not the time, under the present circumstances, to launch into expenditures of hundreds of millions of dollars. [Applause.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote for this conference report precisely as it has been presented to this House. I intend to vote for it for the reason that I am in favor of Federal aid in the building of roads and, further, because I am in favor of the conservation of the natural resources of this country through a proper and sane development of them.

This bill as reported involves both propositions—aid in the construction of roads in order that the farmers of this country may more cheaply transport their products to the market and that they may be more cheaply bought by those who consume them; and, then, I am in favor of it because I see in it a great forward step in the matter of the conservation of the natural resources of this country.

The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] alludes sneeringly to the 17 forested States of the West as "17 little Western States." The gentleman from Massachusetts does not realize that the public forest domain of this country, composing 137,000,000 acres, is twice as large as all the New England States put together, Massachusetts included. [Applause.]

The truth of the matter is that the distinguished, active, and energetic gentleman from Massachusetts has been the one fly in the ointment of good-road legislation at this session of Congress. [Applause.] It is true, Mr. Speaker, that he has been a rather small fly, but nevertheless a fly. [Applause and laughter.]

I have been greatly surprised at the attitude of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who has posed—and I think properly posed—for many years as the chief champion of conservation legislation in this country. The gentleman is still a conservationist. I am sure of that; but the gentleman is overlooking the fact that in this section 8 of this conference report is to be found one of the longest steps in the direction of real conservation that this Congress has ever taken. [Applause.] The gentleman's principles have not changed on this conservation proposition. It is that his judgment has gone wrong. I am a conservationist. I have stood here for 14 years—battling with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] in many instances—to prevent private corporations and big business either from bottling up the natural resources of this country or entirely gobbling them in their own interests. I stand here now opposed to exploitation of the property that belongs to all the people of the country by and for a few great private concerns. I am not such a conservationist as to fail to see the absolute necessity and the wisdom of developing to their full capacity and service the natural resources of the country. Here we have an immense domain of forested area. It belongs to me in South Carolina, 3,000 miles away, as much as it does to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], who sits next to me and is a part of that domain. I am interested in the development of that property. I want to see it bring into the Treasury a fair return. I think I have sense enough to know that a great forest with hundreds of millions of acres of standing timber in it will never be of any use to the people of this country until we have some means of getting into it and developing it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. Those in favor of keeping section 8 in this bill will vote "aye," those opposed "no."

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LENROOT. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 180, noes 53.

The SPEAKER. Section 8 stays in the bill, and the question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have the conference report and statement been read?

The SPEAKER. They have not. The Clerk will read the conference report.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement.

During the reading of the report the following occurred:

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The statement was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 856).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to H. R. 7617, entitled "An act to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by the amendment of the Senate insert the following:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the States, through their respective State highway departments, in the construction of rural post roads; but no money apportioned under this act to any State shall be expended therein until its legislature shall have assented to the provisions of this act, except that, until the final adjournment of the first regular session of the legislature held after the passage of this act, the assent of the governor of the State shall be sufficient. The Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department of each State shall agree upon the roads to be constructed therein and the character and method of construction: Provided, That all roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall be free from tolls of all kinds.

"SEC. 2. That for the purpose of this act the term 'rural post road' shall be construed to mean any public road over which the United States mails now are or may hereafter be transported, excluding every street and road in a place having a population, as shown by the latest available Federal census, of 2,500 or more, except that portion of any such street or road along which the houses average more than 200 feet apart; the term 'State highway department' shall be construed to include any department of another name, or commission, or official or officials, of a State empowered, under its laws, to exercise the functions ordinarily exercised by a State highway department; the term 'construction' shall be construed to include reconstruction and improvement of roads; 'properly maintained' as used herein shall be construed to mean the making of needed repairs and the preservation of a reasonable smooth surface considering the type of the road; but shall not be held to include extraordinary repairs, nor reconstruction; necessary bridges and culverts shall be deemed parts of the respective roads covered by the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the sum of $5,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, the sum of $10,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $15,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $20,000,000; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $25,000,000. So much of the appropriation apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the succeeding fiscal year, except that amounts apportioned for any fiscal year to any State which has not a State highway department shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the third fiscal year succeeding the close of the fiscal year for which such apportionment was made. Any amount apportioned under the provisions of this act unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under the terms of this section shall be reapportioned, within 60 days thereafter, to all the States in the same manner and on the same basis, and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State highway departments and to the governors of States having no State highway departments in the same way as if it were being apportioned under this act for the first time: Provided, That in States where the constitution prohibits the State from engaging in any work of internal improvements, then the amount of the appropriation under this act apportioned to any such State shall be turned over to the highway department of the State or to the governor of said State to be expended under the provisions of this act and under the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture, when any number of counties in any such State shall appropriate or provide the proportion or share needed to be raised in order to entitle such State to its part of the appropriation apportioned under this act.

"SEC. 4. That so much, not to exceed 3 per cent, of the appropriation for any fiscal year made by or under this act as the Secretary of Agriculture may estimate to be necessary for administering the provisions of this act shall be deducted for that purpose, available until expended. Within 60 days after the close of each fiscal year the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine what part, if any, of the sums theretofore deducted for administering the provisions of this act will not be needed for that purpose and apportion such part, if any, for the fiscal year then current in the same manner and on the same basis, and certify it to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State highway departments, and to the governors of States having no State highway departments, in the same way as other amounts authorized by this act to be apportioned among all the States for such current fiscal year. The Secretary of Agriculture, after making the deduction authorized by this section, shall apportion the remainder of the appropriation for each fiscal year among the several States in the following manner: One-third in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census; one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in all the States, at the close of the next preceding fiscal year, as shown by the certificate of the Postmaster General, which he is directed to make and furnish annually to the Secretary of Agriculture.

"SEC. 5. That within 60 days after the approval of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury and to each State highway department and to the governor of each State having no State highway department the sum which he has estimated to be deducted for administering the provisions of this act and the sum which he has apportioned to each State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and on or before January 20 next preceding the commencement of each succeeding fiscal year shall make like certificates for such fiscal year.

"SEC. 6. That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its State highway department, submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction of any rural post road or roads therein. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve a project, the State highway department shall furnish to him such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require: Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve only such projects as may be substantial in character and the expenditure of funds hereby authorized shall be applied only to such improvements. Items included for engineering, inspection, and unforeseen contingencies shall not exceed 10 per cent of the total estimated cost of the work. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve the plans, specifications, and estimates, he shall notify the State highway department and immediately certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof. No payment of any money apportioned under this act shall be made on any project until such statement of the project, and the plans, specifications, and estimates therefor, shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"When the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that any project so approved by him has been constructed in compliance with said plans and specifications he shall cause to be paid to the proper authority of said State the amount set aside for said project: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, from time to time make payments on said construction as the same progresses, but these payments including previous payments, if any, shall not be more than the United States's pro rata part of the value of the labor and materials which have been actually put into said construction in conformity to said plans and specifications; nor shall any such payment be in excess of $10,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span. The construction work and labor in each State shall be done in accordance with its laws, and under the direct supervision of the State highway department, subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and in accordance with the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

"The Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department of each State may jointly determine at what times, and in what amounts, payments, as work progresses, shall be made under this act. Such payments shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, on warrants drawn by the Secretary of Agriculture, to such official, or officials, or depository, as may be designated by the State highway department and authorized under the laws of the State to receive public funds of the State or county.

"SEC. 7. To maintain the roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall be the duty of the States, or their civil subdivisions, according to the laws of the several States. If at any time the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that any road in any State constructed under the provisions of this act is not being properly maintained he shall give notice of such fact to the highway department of such State and if within four months from the receipt of said notice said road has not been put in a proper condition of maintenance then the Secretary of Agriculture shall thereafter refuse to approve any project for road construction in said State, or the civil subdivision thereof, as the fact may be, whose duty it is to maintain said road until it has been put in a condition of proper maintenance.

"SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, out of any moneys in the National Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and each fiscal year thereafter, up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, in all $10,000,000, to be available until expended under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, upon request from the proper officers of the State, Territory, or county for the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within or only partly within the national forests, when necessary for the use and development of resources upon which communities within and adjacent to the national forests are dependent: Provided, That the State, Territory, or county shall enter into a cooperative agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture for the survey, construction, and maintenance of such roads or trails upon a basis equitable to both the State, Territory, or county, and the United States: And provided also, That the aggregate expenditures in any State, Territory, or county shall not exceed 10 per cent of the value, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, of the timber and forage resources which are or will be available for income upon the national forest lands within the respective county or counties wherein the roads or trails will be constructed; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall make annual report to Congress of the amounts expended hereunder.

"That immediately upon the execution of any cooperative agreement hereunder the Secretary of Agriculture shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the amount to be expended by the United States within or adjacent to any national forest thereunder, and beginning with the next fiscal year and each fiscal year thereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall apply from any and all revenues from such forest 10 per cent thereof to reimburse the United States for expenditures made under such agreement until the whole amount advanced under such agreement shall have been returned from the receipts from such national forest.

"SEC. 9. That out of the appropriations made by or under this act the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere, to be taken from the eligible lists of the Civil Service Commission, to rent buildings outside of the city of Washington, to purchase such supplies, material, equipment, office fixtures, and apparatus, and to incur such travel and other expense as he may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 10. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 11. That this act shall be in force from the date of its passage.

"Amend the title so as to read: 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

The title to the bill has been amended as follows: "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes."

The following changes in the amendment of the Senate were made by the committee on conference:

Section 1: The following language stricken out: "Nor shall any of the money appropriated under this act be used for constructing extensions of, or mere branch roads out from, toll roads."

Section 2: The following language stricken out: "Not constructed under this act."

Section 2: And also the following language was substituted: "'Properly maintained' as used herein shall be construed to mean the making of needed repairs and the preservation of a reasonably smooth surface considering the type of the road; but shall not be held to include extraordinary repairs nor reconstruction."

Section 4: Three per cent was substituted for 5 per cent.

Section 6: The language substituted in this section was for the purpose of enabling States to receive the benefit of this act by building roads other than by contract.

Section 7: The language of this section was stricken out and the following inserted:

"SEC. 7. To maintain the roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall be the duty of the States, or their civil subdivisions, according to the laws of the several States. If at any time the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that any road in any State constructed under the provisions of this act is not being properly maintained he shall give notice of such fact to the highway department of such State and if within four months from the receipt of said notice said road has not been put in a proper condition of maintenance then the Secretary of Agriculture shall thereafter refuse to approve any project for road construction in said State, or the civil subdivision thereof, as the fact may be, whose duty it is to maintain said road, until it has been put in a condition of proper maintenance."

D. W. SHACKLEFORD,
E. W. SAUNDERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. RUBEY) there were 181 ayes and 53 noes.

So the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SHACKLEFORD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

DRAFT OF THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, inadvertently, a little while ago, when the conference report was up on House joint resolution 242, the conference report was not agreed to. It is the joint resolution to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 867).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. The managers on the part of the House made every effort to come to an agreement with the managers on the part of the Senate, but were unable to do so.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, since this conference report was agreed to and the conferees appointed by both Houses another conference has been had, and I now present the conference report and ask that it be agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 882).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories and the District of Columbia, and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4 and 6, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and change the section numbers in the bill as follows:

On page 2, line 23, strike out "3" and insert "2."

On page 3, line 3, strike out "4" and insert "3."

On page 3, line 18, strike out "5" and insert "4."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out the word "drafted," and after the word "forces" insert the following: "drafted for this emergency"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

LUKE LEA,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire which House had the papers, and whether any action has been taken on the conference report by the Senate.

Mr. HAY., On the first conference report, which was a report to which we could not agree, the Senate acted and asked for a further conference. I asked that that request be granted and that the House further insist on its amendments. When I did that I neglected to ask that the report be agreed to, but the House appointed the conferees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman at any time up to the present asked that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate?

Mr. HAY. I have, and the conferees were appointed. The meaning of the conference report is this: The first amendment of the Senate was to strike out the declaration of the House that an emergency existed. The Senate receded on that. The second amendment of the Senate was to strike out the language providing that the provisions of section 111 of the defense act of 1916 should be applied in this emergency. The Senate receded on that amendment. The next amendment of the Senate was to strike out section 2, which provided an appropriation for dependent families, and the Senate inserted in place thereof a provision that members of the National Guard who had families dependent upon them should be discharged on their own application. The action of the conferees strikes out both of these provisions, both House provision and Senate provision.

Mr. STAFFORD. And leaves it as if no action had ever been taken.

Mr. CANNON. Either by the House or the Senate.

Mr. HAY. Yes. Amendment 5 is a transposition of words, and amendment 6 strikes out the word "article" and inserts the word "resolution." I desire to say to the House that so far as I was concerned, I would have insisted upon the provision of the House providing for the dependent families if there had been any way by which we could have brought the Senate to agree with us. I am informed by the Secretary of War that this resolution is absolutely necessary in order that the mobilization of these forces shall proceed and to have insisted further would have been to defeat the resolution. But I will to-morrow introduce a separate bill for the dependent families and ask the Speaker to recognize me on Monday under suspension of the rules. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman give me two minutes?

Mr. HAY. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. BENNET. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENNET. Is it the intention of the gentleman to take up the conference report at once without being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HAY. Yes; it is very important that it should be agreed to. I ask, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to consider the conference report notwithstanding it has not been printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider the conference report nothwithstanding it has not been printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Can two sets of conferees be working at the same time on the same bill?

Mr. HAY. No; and that is not the fact.

The SPEAKER. This matter was irregular. The gentleman from Virginia presented a conference report, it being a disagreement, and practically it did not make any difference whether it was agreed to or not. As a matter of form the gentleman from Virginia asked to have it agreed to. He found out that it had not been agreed to and the conferees had been appointed, the same ones being appointed over again, and they have brought in this conference report.

Mr. MAPES. But the report of the second conferees was filed before the first conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. That is not the fact. The Chair will direct the Journal Clerk to insert the appointment of the conferees after the first conference report is agreed to.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENNET. Is the House now in possession of the papers?

Mr. HAY. It is.

Mr. BENNET. The Senate has acted favorably upon the report?

Mr. HAY. No; the Senate has not acted at all. We act first. The Senate acted first before, and then we act first this time.

Mr. BENNET. It is my recollection that the papers go to the House asking for the conference.

Mr. HAY. No; it is the other way.

Mr. BENNET. Naturally the papers would he here now, being with the House that agreed to the conference.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I can not help but regret that the provision of the resolution for the care of the dependent families of the militiamen who are drafted into the service of the country was not agreed to by the Senate. I know of no action ever taken by a legislative body that was so calculated to arouse the patriotism of men called to the colors as was the action of this House. It must be a matter of sincere regret to everyone who believes in preserving the honor of the flag that the Senate objected to provision being made for the care of the families of the men who have been called to fight the battles of the people. These men have left their business, they have left their wives and children, in many cases without means. Are they to be the subjects of charity while we men here, and other men all over the land, live in a state of luxury and ease and peace, away from danger. The Government for which we speak should provide for the families of the men who fight its battles. Why not? Are they to be allowed to starve while their husbands and fathers fight to preserve the Nation's honor? Is it not enough that the militiamen offer their lives for their country? Should we expect them to leave their loved ones unprovided for also? No; a thousand times no. A government worth fighting for can afford to be generous to those who fight to save it. [Applause.] I am, of course, anxious for the passage of this resolution, but what guaranty have the families of these men who have been drafted into the service that even though this House may pass the bill which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will introduce to provide for them that the bill will become a law? If the Senate would not agree to the resolution of the House, passed by a unanimous vote, to pay $50 a month to the dependent families of National Guardsmen drafted into the service it is fair to assume that they will be willing to leave these women and children whose fathers are upon the battle line fighting for the country to starve while they live in luxury and ease. [Applause.] To authorize the Secretary of War to discharge married militiamen upon their own application is to humiliate all who apply. The men who serve in the militia are proud, they are patriotic, they love their country, they cherish its institutions, they are willing to fight to preserve them. They should not be humiliated by being required to ask to be released from service, and neither should they be compelled to leave their families without assurance that a grateful Government will provide for their comfort and look after their welfare. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. HAY. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the gentleman to yield me four minutes.

Mr. HAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I regret that it is not possible for this House to pass remedial legislation at this time. The only reason apparently that we are not doing it is on account of the stubbornness of another legislative body in refusing to act conjointly with the House in the matter. The Senate passed a provision authorizing the War Department to excuse the National Guardsmen ordered to the front who had dependent families. The House passed a resolution which would provide a cash payment for the dependent families left behind by these guardsmen. Both of these propositions are good, and I think it is entirely feasible to pass a bill embracing both ideas and leaving it optional with the War Department either to excuse the guardsman called to the front having a dependent family, or to order him to the front and to pay his dependent family such sum as is meet and proper. There is no reason at all, in my judgment, why this House should not insist upon its provision or the adoption of both the House and the Senate provisions incorporated in one bill. However, I yield to the superior judgment of the chairman of my committee on his promise that he will bring into the House legislation designed to make good the position which we have taken upon this subject.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that it is entirely possible to pass a bill in this House covering both those propositions, but the same spirit which prevents this amendment for care of dependent families which was passed in the House from being continued as a part of this bill will kill that proposition when it comes up again. There never has been in the history of this world a proposition such as this Congress has carried into effect now—that 132,000 men in the militia of this country, going from their work on Saturday, on Monday morning find themselves in the Regular Army of the United States for three years, with their families uncared for; and it is cruel, it is malicious, it is wicked, to say to those men, "We will not care for the women and children that are dependent upon you." [Applause.] And, Mr. Speaker, I would stand here as a Member of this House till the hot sands of the Mexican deserts had turned to ice before I would submit to such legislation as this. I am opposed to agreeing to this proposition. It is right, it is honest, it is just, it is fair, that we should take care of these people, not only in the spirit of patriotism, not only in the spirit of loving our country, but as Christian brothers, that we should do unto others as we would have others do unto us. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, just one word. I am as much in favor of taking care of the dependent families of these soldiers as is the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] or any other man, but in the condition in which we find ourselves it is impossible now to insist upon engrafting this legislation upon this resolution, because the necessities of the country demand that this mobilization of the troops shall go forward at once. I therefore hope that there will be no question about the adoption of the resolution, and I can assure the House that they will be given an opportunity in the very near future—within the next few days—to vote on this proposition, and I believe that the whole Congress will finally come to see the justice and the merit of it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Would it not be well to place the responsibility where it belongs?

Mr. HAY. Absolutely.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman from Virginia of the opinion that the Senate will not agree to this proposition on this resolution?

Mr. HAY. On this resolution? I am.

Mr. BUTLER. And indefinitely postpone the program made by the Secretary of War?

Mr. HAY. Unquestionably. They decline absolutely to agree to it.

Mr. BUTLER. And assume the responsibility of doing it?

Mr. HAY. Of course. When they do it they assume the responsibility for it.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that if we decline to adopt this conference report, the Senate will not agree.

Mr. HAY. I understand it, yes; undoubtedly.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the opinion of the gentleman?

Mr. HAY. It is.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. REAVIS. The Senate had an amendment in there to the effect that the head of a dependent family be discharged by the Secretary of War. Why was that amendment not left in if they disagreed to what we put in?

Mr. HAY. The House conferees would not agree to that, for the reason that if it had been agreed to about 20 or 25 per cent of those troops are men upon whom some one is dependent. It would thoroughly disorganize the organizations of the National Guard if such a provision were agreed to.

Mr. REAVIS. Well, if we are not going to provide for their dependent families——

Mr. HAY. And it would be humiliating to the men besides, because the amendment provided that it should be upon their own application.

Mr. REAVIS. Why, if we are not going to provide for the dependents, should we not permit those men to be discharged upon their petition?

Mr. HAY. Because it would absolutely destroy the organization of the National Guard, and we have not time now to get other troops to take their place.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Will the gentleman yield to me for about 30 seconds on this proposition?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I want to indorse what the gentleman from Virginia says, that it would absolutely destroy the organization of the National Guard if that provision remains in. It seems that those who have the most applications in the way of care, nurture, and support of those dependent upon them are the ones who most freely give in the hour of our country's need. That provision should not remain in; if it does, you have stricken down absolutely the help we should have the right to expect from the National Guard.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. HAY. How much?

Mr. HARDY. Not more than five minutes.

Mr. HAY. I yield the gentleman from Texas five minutes.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is right that something should be said in behalf of the stand taken by the House at the other end of the Capitol. Their position is not without strong reason in support of it, if I understand it rightly.

When I saw the amendment inserted in the Senate in lieu of the provision for money compensation in the House bill, it seemed to me it was a wise substitution. I can give an illustration.

A man from my section of the country who was employed and receiving a salary of about $125 or perhaps $150 a month has a wife and two children dependent upon him. Fifty dollars a month would not compensate him or take care of them. He has been taken away and it is a hardship on them, for they have nothing else in the world. I believe it would be more just to let him be excused than to pay them $50 a month and take him. Now, I may be mistaken, but I believe that the Senate amendment has merit as well as the House provision, and the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] might be a wise suggestion, to have a bill brought in here providing either of those alternatives. At any rate, I believe that when a man's family is dependent upon him and $50 a month would not take care of them, it is a poor policy to take him away unless in the direst need of our country, and it is a poor excuse to say it will break up the militia if you do not take him, whether it is right or wrong; especially when there are, as I believe, so many young men willing and ready to volunteer for service. I do not believe it will break up the militia or impair its usefulness to permit those situated like the man I have referred to to be excused.

In the Spanish-American War ample numbers of the National Guard volunteered, but the point I am making is only that those who have dependent families might be excused. I do not wish to discuss the monthly $50 pay proposition to take care of the families of those taken. When it is necessary to take them it will be necessary to take care of their families, but in my opinion it is not necessary to take them.

Mr. HAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this conference report will be adopted. I represent in part a city from which there are going out 10,000 members of the militia, two regiments and a battery from the district which I have the honor to represent, and I think I voice the sentiment of those members of the militia, and I think my friend from Illinois will agree with me—I allude to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD], who is risking a good deal of a very bright and promising future, for when his State wired to him asking him if he would go to the front as colonel of the Second Cavalry of Illinois, he wired back instantly he would. [Applause.] I think my friend will argee with me that it would be the view of the members of the National Guard in our respective States if we did this afternoon what the President of the United States, through the Secretary of War, says that he wants, and that is this legislation instantly. [Applause.] Then we would rely upon and assure him the sure promise of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, by word or deed or both, that when he brings in that bill for $50 a month for the dependent families, we will stay here all summer if necessary in order to pass that particular bill. [Applause.] We ought to place the interests of the whole country, as typified on the boundary first, and stand by the request of the War Department and give them the legislation that they ask, and then follow that up with the acts of remedial justice that the men at the front can always depend upon the Congress to do. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman encourage himself in the hope that the legislative body that now stands against this measure will ever pass it. Does not the gentleman know that is the end of it?

Mr. BENNET. No; I do not. I think when the country demands it, and will demand it, that the legislative body we can only mention in general terms will accede to right and justice.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. To ask the gentleman from Virginia if he can give me some time.

Mr. HAY. How much does the gentleman desire?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. About three minutes.

Mr. HAY. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 30 minutes left.

Mr. HAY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to indorse all that has been said here in the way of patriotic help for dependent families of the National Guard. The desire to do so is commendable and just. We are a wealthy Nation and can well afford to take care of our defenders in emergencies. I am of the opinion, though, that we should show equal consideration for our Regular Establishment when emergencies arise. I also want to say that I am in sympathy with giving the National Guard the greatest amount of pay that the Congress thinks wise to give them, but I think we should bear in mind all the time that our first line of defense is our Regular Army, and we should not pass legislation increasing the pay of men in the National Guard to $30 unless we expect to increase the pay of the first line of defense to the same extent. [Applause.]

If we are going to take care of the dependent families of the guardsmen, we should also look after the dependent families of the Regular soldiers. I know you may say that they now take care of their families out of their wages and that this would not do them any injustice. We have got to depend on the Regular Army of this country as the first line of defense not only now, but for years to come, and if we do to the Regular Army what they consider is unjust we have put a bar against getting enlistments in the Regular Army for years to come.

I say this with the highest regard for the National Guard. I have a boy now in the National Guard on his way to Mexico. [Applause.] I am in sympathy with what has been said here by gentlemen as to the hardships that may be placed on some families by the sudden call to the colors of the National Guard. I think we should see that they do not suffer. I also desire to again express the hope that we will make those provisions in such a manner as to not make the Regular soldier feel that it is best to be a guardsman and thus make the securing of future enlistments in the Regular Army impossible.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

SUSPENSION OF THE RULES ON MONDAY, JULY 3.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces that on Monday next, at 1 o'clock, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] to suspend the rules.

SARAH LINCOLN GRIGSBY.

Mr. LIEB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LIEB. Mr. Speaker, I hold here in my hand a newspaper account, from the Evansville (Ind.) Courier, of the ceremonies in connection with the dedication of a monument over the grave of Sarah Lincoln Grigsby, sister of Abraham Lincoln. This event was one of unusual historical importance, and consequently is deserving of national attention. Lincoln's mother, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, lies buried in Nancy Hanks Park, at Lincoln City, Spencer County, my home county in Indiana. It was in this park the services were held on June 20, preceding the dedication exercises held in Old Pigeon Cemetery, where Sarah Lincoln Grigsby lies buried, 1 mile south of Lincoln City. I might mention, in connection with the historical part taken by the Lincoln family in my home county, which was Lincoln's boyhood home, that while a member of the State Legislature of Indiana in 1907 I championed a bill in the House, which became a law, establishing a park in the grounds where Lincoln's mother is buried.

Interest in the dedication ceremonies held last week was not confined to Spencer County and the congressional district I have the honor to represent, but to the entire State of Indiana and other States as well. Gov. Samuel N. Ralston was prevented from attending and delivering an address he had prepared, but sent State Senator Fred Van Nuys to represent him.

Members of the Lincoln Route Commission, appointed by Gov. Ralston to determine the route taken by the Lincoln family in going from Indiana to Illinois in 1830, assisted materially in raising the funds to purchase the monument to Sarah Lincoln Grigsby, and it will be seen from a list of the contributors that the interest in the movement was far-reaching.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this article, written by ex-State Senator William B. Carleton, of Evansville, be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the article referred to:

PLACE SHAFT TO LINCOLN'S SISTER—MONUMENT TO SARAH, WIFE OF AARON GRIGSBY, IS DEDICATED AT LINCOLN CITY—BIG CROWD IN ATTENDANCE—PROBABLY 1,500, REPRESENTING MANY SECTIONS OF STATE, AT NANCY HANKS PARK—GOV. RALSTON SENDS SENATOR VAN NUYS TO REPRESENT HIM AT THE CEREMONIES.

[By William B. Carleton.]

The monument over the grave of Sarah Lincoln Grigsby, sister of Abraham Lincoln, the great war President, in Old Pigeon cemetery, 1 mile south of Lincoln City, Ind., and over 30 miles east of Evansville, was dedicated Tuesday morning. People came from many parts of the State to do homage to the plain, simple country girl whose brother gave freedom to a race and saved the Nation from disruption in its darkest hour.

Services preceding the dedication proper were held in the beautiful Nancy Hanks Park, at Lincoln City, where the mother of Lincoln sleeps her last sleep. It is estimated that from 1,200 to 1,500 people attended the ceremonies, which were held under the pavilion. Heavy skies overhead forecasted rain and within a half hour after the services were concluded the rain came.

Gov. Samuel N. Ralston was on the program for the principal address, but was unable to come, as he is busy just now helping to get the Indiana National Guard ready to go to the Mexican border in response to the order of President Wilson last Sunday. In the place of Gov. Ralston came former State Senator Fred Van Nuys, of Indianapolis, as the personal representative of the governor, and he made an able and eloquent address.

LARGE BOONVILLE DELEGATION.

Boonville sent one of the largest delegations of any other town to the ceremonies. At least 150 Boonville people went to Lincoln City on the Southern train that left Evansville at 7.15 Tuesday morning. The Boonville band went along. Among the Boonville people who made the trip were Mayor and Mrs. Jasper Thornburg and son; Dr. T. D. Scales, member of the State tax commission; State Senator and Mrs. Homer Hazen; former State Senator Clem Pelzer; William L. Barker; George Hemenway; Pres Tillman; Dr. Spradley, former county auditor; Herb Hoggatt and little son; Thomas Downs, editor of the Boonville Standard, and many others. Rockport, Chrisney, Huntingsburg, Jasper, Gentryville, Tennyson, and many other towns were represented.

JUDGE BRETZ PRESIDED.

The master of ceremonies was Judge John L. Bretz, of Jasper, Ind., chairman of the committee appointed by Gov. Ralston to arrange for the dedication. Other members of the committee are: J. V. Stimson, of Huntingburg; William L. Barker and George Hemenway, of Boonville; and Mrs. Fred Walker and Allen McCullough, of Rockport. Mr. McCullough was unable to attend the dedication because of illness in his family.

Following a few remarks by Judge Bretz the Boonville quartet, composed of Mrs. Nat Youngblood, Miss Edith Hargrave, Edward Bohrer, and Frank Roberts, sang "Indiana," which was well received. A "History of the monument" was then given by Jesse W. Welk, of Greencastle, secretary of the Lincoln route commission, appointed by Gov. Ralston about a year ago to select the route that the Lincoln family followed in going from Indiana to Illinois. Mr. Welk's address follows:

"HOW IDEA OF MONUMENT ORIGINATED.

"The movement to erect a memorial over the grave of Sarah Lincoln, the wife of Aaron Grigsby, grew out of a conversation which took place between the speaker and Joseph M. Cravens, my colleague on the Lincoln route commission, about a year ago. He and I had been traveling through this part of the State on our official errand and were resting one evening in the lobby of a hotel in a nearby town. In going over the occurrences of the day I remember of observing to him that there were two incidents in the history of the Lincoln family which I felt should be carefully preserved for the benefit of posterity.

"One was the scene which took place early in April, 1865, when the most illustrious member of this hitherto unknown family, at that time the President of the United States, visited the Confederate capital, the city of Richmond, Va. It was here that he came into contact with the newly emancipated slaves of the South. As he made his way through the streets of the now ruined and burning city the excited negroes crowded around and followed him wherever he went. Hailing him as their savior and deliverer, they fell to their knees, singing, shouting hosannas to the Lord, and in every way giving expression to their exultation and joy. It was a remarkable spectacle—significant, impressive, dramatic, and without a parallel in history.

"DEATH OF NANCY HANKS.

"The other incident occurred almost half century earlier and within sight of the spot where we are now gathered. There were no crowds, no ruins of great buildings, no signs of martial conflict. It was in the stillness of the deep woods. On a rude bed in the primitive log cabin of that day lay the pale, emaciated form of a woman breathing heavily and evidently nearing the end of her earthly journey. At her side knelt her sorrowing husband, her son, a boy of 10, and her daughter, 2 years older. It is hardly necessary, I imagine, to assure you that it was the death bed of Nancy Hanks and that the weeping daughter was none other than she whose grave we are this day met to dedicate and beautify.

"In my conversation with Mr. Cravens I remember that I expressed the hope that in the course of time some great artist with the requisite skill and genius would be found to transfer these memorable scenes to canvas, so that they might be sent down the ages to the remotest generations. At this juncture it was that Mr. Cravens, adverting to the fact that the graves of Nancy Hanks, her husband, and son were suitably marked, suggested that some attention should now be paid to the last resting place of the daughter. The proposition struck me with telling force—in fact, I was so deeply impressed I appealed at once to our honored and worthy governor, who not only approved of the idea but in many ways rendered us timely and material assistance.

"SMALL GIFTS OF THE MANY.

"At a later conference Mr. Cravens submitted the names of 20 of his friends who might be counted on to help us secure the desired memorial for Sarah Lincoln's grave, to which list I added a like number of my own selection. To these persons we wrote letters asking for subscriptions, but with two conditions appended: First, that no one was expected to subscribe who had not either been born or lived in Indiana; and, second, that no single contribution should exceed $5. The remittances came promptly and generously; and not only from those to whom we had applied but from others to whom we had never written. I remember the case of one man who sent us his check for the required $5, but requested us to return it with a memorandum indicating the total cost of the monument, whereupon he would send us another check for the entire expense. We were obliged to decline the offer on the ground that the memorial was intended to be an expression of the people of Indiana rather than that of a favored and more fortunate few.

"The list of subscribers is alike interesting and noteworthy, representing as it does an unusually wide range of races, religions, and shades of political belief. Among the names can be found a Catholic priest, a Methodist bishop, a prominent Jewish church official, a Democratic governor, a Republican Member of Congress, a man who was once in the Confedereate Army, the president of a great railroad system, a farm laborer who still works by the day, and a woman whose father was a negro slave and received his freedom by virtue of the official act of the greatest American the world has ever known.

"The monument itself is from a block of the highest grade of Vermont granite and weighs 8,000 pounds. The committee which selected the design were impressed by its simple and stately proportions, its symmetry, its artistic finish, and especially by the single wild rose at the top, emblematic of the lonely, orphaned girl who sleeps beneath—a flower which grew and blossomed in the wilderness."

PLEADS FOR AMERICAN SPIRIT.

After reading a few interesting facts about the Lincoln family that Gov. Ralston had prepared, former Senator Van Nuys made a short talk in which he made a plea for more of the spirit of Americanism. He compared the time in which Sarah Lincoln and Aaron Grigsby lived to the present age and said that America is indeed the "land of opportunity." He referred to numbers of foreigners who came to the United States penniless and unknown who have won for themselves fame and fortune here. Among these is United States Senator KNUTE NELSON, of Minnesota. Senator Van Nuys spoke of early republics like Greece and Rome and said that their education was for the classes and the sons of wealth, while in this Republic the public schools are alike open to the sons of the poor and the sons of the rich. He paid a beautiful tribute to the simple life of Sarah Lincoln and to Nancy Hanks Lincoln, the sister and mother of Abraham Lincoln. Senator Van Nuys brought with him a personal message from Gov. Ralston, who, he said, was unable at this time to get away from the State capital. Senator Van Nuys was warmly congratulated over his address at the close of the ceremonies.

The Rockport quartet, composed of Mrs. Pauline Richards, Miss Little Peckinpaugh, A. H. Kennedy, and John J. Brown, rendered a beautiful selection and responded to an encore.

POEM BY MAX EHRMANN.

A poem, entitled "Sarah Lincoln," written especially for the occasion by Max Ehrmann, of Terre Haute, Ind., was recited by Mr. Ehrmann, and it was one of the most interesting features of the program. The poem follows:

The summer moon and sun have watched her sleep
Now four score years and eight. To him this place
Was ever dear with twilight's tender memories;
For here her laughing lips cried out, "Halloo!"
As up the path he came at close of day.
A thousand times he bore her on his back,
With boyish strength abused her lovingly,
Provoked by playful taunts, by many jests.
Then she, returning to her tasks indoors,
Left him alone to brood upon the night.
The sunset built famed cities in his brain,
Forced from his breast the sigh for surging men,
Welling up, like wind-tossed rivers, one great hope
To force from life the promises of dream.
One round of toiling days, of peaceful nights.
He stood here once, a saddened boy, forlorn,
And saw her form descend into the earth.
Thus early came the gloaming to his soul.
Into his boyish eyes the far-off look
That, yearning, seeks to see where death has trod,
He wandered forth through darkened wilderness,
Yet somehow ever wandered toward the light
Until he held a nation in his hand.
He was a rock in storm; in milder days
A pliant branch bent down with mellow fruit.
He was as tender as the yellow leaves
That autumn winds toss o'er her grave.
Through leaden days, through fevered, flaming nights,
Through hate and horror of a blood-smeared land,
This early sorrow made for love in him.
Here, then, was sorrow garnished, grief made great,
Here bloomed the balm that soothed a nation's wounds,
And his dead self still makes for love and peace.

FAMILY TRADITIONS.

"Family Traditions" was the title of the paper read by Mrs. Bartly Inco, of Rockport Ind. Mrs. Inco is 70 years old, and was born and reared in Spencer County. Her father was James Grigsby, who died about 28 years ago, and his body was buried in Little Pigeon Cemetery, which is a short distance from Old Pigeon. Redman Grigsby, brother of Aaron and James Grigsby, was the last of the brothers to die. He passed away about eight or nine years ago. The paper of Mrs. Inco follows:

LINCOLN TRADITIONS.

"Ladies and gentlemen, as I have been asked to make a few remarks in regard to the Lincoln and Grigsby families, I will endeavor to do so. However, I do not know that I can add anything of interest to what the most of you know. There has been such great interest created in the Lincoln family in this county, and many of our pioneer residents have brought to light the many interesting things and facts relative to the early history of our county. What I know of the Lincolns I heard from my father, who was a schoolmaster of Abraham Lincoln and lived very near the Lincoln family. It is useless to go into the details of that early school life, as you have all heard about it many times.

"Aaron Grigsby, my father's oldest brother, married Sallie Lincoln, but she lived only a short time after the marriage; and her husband died about three years later. They had a very bright future before them for people of that day. And Sallie Grigsby was much thought of and loved by all of her husband's people. She was given the best burial that could be given in that day, and my father erected a sandstone marker to the graves of both her and her husband. He always looked after these graves, as well as others of our family, as long as he lived.

"My father also attended the funeral of Nancy Hanks Lincoln, and had often told me of how poor the family was, and how they took Nancy Hanks Lincoln to her grave on a rude home-made sled. Her grave was always a place of great interest to me and my brother and sisters when we were children, and I have often gone to the grave, which was always inclosed by a rail pen in those days.

"I might mention that the father of Aaron Grigsby lived with the Indians for about eight years. While his father was out looking for game the Indians came to the house, and after killing three of the oldest children, took Reuben, his mother, and a small baby away with them. They soon discovered that the mother could not walk fast enough so they killed her and knocked the baby's brains out against a tree. For some reason they liked the small boy so they carried him on their backs. They grew very fond of him and used to take him on their hunting trips with them. He said he always wanted to go and to tease him they would insist upon his drinking a quantity of bear's oil before they would let him go along.

"There are many things that I have heard from my father that I do not remember well enough to tell here. However, it has been a great pleasure to me to bring these things of the past to light. It is needless to say that we Grigsbys are already proud of the fact that Sallie Lincoln married into the Grigsby family and are also proud of the prominent part that they played in the early settlement of this county. It is also very gratifying to know that the younger people of his county are becoming more interested in knowing something of those good folks who have gone before and endured such hardships in order that their children and children's children might enjoy the best of the earth. I only hope this interest will continue, and I am sure that Spencer County has as much or more to be proud of in a historical way as any county in the State. I thank you for your indulgence."

SARAH LINCOLN OLDER THAN ABRAHAM.

Sarah Lincoln was born February 10, 1807, and was two years older than Abraham Lincoln. She was married to Aaron Grigsby in 1826 or 1827 and died January 20, 1828. Her death resulted from childbirth. The body was placed in a rude coffin, made from the giant trees that stood in that section of the county in those days, and tenderly borne to Old Pigeon Cemetery, where it was laid to rest. Abraham Lincoln, with his father Thomas Lincoln and sorrowing friends, attended the services. Spencer County was sparsely settled in those days. Aaron Grigsby married the second time, but died in about three years after the death of his first wife and was buried by her side. For years James Grigsby, the father of Mrs. Inco, looked after the graves, but after his death the sandstone marker over the graves crumbled away, and very little of it was left when the new monument was erected over the grave of the sister of the great war President.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

Following the paper of Mrs. Inco, Hon. Joseph M. Cravens, chairman of the Lincoln Route Commission, of Madison, Ind., made a few remarks. He spoke of the work of the Lincoln Route Commission, saying there are three claimants for the route. He said when the work of the commission has been completed he would suggest that the people of Spencer County organize a "Lincoln memorial association" and urge the building of a great public highway from Troy to Vincennes.

THE LINCOLN FAMILY.

"The Lincoln family" was the subject of an address by Capt. J. W. Wartmann, United States commissioner of this city. His address, which was given the closest attention, follows:

CAPT. WARTMANN'S PAPER.

Thomas Lincoln and his wife, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, were devoted Christians and trusted fully in the Providence of God; and so believing they could not drift beyond God's love and care they, with their son Abraham, left their home in Kentucky and came to the then Territory of Indiana and settled on a tract of land a few miles southeast of Gentryville.

The family was very poor and endured all the hardships and privations of pioneer life. A few years after coming to Indiana, Mrs. Lincoln died of a disease known at the time as "milk sickness."

On her deathbed she called to her bedside her son Abraham and told him to love God and keep His commandments, be honest and true, and love his father and sister Sally.

I pause for a moment to pay a tribute to Nancy Hanks Lincoln—mother of Abraham—to say that in the midst of all the poverty and hardships of pioneer life she took time to instill into the mind and heart of her son those principles of morality which led the afterwards President Lincoln to say, "All that I am, all that I hope to be, I owe to the pious teachings of my sainted mother."

After the death of his wife, Nancy Hanks, Thomas Lincoln returned to Kentucky and married a widow named Johnson, and brought her and her sons to his home in Indiana. A more devoted stepmother than Mrs. Johnson never lived. She took an especial interest in Abraham and did all in her power to train him in right living. Abraham Lincoln worked as a farm hand, mauled rails, and for a little while ran a ferryboat at the mouth of Anderson on the Ohio River. He made a trip on a flatboat to New Orleans; while there he saw for the first time a slave market and remarked to his companion, "If ever I get a chance to strike slavery I will hit it hard." Abraham Lincoln had but a few months' training in a country school. He was a great reader and borrowed books from those who had them. He borrowed from Mr. Josiah Crawford, a school-teacher, Weem's Life of Washington. While Abe had the book the cover came off, and being unable to return it in good condition he said to Mr. Crawford, "I will pay for it." "Well," said Mr. Crawford, "if you will pull corn fodder for two days you may have the book," and Abe pulled the fodder.

INFLUENCED BY NOTED SETTLERS.

In the spring of 1830 the Lincoln family moved from Spencer County to Illinois. It is worth while to remember that in the formative period of his life Abraham Lincoln associated with such early pioneers as Mr. Turnham Jones, Josiah Crawford, the Gentrys, Taylors, and Grigsbys, and no doubt was influenced by their example and conversation.

William Jones—Col. Jones—took the only newspaper published in a city. It was the Louisville Journal, edited by the distinguished scholar, George D. Prentice. On Saturdays Abe would go to Gentryville to read the paper.

Abraham Lincoln was, in the language of that day, a "teetotaler," and remained a temperance man until his death. Abraham Lincoln was a man of prayer. He had been taught to pray by his mother. He sought and received divine guidance in all his official life. See him as he stands on the platform on the car as he started to be inaugurated President of the United States. He invoked his friends and neighbors to pray for him, saying that with God's blessing he would be able to discharge his duty.

Of his official life as President it is not necessary to speak. In the preparation of the immortal proclamation of emancipation it was prepared, he said, after a prayerful consideration and without consulting his Cabinet. In its issuance the shackles dropped from the arms of 4,000,000 slaves, and America wiped out forever the stain of human slavery.

He lived to see the rebellion put down and the Union of States restored. And so this great heroic soul lived and died as the first martyr President.

With malice toward none and with charity for all, this poor, barefoot boy, growing to manhood in Spencer County, went to join the immortals, and, in the language of Secretary Stanton, "Now he belongs to the ages."

SERVICES AT THE GRAVE.

The ceremonies in the pavilion were closed by a selection, "The Flag of Liberty," by the Boonville quartet, and as they sang the last verse of the song they waved a flag, and this evoked a great deal of enthusiasm. After the exercises in the Nancy Hanks Park had been concluded, Judge Bretz, accompanied by Mr. Weik, Mr. Cravens, Capt. Wartmann, former Senator Van Nuys, and Dr. T. D. Scales, drove to the Old Pigeon Cemetery, a mile away, where the monument over the grave of Sarah Lincoln Grigsby was formally dedicated. A short talk was made by Judge Bretz and prayer was offered by Capt. Wartmann. The monument is rectangular in shape and is a plain, simple stone, in keeping with the plain, simple life of Sarah Lincoln Grigsby. It is inscribed as follows: "Sarah Lincoln, wife of Aaron Grigsby, Feb. 10, 1807–Jan. 20, 1828." Above the inscription is the design of a wild rose. The money with which the monument was purchased came from public subscriptions, and the cost was between $400 and $500.

CEREMONIES ARE INSPIRING.

There was something touching, something inspiring to me in the ceremonies, both at the Nancy Hanks Park and at the Old Pigeon Cemetery. Here were people drawn from all over the State to pay homage to one of the pioneer women who has slept for 88 years in a lonely spot in a country graveyard with the sturdy oaks and the wild daisies to keep her company. Her simple life, the manner of her death, the prominence that afterwards was to come to the family, all these things made it possible for people in this generation to come together and be moved by inspiring music and patriotic addresses.

Shortly after the ceremonies at the Old Pigeon Cemetery, Capt. Wartmann was taken ill and it was necessary for him to have a physician called upon his arrival home. He was greatly improved last night and his condition is not regarded serious. He was accompanied to Lincoln City by his daughter, Miss Sarah Wartmann.

BEAUTIFUL NANCY HANKS PARK.

People who visited Lincoln City Tuesday were impressed with the beauty of Nancy Hanks Park, which is maintained by the State. It is said to be one of the most beautiful spots in the State. Former State Senator Clem Pelzer, of Boonville, who was one of the interested attendants at the ceremonies, was in the legislature several years ago, and it was due to his influence that the State made an appropriation for the park. The Nancy Hanks commission is composed of Dr. J. C. Jolly, president, of Lake, Ind.; Elijah E. Gladden, State forester of Indiana; and Davis Enlow, of Lincoln City, secretary. The custodian is Noah Spurlock, and he has held this position since the park was opened several years ago. He takes great pride in his work, and it is due to his untiring efforts that the park is made so attractive. Mr. Spurlock says travelers come from all parts of the United States to visit the park and to see the grave of Nancy Hanks Lincoln. The State makes an annual appropriation of $1,200 to keep up the park.

Tuesday's ceremonies were attended by many newspaper men in this part of the State, among those present being State Senator Homer Hazen editor of the Boonville Enquirer; Thomas Downs, editor of the Boonville Standard; John Chewning, editor of the Rockport Journal; Wes Kellams, editor of the Rockport Democrat; Ernst Pickhardt, editor of the Huntingburg Signal; and M. McC. Stoops, editor of the Petersburg Democrat.

Mr. OAKEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by submitting a telegram from certain officers of the Coast Artillery of Connecticut, asking that they might be admitted into the service of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. OAKEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a telegram. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the telegram referred to:

JUNE 28, 1916.

This telegram was received by Connecticut Members of Congress this morning from the Connecticut Coast Artillery Corps:

FORT H. G. WRIGHT, N. Y., June 27, 1916.

We, the undersigned officers of the Connecticut Coast Artillery Corps, being assured that we reflect the consensus of opinion of the personnel of this organization, urgently present the claim for recognition as an active factor in the pending imminent trouble in Mexico. We are at the point where we feel that the life of this corps as a unit depends largely, if not entirely, on the disposition made of us in the present crisis, and we earnestly request the privilege of serving the United States in such capacity as the President and his advisers may elect. We further feel that immediate action should be taken; as we are at present mobilized in our annual maneuver camp; and should the organization be permitted to disband, even for a short period, it is doubtful what success would attend an attempt at remobilization. We therefore solicit your assistance in procuring the acceptance of this organization as a unit of National Guard Infantry for immediate service where required.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

In the House of Representatives.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 14484) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore, on page 11 of the engrossed bill, lines 22, 23, and 24, and lines 1 and 2 on page 12, with an amendment as follows: "Page 12, line 2, strike out '$20' and insert '$12,' the same being for the purpose of carrying out the agreement of the conferees."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the concurrent resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

STANDARD LIME BARREL.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5425) to standardize lime barrels.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the bill as it was reported from the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the bill as it was reported from the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a large and a small barrel of lime, the large barrel to consist of 280 pounds and the small barrel to consist of 180 pounds, net weight.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to sell or offer for sale lime in barrels for shipment from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia without first, by stencil or otherwise, clearly marking on one or both heads of the small barrel the figures "180 lbs." and upon the large barrel the figures "280 lbs." and in addition the name of the manufacturer of the lime and the name of the brand, if any, under which it is sold.

SEC. 3. When lime is sold in interstate commerce in containers of less capacity than the standard small barrel, it shall be sold in multiples of said standard small barrel, and the net weight of such container shall, by stencil or otherwise, be clearly marked thereon, together with the name of the manufacturer thereof and the name of the brand, if any, under which it is sold.

SEC. 4. That rules and regulations for the enforcement of this act, not inconsistent with the provisions of the act, shall be made by the Director of the Bureau of Standards and approved by the Secretary of Commerce, and that such rules and regulations shall include reasonable variations or tolerances which may be allowed.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful to pack, sell, or offer for sale for shipment from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia any barrels or other containers of lime which are not marked as provided in sections 2 and 3 of this act, or to sell, charge for, or purport to deliver from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, as a large or small barrel or a multiple of said small barrel of lime, any more or less weight of lime than is established by the provisions of this act; and any person guilty of a violation of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be liable to a fine not exceeding $100.

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of each district attorney to whom satisfactory evidence of any violation of this act is presented to cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the United States court having jurisdiction of such offense: Provided, however, That the penal provisions of this act shall not take effect until January 1, 1917.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be in force and effect from and after its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio in charge of the bill if this is the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is.

Mr. MONDELL. Is there any emergency requiring the passage of the bill at this time?

Mr. ASHBROOK. There is. The gentleman probably knows that at the last Congress we passed what is known as the Tuttle standard-barrel bill, which goes into effect the 1st of July. That bill would work great hardship to the manufacturers of lime, and in order to protect them it is important that we should pass this bill before the 1st of July. The Senate has passed this bill, which the House has amended somewhat; but I have reason to believe that the conferees will agree if the bill passes the House at this time.

Mr. MONDELL. There has been full consideration and a unanimous agreement?

Mr. ASHBROOK. We have had hearings four or five days on the bill, and it is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. CANNON. There is a standard barrel now.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; there is a standard-barrel bill, known as the Tuttle bill, and it was believed to apply only to fruit, vegetables, and agricultural products, and not to commodities of this kind.

Mr. CANNON. Does it apply to lime?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is so ruled by the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. CANNON. Has the Bureau of Standards the right to make regulations of this kind?

Mr. ASHBROOK. They doubtless have a right to place this construction upon it as the bill reads.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the measure what difference this makes in the weight of a barrel of lime which is now sold?

Mr. ASHBROOK. This makes the barrel weight the same as it now is. It simply takes lime out of the Tuttle bill.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill, briefly stated, is as follows: The Tuttle bill, passed by the Sixty-third Congress, was intended, as I read it, to apply solely to agricultural commodities. It fixed the standard barrel for such products by measure. Unfortunately, however, there was used in the bill the phrase "other dry commodities." The Bureau of Standards construes such phrase so as to comprehend the lime industry within the provisions of the Tuttle Act. Now, lime is of different specific gravity. No two brands are of the same density. One lime will weigh 40 per cent more than another. The reason for it is that some lime comes in lumps, while other lime is pulverized. If the lime manufacturers were compelled to sell their commodity by measure rather than weight, and such measure be the Tuttle barrel, there would be 40 or 50 per cent more lime in the barrels in some instances than in others. Lime is largely sold by weight, and not by measure. For that reason the lime industry is practically unanimous in its demand for a standard lime-barrel bill, such standard to be determined by weight rather than measure.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is it the purpose of this bill that there shall be a variety of different lime barrels, of 280 pounds' capacity, we will say, according to the density of the particular brand of lime to be contained in the barrel, or will they have a barrel that will be full of one kind of lime or half full of a different kind of lime, according to the density?

Mr. REAVIS. The purpose of the bill primarily is to relieve the industry of the difficulties imposed by the Tuttle bill and to fix a standard lime barrel, not by measurement but with the contents of the barrel, weighing 280 pounds if a large barrel or 180 pounds if a small barrel. The result will be that a barrel of one character of lime will be much larger in size than a barrel of another character of lime, but both will weigh the same, though of different dimensions.

Mr. CRAMTON. So the weight will be the same, but you will have standard lime barrels of, perhaps, 40 different sizes?

Mr. REAVIS. Probably as many different sizes as there are different densities of lime.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does not the gentleman think it would be much better to relieve the industry entirely of the provisions of the Tuttle bill and to provide that they may sell this commodity by weight entirely instead of by measurement, instead of fixing a standard barrel which is not a standard at all?

Mr. REAVIS. There are two reasons why that should not be done, in my opinion. There were many representatives of the lime industry before our committee, I think at least 20——

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think at least that many.

Mr. REAVIS. They wanted a standard of weight instead of a standard of size, for this reason: One company would sell a barrel of lime for a certain price. Another company would go to their customers and say, "We will sell you a barrel of the same dimensions for 25 per cent less."

The customer purchasing it would think he was saving 25 per cent of the purchase price, when, as a matter of fact, he was getting skinned out of 25 per cent of the purchase price, because the barrel sold in the second instance would weight 50 per cent less than the barrel sold in the first instance. To stop that sort of competition, and to insure the ultimate consumer that he will get exactly the quantity of lime he pays for, they ask that the barrel be standardized, not by size but by weight.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Do I understand that this bill recognizes what has been the prevailing standard weight of the lime trade, 280 pounds and 180 pounds?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It does not insist that the barrel shall be of any special size or dimensions, but that the weight shall be recognized as the only standard?

Mr. REAVIS. That the weight shall be 280 or 180 pounds; that the 280-pound barrel or the 180-pound barrel shall be the standard barrel, showing the exact weight of the contents, and this measure fixing that standard was asked for by every legitimate manufacturer of lime in the country, so far as I know. There was no disagreement among the manufacturers.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And the lime tradesman who puts 180 pounds of lime in a barrel is within this law?

Mr. REAVIS. There is no question about it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would not every purpose which the trade seem to desire have been secured if you had reported a bill which would have been somewhat similar to the pure-food regulation, something requiring that every barrel containing lime for sale in interstate trade must be branded with the net weight of the lime contained?

Mr. REAVIS. That is provided by this bill, with an addition.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would not that have been sufficient, without having stated that you are going to fix a standard barrel, when, as a matter of fact, you are not fixing any such thing at all?

Mr. REAVIS. I do not believe it would be sufficient, for this reason: I believe there are no exceptions to the rule that the legitimate lime manufacturers in this country, and in other countries as well, have adopted the 280-pound barrel and the 180-pound barrel as their standards, and that business is being done along those lines now, and has been done along those lines for years.

Mr. CRAMTON. There must be some exceptions, otherwise legislation would not be necessary.

Mr. REAVIS. I said every legitimate manufacturer of lime, and there are no exceptions to that. There are those who do a cutthroat business, who put lime in barrels in large lumps, so that half the barrel is open spaces and not filled with lime. They sell the lime in the same size barrel, representing that they are selling the same quantity of lime for less money, when they are really selling a barrel which weighs much less than 180 pounds.

We want to fix such enterprising gentlemen so that they will put 180 pounds and 280 pounds upon their barrels in order that the ultimate consumer will know exactly the quantity of lime he is getting.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I would like to inquire of the gentleman, for without doubt he has given the subject considerable thought, if it is his opinion that the Federal Government or Congress has the right to fix a standard weight without regard to interstate commerce?

Mr. REAVIS. I will say to the gentleman that I am entirely of the opinion that under constitutional authority Congress has the right to fix standards of weights and measures, that when once it has fixed the standard it has exhausted its powers. Under another constitutional provision we may legislate with reference to interstate and foreign commerce. This bill fixes the standard barrel under the weights and measures clause of the Constitution, and it then fixes a penalty for using any other character of barrel in interstate commerce. In my opinion, the bill would be unconstitutional if it fixed a penalty for intrastate commerce.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. But it does not apply to the barrel or standard for use in intrastate commerce?

Mr. REAVIS. Not even remotely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri). Is there objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I trust that there will not be any effort to prevent the unanimous consideration of this bill at the present time. The discussion seems to have taken a turn as though the lime makers, the dealers, were the ones who were anxious to put this bill through. That is not the situation at all. They would not have applied to Congress for any relief were it not for the misconstruction put upon the so-called Tuttle bill passed in the last Congress. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] clearly stated the case when he explained the fact that the phraseology of the Tuttle Act carried the words "other dry commodities." I am not a lawyer and do not profess to interpret law, but I can not for the life of me understand how, if you are legislating for fruits and vegetables, establishing a standard barrel for articles of that nature, you can go beyond that idea and include in it lime. That seems to have been the decision, as the chairman of the committee has said, that has been applied in this particular instance. This is an emergency matter. I have a large number of lime manufacturers in my district, and I have received communications from some of them no longer ago than this morning urging that this legislation be put through before the 1st of July; otherwise every lime producer in the country will be a criminal under the Tuttle Act, when, in my opinion, and I think in the judgment of this House, it never was intended that lime should be included in any way, shape, or manner in that bill when it was pending. I appreciate the criticism of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and I realize that there may be phraseology in the bill that is not agreeable to all of us, but, nevertheless, it is such an important matter to people dealing in lime and manufacturing lime throughout the country that the question of a little different phraseology ought not to prevent the consideration of the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall have to object under that procedure.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma will not insist upon his demand for the regular order.

Mr. HASTINGS. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to object to the suggestions that have been made here that the Bureau of Standards has taken an unwarranted action in their construction of the barrel bill which we passed in the last Congress. We are going headlong on this matter of barrel legislation. We first passed the Sulzer apple-barrel bill, and then in the last Congress we passed the Tuttle barrel bill. At the time it was pending in the House the application of that clause respecting other dry commodities was referred to in the debates, and I myself prophesied that we were getting industries into trouble that did not know what was pending; that we were legislating without giving the general industries an opportunity to be heard; but the gentleman from Ohio and others said that there was nothing to it; that there was no industry that could be affected unjustly; that the bill was all right. The bill, as I read it, applied to all other dry commodities, not saying anything about agriculture or fruit or anything of the kind, but "dry commodities." And right here comes along the head of the procession, the lime industry, and wants relief from the bill which we so recently passed. Now, how many other industries are rapping at your committee room door for some relief similar I did not know. Personally, I believe they ought to have relief. I said a year ago that some of the industries would need relief, and now here the first of the line which some of us prophesied comes along, and I think it ought to have relief.

But the question in my mind is whether the committee which reported it out, and which reported a sort of vague and uncertain bill in the last Congress, has not brought along a companion to it. For instance, the gentleman from Ohio is on his feet, and I will ask him what these words mean. We have none of us had a chance to study this bill; it has just simply been sprung on us here right off the bat. Now, section 3 says—and I would like to have the gentleman give me his attention, so he can explain it. As I said, the last bill that came from that committee on the subject of barrels had a hole in it, and the question of "dry commodities" arose. Let us see what this says:

When lime is sold in interstate commerce in containers of less capacity than the standard small barrel, it shall be sold—in multiples of said standard small barrels, and the net weight of such container, etc.

In what?

Now, what is meant——

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman will yield. I have a committee amendment to offer, if unanimous consent is given for the consideration of this bill, as a substitute for section 3; and the section then, I believe, will be satisfactory to my friend from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield to the gentleman to read his amendment, if it is not long.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will be glad to do so. This is a committee amendment to section 3:

SEC. 3. When lime is sold in interstate commerce in containers of less capacity than the standard small barrel, it shall be sold in multiples of said standard small barrel, and the net weight of such container shall, by stencil or otherwise, be clearly marked thereon, together with the name of the manufacturer thereof and the name of the brand, if any, under which it is sold.

Mr. CRAMTON. The amendment does not take care of it because it does not apply to a half barrel sold in a container of barrel shape, but only when it is in a different kind of container than a barrel. If not sold in boxes or sacks, if sold in barrel-shaped containers of half-barrel size, the amendment does not apply in this respect.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, my understanding is this permits lime to be sold in the quantities specified in a box, in a basket, or any other way.

Mr. REAVIS. I believe the language of the amendment, as I recall it, is, "any other small barrel."

Mr. ASHBROOK. One hundred and eighty pound barrel.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know whether the amendment is better than the bill. I have not the amendment before me and I do not have it clear in my mind; but the bill, the gentleman admits, is in faulty condition, just as the bill a year ago was. Now, further, when we come to the penal provision we penalize the man if he puts a little lime extra in just as much as if he did not put in enough. You provide only for prosecution in the Federal court, which may carry a man several hundred miles. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill because the gentleman here having charge of it waited until the last hour of the afternoon, and so we have to take the chances of passing a poorly constructed bill, for which the lime industry will have to suffer, the same as we did a year ago, or give them no relief. We are obliged to leave them to suffer the evils of the Tuttle barrel bill or substitute the possible evils of this bill. The lime industry, as I understand it, has chosen what it believes to be the lesser evil, and I do not want to interfere with that choice.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. But I do protest against this business of bringing in a bill affecting an entire industry with absolutely no opportunity given to the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] that perhaps the most convenient way to consider this would be to have it read by paragraphs for amendment. This is a Senate bill. As I understand, the gentleman has some committee amendments to offer?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to sell or offer for sale lime in barrels for shipment from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, without first by stencil or otherwise clearly marking on one or both heads of the small barrel the figures "180 lbs." and upon the large barrel the figures "280 lbs." and in addition the name of the manufacturer of the lime and the name of the brand, if any, under which it is sold.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ASHBROOK: Amend, by adding the word "net," after the word "lbs.," in section 2, line 17 and in line 18.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ASHBROOK: Amend, by striking out all after the word "lime," in section 2, line 19, page 2, and all of line 20, and add "and where manufactured."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purpose of requiring the locality of the manufacturer of lime?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Well, I will say to the gentleman that in order to prosecute violations of the act it was deemed wise not only to have the name of the manufacturer who manufactures the lime, but also the place where it is manufactured.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are you not imposing an undue requirement upon the manufacturer of lime when you insist that the place of manufacture should also be stamped on the barrel in addition to the name of the manufacturer?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think the gentleman will find that nearly all the manufacturers now stamp their town or city with a stencil on the barrel.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is optional now with the manufacturer to do so if he wishes, but here you are requiring all manufacturers to stamp the locality. You are establishing by legislation something that will interfere with the regular processes of trade, and I believe that unless the object is very patent you should not hamper and restrict the due course of trade.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will; but I want first to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I can not conceive where there would be any hardship to the manufacturer in requiring him to include in his stencil the place of manufacture.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I should think the gentleman will find that the place where the lime is manufactured is the first indication of the brand and character of the lime. It indicates the kind of lime.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. I think there is another consideration that comes in also, and that is to stamp foreign-made lime with the name and place where it is manufactured, so that the American consumer can know whether it is foreign made or American.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman has it right.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose the lime is sold by some one who is not a manufacturer. Suppose it is taken from a large bin and put into a barrel and shipped. Has the shipper to place on the barrel the place where it originally came from?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes; if it is sold by the barrel.

Mr. WALSH. If I am retailing lime that has come from a manufacturer and I put it in a barrel and sell it in my locality, it would be a hardship upon me as a retailer to place the name of the manufacturer on the barrel.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman will find, I think, that in the lime industry that case that the gentleman cites will not occur often.

Mr. WALSH. It might occur once.

Mr. BORLAND. If it did occur, it might be easily taken care of by saying "manufacturer or vendor."

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. It occurs with every lime dealer in the land. There is not a lime dealer in any city in the country that it would not affect. Every lime dealer buys his lime wholesale and sells it at retail.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is largely sold by the barrel.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; it is not necessarily sold by the barrel.

Mr. BORLAND. I will say to the gentleman that the dealer is usually anxious to put his name on the barrel and also the place where he conducts his business.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. So far as the retailer is concerned, this bill has no application, as it refers solely to interstate commerce.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose it crosses the border from one State into another; will it not have an application then?

Mr. REAVIS. The provision in reference to the manufacturer and the place of manufacture is inserted in this bill largely at the instance of the lime industry of the State of Washington. The cutthroat business that I referred to some time since is the cutthroat business that comes down from British Columbia. Their lime is sent to this country and sold here without the name of the brand on the barrel, without the name of the manufacturer, and we want stamped on that barrel the name of the manufacturer and the place of manufacture, so that if the manufacturer violates the provisions of this bill we will know where to get him. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Even granting to be true what the gentleman has said, that it is necessary to get at these cutthroat dealers, is it necessary to compel the retailer who keeps his lime in bulk and barrels it, in order to comply with the law, to put on the barrel that he sells the lime in the name and place of the manufacturer?

Mr. REAVIS. That being an essential evidence of honesty in this business, I should say it is necessary even for that party to place on the barrel the name of the manufacturer.

Mr. WALSH. The manufacturer would not be responsible. What would be the advantage of putting the name and place of the manufacturer on the barrel if the retailer sold a short-weight barrel of lime? You do not want to prosecute the manufacturer; you want to prosecute the retailer.

Mr. REAVIS. There might be an occasional and exceptional case of that kind, where the retailer selling a short barrel of lime and a real offender might not be reached by putting the name of the manufacturer on the barrel, but if you eliminate it the rule will be that the real criminal will escape, and in order to protect the lime manufacturer and the consumer and penalize the real criminal we are asking for all the information to be stenciled on the head of the barrel.

Mr. WALSH. If the lime is going into interstate shipment, could not the shipper be prosecuted by getting the name of the shipment and the shipper from the freight records?

Mr. REAVIS. Unquestionably.

Mr. WALSH. Then why do you want it put on the barrel?

Mr. REAVIS. If you leave it off in the interest of the exceptional case, you destroy the opportunity to catch the real criminal, and he will be the real criminal in 99 per cent of the cases.

Mr. HICKS. Is not there another consideration? Some man has established a reputation for a certain standard of lime and if his name is stamped on it people who consume lime will buy that particular lime because they know its quality.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman has got a reputation that will sell the lime it is a hardship on the retailer who does not manufacture.

Mr. REAVIS. The retailer does not ship in interstate commerce.

Mr. WALSH. He may live on the border line of a State and ship it over.

Mr. REAVIS. Yes; such a thing is possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware that the jobber of lime not a manufacturer, who has established a trade-mark in business by furnishing a high quality of lime will be required in the sale of the lime in barrels to stamp not his own name on the head of the barrel but the name of the manufacturer, and receive no protection whatever for his established trade-mark?

Mr. HICKS. I will say that under this amendment the man who is the retailer can put anything he wants in addition to the manufacturer's name. He can sell it as "Milwaukee best."

Mr. STAFFORD. That would be a very good name, but this requires him to place the name and place of the manufacturer on the barrel and takes away the privilege of the trade-mark which he has established by forcing him to adopt the name of the manufacturer rather than his own.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. In the first place, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is absolutely right. Take the case of a man in New York State, from which we ship into adjoining States a great deal of lime. The man buys his lime by the carload lots and desires to ship it out of there in barrels or in sacks. He may not know if he takes his lime out of the general stock who the manufacturer is, but he can very easily—this being a penal statute if this act passes—he can very easily evade this part of the act by shipping his lime in barrels containing only 180 pounds. I am from the State where originated the saying, "You bought the box but not the socks." If you will look at the language you will see that you have added a provision that on the 180-pound barrel he is to put the figures 180, and on the large barrel of 280 pounds, in addition, he must put the name of the manufacturer and the place. It seems to me that the language ought to be amended by inserting, after the word "and," the words "upon either barrel" in addition. I can not see why the contention of the gentleman from Massachusetts is not correct, and why, if a man carries lime from an adjoining State, he should not be compelled to put his name and address on the barrel instead of the manufacturer's name and address.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment by striking out all after the word "net," in line 18, down to and including the word "sold," in line 20.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I believe the intent of the bill and the intention of the committee is to apply the same thing to the 180-pound barrel as well as to the 280-pound barrel. In other words, that they should be required to stamp his name on both barrels.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Strike out, on page 2, line 18, all after the word "net," down to and including the word "sold," in line 20.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am not in favor of imposing hardships and restrictions upon the entire lime-shipping trade of the country in order to protect one locality in the importations of lime from British Columbia to the State of Washington. Those of us who have the slightest knowledge of the lime-jobbing trade know that lime is bought in carload lots and is jobbed out and sold not only in intrastate commerce but in interstate commerce in barrels. To force the purchaser of a carload lot to brand the barrel with the name of the manufacturer when he may not know where the lime was manufactured is the imposition of a hardship upon him. It is asking him to do something which in the course of the trade he is not able to ascertain. That is a legislative restriction which is unfair. I do not believe the gentleman from Ohio intended to place any such unreasonable restriction on the jobbing trade of this country. The gentleman can see that in the instance cited it will cause considerable inconvenience.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Has the gentleman the idea that very much lime goes from the kilns to the jobbers in bulk?

Mr. STAFFORD. In Waukesha County, a part of the district which I had the honor to represent before it was reapportioned, is a lime district. I visited the lime district quite frequently. They ship the lime from there in carload lots to the jobbers in Milwaukee, and the jobbers in Milwaukee in turn ship it to other places. Now, why should you place the unreasonable restriction upon the jobber that he must brand the barrel with the name of the manufacturer, when he may not know the name of the manufacturer or where the lime was manufactured? Where carload lots are sold and bought by brokers, bought in transit, and the brokers may not know who is the manufacturer of that lime, that would be imposing a hardship upon them. You are requiring something that can not be conformed to by the jobber. Why should you do it just merely to protect some dealers in one place up in the northwestern part of the country, to protect the State of Washington against the international trade from British Columbia?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. One of the purposes in my asking the question is to get the opportunity to say that I am now trying to learn what I can about the bill, in the interest of men in my own district who are lime producers and who sell to the jobbers, who ship their lime from their kilns in barrels. My district is a marble district, and underlaid with lime from one end to the other.

Mr. STAFFORD. The lime is shipped from my part of the country in carload lots.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman's district is not the only one.

Mr. SLOAN. I should like to ask the gentleman whether his amendment is supported by the Lime Kiln Club? [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I believe this is satisfactory to a large majority of the lime manufacturers and dealers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have the jobbers been heard on this question?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not know to what extent they were represented at the hearing, but jobbers appeared before the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know the jobbers of my city have not been heard.

Mr. ASHBROOK. We had numerous representatives from the jobbing trade, as well as the manufacturers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can not the gentleman see the hardship that will be placed on the jobbing trade in the instance cited by me?

Mr. ASHBROOK. There might be instances where it would work a hardship.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should you impose that hardship by legislation, if it is not necessary?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. How is it going to impose a hardship?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have already cited an instance where lime is bought in carload lots by jobbers. I can conceive that they might not know who the manufacturers are. Then they sell to the trade in barrels, and they would not be able to comply with this condition.

Mr. ASHBROOK. But that would not refer to trade within the State.

Mr. STAFFORD. These jobbers are not limited in their trade, so far as the Northwest is concerned, to the trade only in the State; but they sell throughout all of the Northwest, and I presume the same condition prevails in the other parts of the country.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I want to see if we can not reach some agreement as to phraseology that will satisfy all?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I do not think that I have the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have the floor; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. Would not this cover the case? Evidently there should be retained on the barrel some identification of the original sale; that is, where manufactured and the address. The committee are very insistent that that should be in the bill, and I think properly so. Would it not take care of the situation if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] should leave the amendment as it is practically, and then add "or if sold in bulk the name and address of the person barreling it"? That seems to be the object of the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. That phraseology would not meet the case.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is only a suggestion as to the idea.

Mr. STAFFORD. Because that which is sold in bulk might not be sold in barrels.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Those for whom the gentleman is speaking are the jobbers.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, let us have a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to be heard upon that amendment.

Mr. REAVIS. They know of whom they buy this lime.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not necessarily. I can not speak as to lime, but take other articles—for instance, pig iron, with which I am somewhat familiar. When a man buys a carload of pig iron from a broker he does not know who is the manufacturer.

Mr. REAVIS. But he knows he buys from a broker.

Mr. STAFFORD. But they may not know the manufacturer of the pig.

Mr. REAVIS. Does the gentleman know of any instance in his own district or elsewhere where lime is purchased from brokers in bulk?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not say that as to lime, but I know such is the case as to other articles. Did the gentleman ask me whether it was purchased in bulk?

Mr. REAVIS. I do; of brokers?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; not of brokers.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I demand to be heard upon that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will not agree to this amendment. If it does, you take away a very large part of the value of the bill. I can not understand why it is that any lime manufacturer objects to having his name go upon the barrel. The language which it is proposed to have stricken out is "and in addition the name of the manufacturer of the lime." Why should any honest man object to that? Next, "and the name of the brand, if any, under which it is sold." I can see no reason why anybody should object to that provision. The gentleman [Mr. STAFFORD] refers to the conditions out in the State of Washington. There are conditions there that this reaches, but it is no more so there than in other places along the border. Why should the people in my portion of the country buy lime shipped from British Columbia under the impression that it is made in this country? I think the time has about come when we should legislate in this body for the people of the United States and not legislate for the people of Canada.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Why should you require a retailer who might have purchased the lime from a jobber, and then barreled the lime, to put the name of the manufacturer of the lime on the barrel? Why not put the retailer's name on the barrel?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Put them both on, if you want to.

Mr. WALSH. You require him by this bill to put the name of the manufacturer of the lime, and the reason is to assist in the prosecution for violation of this law when the manufacturer may not be concerned with the violation of the law at all.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. My reason for wanting the manufacturer's name put on there is because when a man buys the lime I want him to know where it is bought, so that if the man who manufactures the lime is perpetrating a fraud, or if his goods do not come up to the standard, or if they are better than the average, the man who purchases the lime will know who is responsible for it.

That is the reason I want it, in the interest of fair and honest dealing.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will yield further, that may all well be if the transaction took place in one State, but suppose the lime is shipped from your State across the country to New England and there sold by the jobber to the retailer. You are not affording any protection. The reason given is to trace a violation of the law. Now, the manufacturer may not be concerned about the violation of the law.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think the man who buys the lime in your State, the retailer who gets the lime that comes from my State, ought to know where the lime comes from and who made it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of what time I have to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROWE].

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, there is a little misunderstanding as to how lime comes into the market. Where the limekilns are close to the market they send it in bulk in cars, but where it is at a distance it comes in the market in barrels. Now, lime coming into New York comes in two ways. That from a distance like Vermont, comes in barrels, and practically all is sold in New York City in barrels. Now, the substitute offered here would work very great injury to the manufacturers of lime. At this present time there are many people of New York City that go around among the builders and buy for 2 cents the old barrels. Then they buy the lime manufactured near New York, which is nothing like the quality of that from Vermont, and fill these barrels and resell them. I am interested in the retailing of lime in New York City, and we want the barrels marked with the State where they come from, and the name also of the manufacturer.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a rather important question to all concerned, and I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he let it go over until next Wednesday, as there are a great many people concerned in this matter. There is no quorum here, and I do not want to be forced to make the point of order, and if the gentleman will agree to let the bill go over until next Wednesday it can then be considered; otherwise I should make the point of no quorum.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I was about to suggest to the Members of the House present that I think most of them are more or less interested in this bill. They appreciate the importance of passing the bill at this time, as the Tuttle bill goes into effect on July 1. If the gentlemen are more interested in talking, they can defeat the bill, but if they really want to pass the bill they must allow the bill to be passed now; otherwise they will have to take the chances of the point of no quorum being raised.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman frankly and sincerely that a very large amount of lime that comes into my home city comes from Ohio in carload lots. You are going to work a hardship upon some of these people if you pass the bill as proposed. If you will give me time and postpone, as the gentleman said, the consideration of this bill for a few days I will by wire to-morrow settle that question with the dealers in my home city.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman will allow me I will say to him that the lime interests are very anxious indeed that this legislation should be passed at this time so it will relieve them from the operation of the Tuttle bill, which goes into effect July the first.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman think the interests of the lime industry should be given preference over the interests of the jobbers or retailers or consumers?

Mr. ASHBROOK. If I said the lime manufacturers I should also include the jobbing interests. The people are all affected alike by this; not only the manufacturers, but the jobbers and consumers.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on line 18, after the word "and," on page 2, by inserting the words "on either barrel."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "and" insert the words "on either barrel."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. In section 2, line 17, strike out the word "upon," and insert in lieu thereof the word "of."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 17, strike out the word "upon," and insert in lieu thereof the word "of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on line 17, page 2, by adding after the word "upon" the words "one or both heads of."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 17, after the word "upon" add the words "one or both heads of."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York withdraws his amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. When lime is sold in interstate commerce in containers of less capacity than the standard small barrel, it shall be sold in multiples of said standard small barrel and the net weight of such container shall by stencil or otherwise be clearly marked thereon, together with the name of the manufacturer thereof, and the name of the brand, if any, under which it is sold.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 3 and substituting therefor the following:

"SEC. 3. When lime is sold in interstate commerce in containers other than barrels of less weight and capacity than the standard small barrel it shall be sold in fractional parts of the net weight contents of said standard small barrel, and the net weight contents of said standard small barrel shall be stenciled or otherwise be clearly marked thereon, together with the name of the manufacturer thereof and where manufactured."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand you require on these small containers the name and place of the manufacturer to be placed? Are you also exacting such harsh measures as to require small containers of 25 or 50 pounds to be marked in that way? I think I will make a point of no quorum if you are going to make the bill so unreasonable as that.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Well, Mr. Speaker, in the interest of attempting to pass this bill at this time I will withdraw the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio withdraws the committee amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out line 23, if the gentleman is going to offer his substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio withdrew his amendment.

Mr. BENNET. I move to strike out on line 23, page 2, the word "multiples," and insert the words "fractional parts."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 23, strike out the word "multiples" and insert the words "fractional parts."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend in line 24 of section 3, after the word "of" by inserting "lime contained in." As it reads at present, it is the weight of the container, when in fact it ought to state the weight of the lime contained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "of" insert the words "lime contained in."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful to pack, sell, or offer for sale for shipment from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, any barrels or other containers of lime which are not marked as provided in sections 2 and 3 of this act, or to sell, charge for, or purport to deliver from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, as a large or small barrel or a multiple of said small barrel of lime, any more or less weight of lime than is established by the provisions of this act; and any person guilty of a violation of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be liable to a fine not exceeding $100.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 13, strike out the word "multiple" and insert in lieu thereof the words "fractional part."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, in line 14, the words "more or." I do not think that we ought to fine a man for selling something over weight.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest further to the gentleman from Ohio whether the penal section is sufficient to cover a case of fraudulent use of a branded barrel. I do not care to take up any time now.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee how he determines the United States court having jurisdiction of such an offense. Under section 3 of the immigration law we run across the same condition. I call the gentleman's attention to this in order that he may consider it in conference. We provided what would be an equivalent, and the equivalent here would be the United States court in the district from which the lime was shipped or in which it was received. They have concurrent jurisdiction. I do not know how anybody could tell which court had jurisdiction from this. I hope the gentleman will clear that up in conference.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman that my understanding is that the court would have jurisdiction where the offense was committed, where it was sold.

Mr. BENNET. It might be so.

Mr. MONDELL. It would depend on what the offense was. If it was an omission to mark, it would be where there was a failure to mark.

Mr. ASHBROOK. And the same as to branding of short weight.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ASHBROOK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed and laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the widows' pension bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEALES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech by the Hon. AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER at Gettysburg on Memorial Day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech by the Hon. AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER at Gettysburg on Memorial Day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 29, 1916.

The Senate met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, God of all nations, Thou dost look with infinite tenderness and love upon all the children of men. We come before Thee with the interests of this great Nation in our hearts and invoke Thy divine blessing. Thou dost rule Thy children on the earth by the revelations of Thy will. In the midst of all the stream of human life there is that current which makes for righteousness and which tells the presence of the divine power and the Divine Spirit. That which is in our own hearts, love to mankind, sympathy for the suffering, desire to uplift, to refine, to perfect, we recognize as coming out of Thine own ministry to us and as the working out of the divine program in human life. Do Thou create in us more and more a spirit of fellowship and of good will toward men. May all the influence of our lives and all the ministry of our work go for the establishment of the universal brotherhood. Guide us to this end, for Christ's sake. Amen.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. William H. Stokes, of Ackworth, N. Dak., praying for Federal censorship of motion pictures, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. ASHURST. I present resolutions unanimously adopted at a mass meeting of American citizens of Irish extraction held in the city of Prescott, Ariz., June 20, 1916. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTIONS UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED BY MASS MEETING OF AMERICAN CITIZENS OF IRISH EXTRACTION HELD IN THE CITY OF PRESCOTT, ARIZ., JUNE 20, 1916.

Thus her chains as they rankle her blood as it runs
But make her more painfully dear to her sons,
Whose heart, like the young of the desert bird's nest,
Drinks love in each life drop that flows from her breast.

We are assembled here as American citizens of Irish birth or extraction to render financial aid to the oppressed people of Ireland and to make known and voice our solemn protest against the recent atrocious and barbarous murder of 16 Irish patriots by perfidious and tyrannical England, who for more than seven centuries has been the constant despoiler of helpless Ireland.

We are proud to announce that we are in full and complete accord with the aims of the Irish revolutionary brotherhood, which has for its object and purpose the final emancipation of Ireland from the intolerable thralldom and tyranny of England and the establishment of an Irish republic modeled after that of the United States. To the brave and ever-honored Irish revolutionists who captured four-fifths of the city of Dublin in the face of tremendous odds we extend our sincerest admiration. Though temporarily defeated by overwhelming numbers of English soldiers, they maintained to the last hour the most heroic traditions of our race and kept the flag of the Irish republic waving in defiance, unstained by any act of dishonor. The cause for which they fought and bled is as sacred as any ever waged by a downtrodden people for liberty and independence, and that cause must be nurtured and sustained until despotic England is humbled in the dust of defeat and the green flag of Erin waves over Innisfail.

The diabolical murder of 16 Irish revolutionary soldiers after their surrender as prisoners of war has no parallel for baseness and perfidy in the annals of modern warfare. As prisoners of war they were entitled to the same consideration given to other soldiers under like circumstances, but notwithstanding this they were foully murdered by orders from England. Three of them were shot without even the pretense of a drumhead court-martial, and at least one of them who had been grievously wounded at the battle of Dublin, and who by reason thereof could not stand on his feet, was dragged from his prison cot, propped up by English ghouls, while the British firing squad riddled his already wounded body with a fusillade of bullets. Thus we behold the dark and bloody deeds of the Turk and the Mexican doubly discounted in ferociousness by English tyrants, who "gladly feed with Ireland's blood the cannibal appetite" of their savage and revolting natures.

We point to Pablo Lopez, one of Villa's bandits, who was given a month for his wounds to heal by Carranza before being shot. Not so with Connolly, one of the signers of the Irish declaration of independence, who, in his wounded condition, was bolstered up and immediately shot like a wild beast by so-called Anglo-Saxon civilization.

As another instance of British Anglo-Saxon civilization, we point to the Revolutionary War of this American Republic, when England hired the savage Indians to massacre and scalp Americans at so much per head, the amount of reward being determined by the number of American scalps delivered by the red men.

We also point to the War of 1812, when the same despotic power wantonly and maliciously burned the Capitol Building at Washington and sought by every possible means to again enslave the American people, until Gen. Andrew Jackson, at the Battle of New Orleans, with his Kentucky and Tennessee riflemen, delivered this country for all time to come from British aggression and despotism. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urge all men and women of the Irish race to contribute liberally at this crucial time to alleviate the distress of our kindred in the old land;

Resolved further, That we are in full accord with the attitude of the Irish race toward the oppressor of Ireland, as expressed at mass meetings recently held in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Washington, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and other places in the United States. In conjunction with our kindred all over the world, we denounce English misrule in Ireland as the most despotic exercised in this day and age by any civilized power of the earth. We call upon Irishmen and descendants of Irishmen everywhere to arouse and bestir themselves in behalf of prostrate Ireland and to oppose English tyranny with might and main, to the end that this modern Babylon who ruthlessly shot and killed 16 Irish prisoners of war in the year of our Lord 1916 may be driven forever from the land of the shamrock.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be published in the local papers, in the Leader, of San Francisco, the Los Angeles Examiner, and the Irish World and Gaelic American, of New York, and that a copy thereof be forwarded to Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Witness our hands at Prescott, Ariz., this 20th day of June, A. D. 1916.

Mr. COLT. I present resolutions adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Rhode Island favoring legislation for the prevention of floods. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the Seate of Rhode Island for the prevention of floods.

Whereas the frequent floods of the Mississippi River, caused by waters from 31 States, embracing more than 41 per cent of the total area of the United States, result in great loss of human lives in portions of the States of Illinois, Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas, and Louisiana, and large money losses not only in such afflicted territory but in other portions of the Nation; and

Whereas it has been declared by every member of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army who has dealt with such floods, by the Mississippi River Commission, and by other commissions appointed by Congress, that such floods can be prevented at a reasonable cost; and

Whereas the work of such flood prevention has been going on for many years in the least economical way and over two-thirds of its cost has been borne by the damaged sections, who can no longer cope with this giant problem without effective aid from the National Government; and

Whereas all political parties have declared in their campaign platforms that flood control of the Mississippi River is a national duty: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Rhode Island, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to fulfill this national duty at its next session, and to enact such legislation as shall provide a separate and comprehensive plan for the prevention of such floods without delay; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States, and to each Member of the Senate and House of Representatives of this State in Congress.

Mr. COLT presented petitions of sundry citizens of Rhode Island, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Lodge of Elks of Woonsocket, R. I., remonstrating against the United States becoming involved in the European war, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the State Council of Women of Rhode Island, praying for the establishment of a national leprosarium, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. HUSTING. I present resolutions signed by about 500 citizens of the city of Ripon, in my State, whose sons enlisted in Company D, Wisconsin National Guard, now encamped at Camp Douglas, heartily approving the policy of adequate national preparedness and requesting that the appropriation of $75,000 for the erection of a Federal building in the city of Ripon, Wis., be diverted from its original purpose and applied to the national defense. Accompanying the resolutions are resolutions adopted by the Common Council of the City of Ripon and also by the Commercial Club of that city. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD without the signatures and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the National Congress has made an appropriation of $75,000 for the erection of a Federal building at Ripon, Wis.; and

Whereas it is the belief of the citizens and taxpayers of this community, as expressed by resolutions circulated and signed by them, that in the present emergency the money so appropriated can serve a greater public good by being used for the national defense and that it is the duty of every community to assist so far as possible in every way within its power: Be it

Resolved, That the Common Council of the city of Ripon hereby indorses the resolutions so circulated and signed, and that it adds its earnest request to its Representatives in Congress to immediately introduce and strive to secure the passage of an act diverting the said $75,000 appropriation from its original purpose and applying it to the national defense.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Representative from this district and to the two Senators from the State of Wisconsin.

Passed this 24th day of June, 1916.

CITY OF RIPON,
L. W. THAYER, Mayor.
C. W. STEWART, City Clerk.

The Commercial Club of the city of Ripon heartily indorses the movement to cause the Federal appropriation of $75,000 which was to have been used for a Federal building in this city to be diverted to the equipment of our National Army.

RIPON COMMERCIAL CLUB,
SYDNEY S. HALL, President.
A. H. FISCHER, Secretary.

Whereas an appropriation of $75,000 for the erection of a Federal building at Ripon, Wis., has been made by the National Congress; and

Whereas the people of this community heartily believe in and approve of a policy of adequate national preparedness; and

Whereas we believe that private and local gain and enhancement should always be subservient to the common good: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the citizens of Ripon whose sons enlisted in Company D, Wisconsin National Guards, are now encamped at Camp Douglas, in response to the summons of President Wilson; whose boys of others days were among the first to answer the call of their country in the Spanish and Civil Wars; whose patriotism and loyalty have ever been unbounded and unstinted; with the tearful farewells of mothers, wives, sisters, and sweethearts of soldiers fresh in their memory; with the echoes of the footsteps of the Grand Army of the Republic in State encampment assembled still lingering in their ears, earnestly request their Representatives in Congress to immediately introduce and strive to secure the passage of an act diverting the appropriation made for a Federal building in Ripon from its original purpose and applying it specifically to the equipment of the National Army, preferably in the perfection of the aviation service.

LAND IN CRAIGHEAD COUNTY, ARK.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably the bill (H. R. 14630) to quiet title in certain citizens to certain lands lying within the meander line on the St. Francis River, and being parts of lots and tracts of land lying in Craighead County, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 549) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the report.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, this is a House bill which has been favorably recommended by the department. It proposes to quiet the title of certain occupants of land in the district that has recently come under the control of the Government by reason of changes in the land policy of the country with reference to ancient surveys. It meets the equities of the case, and the department recommends it. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M'CABE, MONT.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 600) to validate title to the town site of McCabe, in the State of Montana, and I submit a report (No. 547) thereon. I will state that it is a very short bill, which simply quiets title to lots in a town in Montana. It is of no interest to anybody except the occupants of the lots. It is a House bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator from Montana explain to the Senate the real reasons for this legislation.

Mr. MYERS. I will do so, with pleasure, so far as I can.

This is a bill which came from the House, and was introduced in the House by Representative STOUT, of the Public Lands Committee. It is to validate, as I recollect—the bill will show—a Santa Fe lieu-land selection on which a little town site was started. The party who sold lots has been unable to give complete title, and the people have bought a number of lots from him, and are lacking in their title.

I will say to the Senator that the bill was very thoroughly considered yesterday by the Public Lands Committee, in the absence of the Senator from Utah, and very thoroughly discussed. The amendment which was offered and adopted was offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. It was the unanimous consensus of opinion of the committee that with the amendment the bill was entirely just and proper, and it was unanimously ordered favorably reported. My only reason for asking its passage at this time is that it is a remedial measure, and unless it goes through Congress at this session very serious results will occur to the people who have invested their money there.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 10, after the word "thereto," to insert "to John Lundquist, trustee, for the original purchasers of town lots of the town site of McCabe, in the State of Montana," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept for limited patent only Santa Fe Pacific lieu-land selection heretofore made and designated as Glasgow, Mont., land office serial No. 015766, for the following-described land: Southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 4, in township 29 north, range 56 east, Montana meridian; and issue patent thereto to John Lundquist, trustee for the original purchasers of town lots of the town site of McCabe, in the State of Montana, which patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all coal, oil, or other mineral deposits in the land, and the right of the United States, its grantees or lessees, to mine and remove same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM FOGLIO.

Mr. MYERS. I present another report from the Committee on Public Lands, and at the risk of trespassing upon the generosity of the Senate, I ask that it may be acted upon immediately. I will state now that it is simply a bill to confirm title upon a poor cripple who has suffered from fire and disease and has lived on the land more than the required length of time, but on account of his pitiable condition he has not been able to cultivate the quantity of land the law requires. The action of the committee was unanimous.

I therefore report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7430) for the relief of William Foglio, and I submit a report (No. 548) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue patent to William Foglio for the southwest quarter section 23, and the northwest quarter section 26, township 29 north, range 30 east, Montana: Provided, That no adverse right had accrued to said tract prior to January 1, 1915.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF MAGAZINE RIFLES.

Mr. WEEKS. I present a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs and ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is the bill (S. 6212) authorizing the Secretary of War to sell certain magazine rifles, and I submit a report (No. 555) thereon. I will say in explanation that it involves the Government in no expenditure whatever. The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Massachusetts wishes to purchase these rifles for practice purposes, and the bill authorizes the Secretary of War to sell them.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to sell, at the prices at which they are listed for the Army, such United States caliber .30, model 1903, magazine rifles, with slings, bayonets, bayonet scabbards, field belts with suspenders and case containing thong and brush, as the governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts may order for issue to the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Massachusetts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4 and 6, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and change the section numbers in the bill as follows: On page 2, line 23, strike out "3" and insert "2"; on page 3, line 3, strike out "4" and insert "3"; on page 3, line 18, strike out "5" and insert "4"; and the Senate agree to the same.

GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
LUKE LEA,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the attendance is very light this morning. The conference report disposes of matters that were controverted sharply in the Senate when the joint resolution was before the Senate. I think it ought to be printed and go over for the day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator insists upon that it will go over as a matter of course, but I should like very much to have it acted on to-day if it is possible. There is only one change really of practical moment in the joint resolution, and that is the elimination of section 2 as it was passed by the House originally and the proposed substitute offered by the Senate. That is practically the only change.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have the report go over for the day.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Nelson	Stone
Beckham	Gronna	Norris	Taggart
Borah	Hardwick	Page	Thompson
Brady	Hollis	Pittman	Townsend
Brandegee	Husting	Ransdell	Vardaman
Broussard	James	Shafroth	Walsh
Bryan	Jones	Sheppard	Warren
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Sherman	Weeks
Clarke, Ark.	La Follette	Simmons	Williams
Culberson	Lane	Smith, Ga.	Works
Curtis	Lea, Tenn.	Smith, Md.
du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Fletcher	Myers	Sterling

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] on public business.

I have also been requested to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is detained on a matter of public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report submitted by me awhile ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House joint resolution 242.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon a question. As I understand from the public prints this morning and as I understood the statement of the Senator, the only vital change is in eliminating the two matters over which we were contesting in the Senate, to wit, section 2 of the House provision and the substitute for it adopted by the Senate?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is all; the elimination of section 2 as passed by the House and the substitute proposed by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BORAH. And both of those go out?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Both go out.

Mr. BORAH. With the contemplation that they may come in as a separate measure?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand that that is the promise made in the other House; that the matter will come in as a separate measure, and that it has been practically agreed to submit a bill covering the disputed provision by unanimous consent early this week or next week.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, my purpose in asking for a delay in this matter was just this: I do not see on the floor of the Senate at this time any one of the Senators who took part in the debate in support of the House proposition, and I thought it but just that they should have some notice of the fact that this conference report was to be considered, which was regarded as a matter of very great importance and debated at great length. That was my reason for asking that the report go over for a day; but I understand perfectly well that under the rules the chairman of the committee can move to force its consideration at this time. I do not desire to debate it, but I wanted to give opportunity for those who had debated it to be present when it was considered.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to say to the Senator that it is never my intention to shut off any discussion of any of these matters. All of the Senators—in fact, the whole Senate and the whole Congress—have been advised of the urgency of this measure and the desire to put it through as quickly as possible.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But Senators have not been advised that it was to come up this morning. Another appropriation bill was under consideration when we adjourned last night, and it was expected that there would be a morning hour to-day for the introduction of bills, and we adjourned for that purpose.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator, further, that a number of us waited here to have this report sent in from the House last night. If there was anything that could be discussed with reference to this particular report or if it could be amended in any way, I would have no objection, so far as I am individually concerned, to have it postponed; but an emergency exists, and they have been very anxious at the War Department, in order to avail the Government of the services of the National Guard, to have the joint resolution acted on and passed at once. That is my only reason for urging its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in connection with the report and for future reference—I am sure the Senate would like to have it—I have had prepared by the Legislative Reference Bureau of the Library of Congress a table showing the allowances to the soldiers of European countries. It is translated from the French. It also gives the allowances to the dependent families of soldiers of all of the armies of Europe, and I think of some other countries. There has been more or less conjecture as to what these amounts were; and this, I conceive to be, an authentic publication upon the subject. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD for the convenience of Senators; and, in addition to that, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the pay of the various foreign armies, officers and privates, so that the Senate will have for convenience in reference the pay of the armies of practically the whole civilized world—or what was formerly the civilized world, for it is not so any more—and the amounts paid to the families of soldiers in those countries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Washington.

Allowances to the families of soldiers in European countries.

(Translated from Bulletin de la Statistique générale de la France, T. IV, 1914–15, pp. 237–241, 365–367.)

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

I. AUSTRIA.

Under the act of December 26, 1912, the parents and relatives (wife, legitimate children, father, mother, father and mother in law, brothers and sisters, illegitimate mother and children) of a soldier called to the colors in case of mobilization are entitled to an allowance, provided they are dependent for their living on the soldier's work. The rate of such allowance is fixed and announced every year in advance.

In time of peace the parents and relatives (wife, legitimate and illegitimate children, father, mother, brothers, and sisters) of a soldier recalled to the colors for a drill period are entitled, if they are dependent for their living on the soldier's work, to an allowance, which is fixed for all the parents and relatives together at 50 per cent of the ordinary pay of a day laborer in the place of residence of the soldier.

II. HUNGARY.

The granting of allowances to the destitute families of soldiers recalled to the colors is governed by the act of June 10, 1882. A law similar to the Austrian law of December 26, 1912, was contemplated in 1913.

BELGIUM.

I. IN TIME OF PEACE.

Under the act of March 21, 1902, personal service as militiaman entitled one to a monthly allowance of 25 francs in the infantry, 30 francs in the cavalry; the allowance is 30 francs for all short-term volunteers and 35 francs for long-term volunteers. Fifteen francs a month is deducted from this allowance, if necessary, to be paid to the father and mother (or grandparents, as the case may be); to the wife, if the soldier is married; to the person who cares for the children, if the soldier is a widower with children.

II. IN CASE OF MOBILIZATION.

Soldiers recalled to the colors under mobilization orders receive the allowance which was granted to them for effective service. When the mobilized soldier is the head of a family he receives 0.50 franc a day for one child and 1 franc for several children. Such allowance is paid to his wife or to the person who cares for the children.

FRANCE.

I. IN TIME OF PEACE.

Under section 12 of the act of August 7, 1912, the families of persons serving either with the army or the navy who before being called were actually the indispensable breadwinners of ther families are upon application entitled to a daily State allowance of 1.25 francs a day, increased by 0.50 franc for every child under the age of 16 years who is dependent on the breadwinner of the family.

II. IN TIME OF WAR.

According to the act of August 5, 1914, such allowance shall be paid out by the State for the whole duration of the war, irrespective of the position of the person called or recalled to the colors.

GERMANY.

I. IN TIME OF PEACE.

Under the act of May 10, 1892, assistance is granted upon application to the families of soldiers called to the colors for a period of instruction, as follows:

a. For the wives, 30 per cent of the local salary of the male adult workmen at the place of residence of the men called. Such local salary is officially determined with a view to insurance against accident.

b. For each of the other persons entitled to assistance (children, parents and grandparents, brothers and sisters, if dependent on the man called), 10 per cent of such salary.

In addition, a special allowance is granted to the families having or having had three sons in the army or in the navy; these families receive an allowance of 240 marks a year every time a new son is called to active service.

II. IN TIME OF WAR.

The act of February 28, 1888, as amended August 4, 1914, governs allowances to the destitute families of the men of the reserve, of the landwehr, of the esatzreserve, of the reserve of the navy and of the landsturm.

The following persons are entitled to allowances:

a. The wife of a soldier, and his children under 15 years of age.

b. His children above 15, his parents, brothers, and sisters; but only if dependent on the soldier and destitute as a result of his incorporation.

c. His illegitimate children, if the soldier is under the acknowledged obligation, as their father, to provide for them. Subject to the conditions stated under letter b, the parents of the wife, as well as her children from a former marriage, may be granted assistance. More distant relatives and wives separated from their husbands are not entitled to allowances.

The minimum allowance is:

For the wife, 9 marks a month from May to October; 12 marks a month from November to April.

For each child or person designated above, letters b and c, 6 marks a month.

For the money allowance may be substituted in part a supply of breadstuffs, potatoes, fuel, etc., which is payable in advance semimonthly. Payments are made by the Lieferungsverbande (combines for furnishing provisions), created in pursuance of the act of June 13, 1873, on military requisitions, which are refunded out of the imperial treasury. The minimum allowance above determined is granted regardless of the relief which may be extended by private associations or persons.

The minimum allowance paid by local administrations and refunded by the empire has been increased and completed by rent allowances, relief in kind, etc., in certain cities.

III. MATERNITY BENEFIT.

The ordinance of December 3, 1914, grants for the duration of the war a maternity benefit to any woman whose husband—

1. Performs military, sanitary, or other analogous service or is prevented by death, injury, sickness, or captivity from continuing to render such service or from exercising a profession;

2. Was insured against sickness, under the imperial insurance code, or through a miners' sick fund, for at least 26 weeks during the 12 months preceding his departure to the colors or for at least 6 weeks immediately preceding such departure.

The maternity benefit consists of:

1. A cash payment of 25 marks to cover the expenses of the confinement.

2. An allowance of 1 mark a day, including Sundays and holidays, for a period of eight weeks, not less than six of which shall fall after delivery.

3. A sum of 10 marks for the services of a midwife, or for medical attendance, should such be necessitated by pregnancy troubles.

4. In the case of women who nurse their infants a nursing allowance of one-half mark a day, including Sundays and holidays, for a period of 12 weeks after delivery.

The ordinance of April 23, 1915, has extended the maternity benefit to women in destitute circumstances. Women shall be considered as such—

1. If during the year or tax assessment year preceding the entry into the service the combined incomes of the woman and her husband did not exceed 2,500 marks;

2. If the income remaining to the woman after the husband's departure does not exceed 1,500 marks for her own benefit, nor 250 marks for the benefit of each child under the age of 15 years.

GREAT BRITAIN.

I. ARMY.

The "allowance of the army" comprises "separation allowances to families" in time of peace as in time of war.

The rates have been so increased, beginning with October 1, 1914, that the total weekly income from such allowance and from the minimum allotment which the married soldier must make from his pay is as follows:

(a) For the wife of a private or corporal, 12 shillings and 6 pence, and 2 shillings and 6 pence for each of the three first children and 2 shillings for each other child.

(b) For the wife of a noncommissioned officer, the weekly allowance varying according to the grade, from 15 to 23 shillings, and 3 shillings for each of three first children and 2 shillings for each other child.

The extra 3 shillings and 6 pence a week is issuable to London families and the special compensation allowance granted to families on the married establishment will continue to be paid as heretofore.

The separation allowance for motherless children will be at the rate of 3 shillings a week for each child, with the regulated allotment from the soldier in addition.

II. NAVY.

According to the royal ordinance of October 20, 1914, the weekly separation allowances to families of sailors and marines are:

1. For the wife, 6, 8, or 9 shillings, according to the husband's grade.
2. Two shillings for each of the two first children.
3. One shilling for each of the other children.
4. Motherless children, 3 shillings each.

The payment in respect of children will be made to boys under 14 and girls under 16 years of age. Families residing within London are entitled to an additional allowance of 3 shillings and 6 pence per week.

No separation allowance is paid unless an allotment of at least 20 shillings a month is declared by the husband.

ITALY.

I. IN TIME OF PEACE.

By virtue of a ministerial order of 1899, modified in 1907 (Atto No. 118 del 3 luglio 1907, Giornale militare ufficiale), relief is extended to the destitute families of soldiers recalled to the colors for drilling, the restoration of public order, or any other cause.

The following persons are entitled to relief: The wife and the legitimate or recognized children, under 12 years of age, or the children above that age whose incapacity to do any profitable work is evidenced by a medical certificate.

The daily allowance is 0.50 franc for the mother, 0.25 franc for each child in the capitals of Provinces or districts, and is reduced, respectively, to 0.40 franc and 0.20 franc in other communes.

As regards the destitute families of men called to the colors under conscription, the ministerial circular of November 8, 1911, No. 1340, grants, subject to certain conditions, a monthly allowance of 15 lire to the family of a married soldier.

For these two categories of allowances the appropriation asked for under item 80 of the army budget for 1913–14 was 800,000 lire.

II. IN TIME OF WAR OR MOBILIZATION.

Prior to 1914 there existed no special provisions, and the rules applicable to the soldiers recalled to the colors had necessarily to be applied. At the time of the war with Turkey the council of ministers decided on January 16, 1912, to double the amount of the daily allowances to the destitute families of recalled soldiers (classes of 1888 and 1889), and that in cases particularly worthy of interest a daily allowance of 1 lire could be granted to the father and mother of the unmarried recalled soldiers. (War ministry circular of Jan. 19.)

The royal decree of September 20, 1914, determines the daily allowance to be granted to the destitute families of soldiers recalled to the colors as follows:

(a) 1.70 lire for the wife and 1.35 lire for each child under 12 years of age (or above 12, if unable to work), residing in the capital of a Province or district.

(b) 1.60 lire and 1.30 lire if they reside elsewhere.

(c) The destitute father and mother, over 60 years of age, dependent on an unmarried soldier recalled to the colors receive the same allowance as the wife when one parent only is concerned. The father and mother, who both fulfill the aforesaid conditions, receive in all 1.10 lire in the capital of a Province or district, 1 lire elsewhere.

ROUMANIA.

The act of December 23, 1914 (Jan. 5, 1915), authorizing the adoption of exceptional measures, provides for an allowance to families of mobilized soldiers.

Under section 22 the State grants to the families of mobilized soldiers (privates or noncommissioned officers), from the day of mobilization to the fifteenth day following the declaration of a state of peace, an allowance of 15 francs a month per family in rural communes and 20 francs a month per family in urban communes.

In addition, families may receive assistance in the form of work to perform, issues of food and other articles of first necessity, medical relief, care of children in homes and infant asylums; they may even obtain a supplementary money allowance. There is created for this purpose a foundation called the "Fighters' family," with the privileges of a corporation, managed by a central committee established at Bucharest, and by departmental and communal committees.

Under section 20 of the act merchants and manufacturers whose establishments remain open during mobilization, who employ more than five workmen or clerks, either married or having a family dependent on them, who have been not less than two years in their service, are obliged to pay to such workmen or clerks, as long as mobilization lasts, one-half of their salary as assistance extended to the family of the mobilized soldier. Such workmen or clerks have necessarily no right to an allowance from the Government.

Other sections deal with the assignments of pay to the families of officers and reenlisted men of the active army, officers of the reserve, and functionaries entitled to their salaries during mobilization.

RUSSIA.

The ordinance of June 25 (July 8) 1912, governs the conditions under which allowances are granted to soldiers of inferior rank and to their families (pensions to soldiers, widows, and orphans, relief, etc.).

An allowance is granted to the wife and children of a soldier of inferior rank in active service in the army or navy, in the first or second reserve, to his parents, grandparents, brothers, and sisters, if they are dependent upon his work.

Such persons are entitled to a maintenance grant in kind corresponding to at least 1 pood, and 28 pounds of flour, 10 pounds of groats, 4 pounds of salt, and 1 pound of hemp-seed oil per month and per person.

Children below 15 years of age are entitled to one-half of such grant; children above 17 years of age are not entiled to an allowance unless incapable of work; married daughters are likewise excluded therefrom.

The value of the provisions comprised in the food allowances is fixed by the competent provincial authorities after the commencement of hostilities, and is revised on the 1st of September of each year and whenever there occurs a notable change in the prices of provisions.

According to an ordinance of the council of ministers of August 9 (22), 1914, the families of salaried persons called to the colors receive the whole salary for the wife and more than five children, three-fourths of the salary for the wife and four or five children, two-thirds of the salary for the wife and no more than three children, one-half of the salary for the wife alone, and one-third of the salary if the family consists of parents or grandparents or brothers and sisters dependent upon the mobilized soldier.

According to the same ordinance, the families of workmen, salaried persons, and servants in Government establishments, factories, shops, and other similar undertakings receive, in addition to the food allowances above mentioned, one-half of the salary for the wife and more than three children, one-third of the salary for the wife and no more than three children, and one-fourth of the salary for the wife alone.

In both cases when in addition to the mobilized soldier's wife and own children the family includes also parents or grandparents or brothers and sisters each one of them is considered as a child.

SWEDEN.

I. IN TIME OF PEACE.

Assistance to the destitute families of soldiers called to the colors is governed by the royal ordinance of June 1, 1912, as amended September 17, 1914.

The amount of the allowance is fixed as follows for each day of service:

	Öre.
For the wife able to work and 1 child	75
For the wife able to work and no more than 2 children	100
For the wife whose capacity for work is limited	75
For the wife whose capacity for work is limited and 1 child	100
For the wife whose capacity for work is limited and no more than 2 children	125
For 1 child whose father is divorced or is a widower	75
For 2 children or more, whose father is divorced or is a widower	100

Able-bodied wives without children receive no allowance.

The allowance is increased by 40 per cent when the soldier is on drilling periods of the reserve or of the landsturm.

Soldiers must contribute to the allowances to which their wives and children are entitled by paying such portion of their pay as exceeds 20 oere a day.

II. IN CASE OF MOBILIZATION.

The royal ordinance of August 13, 1914, governs the granting of allowances during all the time that a soldier is called in defense of the Kingdom or is retained for this purpose after his term of service in time of peace has expired. His family, in needy circumstances, receives from the Government an allowance of 1 crown per day, as well as an additional sum of 25 oere per day for each child under 15 years of age.

SWITZERLAND.

The ordinance of January 21, 1910, governs the granting of relief to families in destitute circumstances owing to their breadwinners serving in the army.

The wife and children of a soldier and the parents or relatives he supports or who are members of his household are entitled to allowances. They must be proportioned to the needs of the family and not exceed the average daily pay of the soldier, after deduction of an appropriate sum (1 franc, for instance) for his personal needs. For the purpose of determining such allowances, the social position, number, age, and earning capacity of the entitled persons must be taken into account.

The daily allowance can not exceed 2 francs for the wife and 0.70 franc per child, in cities; 1.50 francs for the wife and 0.50 franc per child, in the country.

The allowances are paid by the communes; the cost is borne for three-quarters by the Confederation and for one-quarter by the Canton.

RÉSUMÉ.

In Great Britain the Government allowance to families is added by right to the allotment which soldiers or sailors must make from their pay.

In Belgium the previous deduction from the pay of militiamen is paid to the parents, irrespective of their circumstances.

In other countries where military service is compulsory allowances are granted only to families in destitute circumstances.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. At the request of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] I report back favorably from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals the bill (S. 6447) to amend section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, relating to immigration in the Canal Zone, and I ask for its present consideration. (S. Rept. 564.)

Mr. STONE. What is the bill?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let the bill be read. The reading will explain it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. The governor of the Panama Canal is hereby authorized to make rules and regulations, subject to the approval of the President, and in like manner to alter or amend the same from time to time, touching the right of any person to enter or remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone; for the detention of any person entering the Canal Zone in violation of such rules and regulations, and return of such person to the country whence he or she came, on the vessel bringing such person to the Canal Zone, or any other vessel belonging to the same owner or interest, and at the expense of such owner or interest; and in addition to the punishment prescribed by this section for violation of any such rules and regulations, the authorities of the Canal Zone may withhold the clearance of such vessel from any port in the Canal Zone until any fine imposed and the cost of maintenance of such person are paid. Any person violating any of such rules or regulations shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction in the District Court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding a year, or both, in the discretion of the court. It shall be unlawful for any person, by any means or in any way, to injure or obstruct, or attempt to injure or obstruct, any part of the Panama Canal or the locks thereof or the approaches thereto. Any person violating this provision shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction in the District Court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 20 years, or both, in the discretion of the court. If the act shall cause the death of any person within a year and a day thereafter, the person so convicted shall be guilty of murder and shall be punished accordingly."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was about to say a word in explanation of the request for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say to the Senator, because it is a very important measure, that it seems to me it ought to be explained before we vote on it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, I would explain anything that was obscure in the bill. I will not enter into a lengthy explanation until I get unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, of course, but in brief it is this:

The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, was called out of town. This is a department bill which originated in the Canal Zone, prepared by the law officer there. It was sent up here by Col. Goethals, governor of the Panama Canal, and has the indorsement of the Panama Canal official in charge of the office here and the indorsement of the Secretary of War. It was sent to our committee by the Secretary of War.

The Senator from New York prepared a written report, which I have here, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD with the bill. It is the reenactment of section 10 of the Panama Canal act, and extends its provisions somewhat further in relation to the incursion of people on the Canal Zone than the authorities there think ought to be included.

The law at present allows the governor, subject to the approval of the President, to make rules and regulations and enforce them concerning residents upon the Canal Zone and passing across it, but it does not authorize the President to make regulations concerning the deportation of any person who may be there or the control of the vessels which bring them there and dump them upon the canal.

This amendment of the act also provides penalties for the attempt to injure the locks or blowing up the canal, or any such trespasses. It leaves the penalty for a violation as that the same as it was in the original act.

Until I get unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, I do not care to pursue the explanation further.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am going to reserve the right to object if the bill is to provoke extended debate. It has been some time since we have had a morning hour, and I think it ought not to be taken up with the discussion of one important measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At present there is no objection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the Senator will bear witness that I do not occupy more than my share of the morning hour usually.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But something the Senator may say may cause extended debate. That the Senator frequently does.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. While I may cause it, I do not participate in it myself to any unusual extent. The Senator, of course, has the right to interpose an objection at any time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That has been held both ways.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Is there any provision in the act to which this is amendatory of one section providing for the publication of these rules and regulations?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That matter was called to my attention yesterday. There is no provision in the original Panama Canal act for the publication of any processes or legislative enactments or proceedings of courts or anything of that kind on the Canal Zone. I called up the department yesterday and talked with the Secretary over the telephone. I asked him if he would have any objection or if there was any reason why an amendment should not be proposed to this bill which would provide, as to these rules and regulations which the President has authority to promulgate, how long in advance of its taking effect notice must be given to the world. I have here a letter from the department in relation to that, which I should like to have the Secretary read. It is very brief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 28, 1916.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My private secretary communicated to me the message which he received from you over the telephone relative to the bill authorizing the governor of the Panama Canal to deport undesirable aliens, and also advised me of your desire to have a copy of the memorandum prepared by the chief of the Panama Canal office here, which was read to you over the telephone. I am inclosing a copy of that memorandum herewith.

Sincerely, yours,
NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The other paper is the one I want read, really.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE PANAMA CANAL,
WASHINGTON OFFICE,
Washington, June 28, 1916.

Memorandum for the Secretary of War.

Referring to the memorandum from your office of this date with reference to the publication of rules and regulations as proposed under Senate bill 6447, I beg to state that, so far as this office is advised, there would be no objections to the incorporation in the bill of some provision to publish such rules and regulations as might be promulgated pursuant thereto, so that general knowledge of same would be disseminated. It may be stated, however, that it is believed that present practice provides sufficient means for giving due publicity to such rules and regulations as would be promulgated pursuant to this bill. Rules and regulations which are promulgated by Executive order are printed in the usual manner for such orders and distributed by the State Department and are also printed in the Canal Record, which has a wide circulation.

As the rules and regulations to be promulgated under the authority of this bill would be prepared by the governor and submitted to the President for his approval, they would necessarily have to be published in Executive orders and in turn printed in the Canal Record. In this manner these rules would reach all diplomatic representatives of foreign Governments stationed in Washington and would also reach the consuls and diplomatic representatives of the United States in foreign countries. By means of the Canal Record they would reach all the large shipping concerns in addition to the diplomatic representatives and consuls.

EARL I. BROWN,
Major, Corps of Engineers, United States Army,
Chief of Office.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It would appear from that that all these Executive orders of the President take the same course and that notice is published in the same manner. Of course, if that is done, that would seem to me to be sufficient notice. I think, however, it would be well for the Committee on Interoceanic Canals to take up that question, and also the question of establishing by law, not leaving it in the discretion of the President or the governor of the canal, what period of time should be given by way of notice, and all such matters of that kind.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, these orders ought to be published and given wide circulation. At the same time it does seem to me there ought to be a requirement of law that some publication should be given, because these rules and regulations are often quite important, providing for penalties, and so forth, and it is within the power of the governor to inflict a hardship or do an injury if he exerted the power that he really possesses.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think not quite that way, Mr. President, if the statement made by the department officials is correct, because the publication of the rules is attended to by the executive department here, and it is done through the State Department. It is given to all diplomatic officers and consuls.

Mr. NORRIS. It is not required to be done, however, by law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; apparently not as to any of the notices that are given through the State Department. I think the point made by the Senator is well taken; and, if I had time, if I could do so without a long correspondence with the officials of the canal as to how much would actually be necessary in view of the shipping necessities there, I should have no objection whatever to such an amendment; indeed, I should prepare one myself, if I could; but I hesitate to tamper with it now, with the slight knowledge I have upon the practical part of the matter to be attended to. I, of course, have no more interest in it than has any other Senator, but I know how anxious the Secretary of War is to have this matter attended to now in view of the world-wide conditions that exist.

The Panama Canal is, of course, a very vital and in some respects a vulnerable feature in our military defenses and in our commercial activities; and I hope that this bill may be allowed to pass without bringing that subject up now or without delaying it perhaps for several weeks in order to get the necessary information.

I will say to the Senator that I have conferred with other members of the committee on the subject, and that as a member of the committee I will do the best I can to get the committee to take up the matter, investigate it, and bring in a bill which will properly provide for it.

Mr. President, I think I have said all I care to say. The measure is really in the interest of protecting a vital national channel of communication, one which is 3,000 miles away from us, and is more or less vulnerable in certain respects. I hope the bill may receive the favorable consideration of this body at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the report (No. 564) submitted by me heretofore on the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

The Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to which was referred the bill (S. 6447) to amend section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, relating to immigration in the Canal Zone, having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The purpose of this bill is to amend section 10 of the Panama Canal act, which has particular reference to the exclusion of undesirable aliens from the Canal Zone. In the opinion of your committee it is deemed better legislation to reenact the part proposed to be amended, which makes unnecessary the provision of section 2 as contained in the draft submitted by the War Department. Your committee appends hereto the entire section, showing the original statute in roman, the part proposed to be stricken out in brackets, and the new legislation proposed by this bill in italic.

"SEC. 10. [That after the Panama Canal shall have been completed and opened for operation the governor of the Panama Canal shall have the right to make such rules and regulations, subject to the approval of the President, touching the right of any person to remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone as may be necessary.]

"The governor of the Panama Canal is hereby authorized to make rules and regulations, subject to the approval of the President, and in like manner to alter or amend the same from time to time, touching the right of any person to enter or remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone; for the detention of any person entering the Canal Zone in violation of such rules and regulations, and return of such person to the country whence he or she came, on the vessel bringing such person to the Canal Zone, or any other vessel belonging to the same owner or interest, and at the expense of such owner or interest; and in addition to the punishment prescribed by this section for violation of any such rules and regulations, the authorities of the Canal Zone may withhold the clearance of such vessel from any port in the Canal Zone until any fine imposed and the cost of maintenance of such person are paid. Any person violating any of such rules or regulations shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction in the District Court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding a year, or both, in the discretion of the court. It shall be unlawful for any person, by any means or in any way, to injure or obstruct, or attempt to injure or obstruct, any part of the Panama Canal or the locks thereof or the approaches thereto. Any person violating this provision shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction in the District Court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 20 years, or both, in the discretion of the court. If the act shall cause the death of any person within a year and a day thereafter, the person so convicted shall be guilty of murder and shall be punished accordingly. Any person violating any of such rules or regulations shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction in the District Court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding a year, or both, in the discretion of the court. It shall be unlawful for any person, by any means or in any way, to injure or obstruct, or attempt to injure or obstruct, any part of the Panama Canal or the locks thereof or the approaches thereto. Any person violating this provision shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction in the District Court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 20 years, or both, in the discretion of the court. If the act shall cause the death of any person within a year and a day thereafter, the person so convicted shall be guilty of murder and shall be punished accordingly."

The bill is recommended by the War Department, as will be seen by the following letters:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 27, 1916.

Hon. JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
Chairman Committee on Interoceanic Canals,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am inclosing for your consideration a copy of a letter received from the governor of the Panama Canal, submitting a draft of a proposed act "To amend section 10 of the Panama Canal act, approved August 24, 1912," which has particular reference to the exclusion of undesirable aliens from the Canal Zone.

The governor has appointed a committee to consider this question, and the matter has also been investigated by the special attorney for the Canal Zone, who concurs in the recommendations.

The effect of the proposed amendment will be to put into immediate operation the provisions of section 10 of the Panama Canal act as amended and provide authority for the governor to exclude undesirable aliens of all nationalities. It might be suggested that the desired results could be obtained under the provisions of section 10 of the Panama Canal act without modification, but it appears to be the opinion of the authorities on the Isthmus that as section 10 now stands it is not operative, because the canal has not been formally declared open.

I concur in the recommendations of Gen. Goethals and recommend your favorable consideration.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

THE PANAMA CANAL, CANAL ZONE, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Balboa Heights, April 13, 1916.

CHIEF OF OFFICE, THE PANAMA CANAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: There is inclosed herewith draft of a proposed act "To amend section 10 of the Panama Canal act, approved August 24, 1912," having particular reference to the exclusion of undesirable aliens from the Canal Zone. There are also inclosed a report of the committee appointed to consider this question, and a copy of a letter from the special attorney, setting forth the existing conditions and the necessity for the proposed legislation.

Will you please submit the proposed act to Congress, through the Secretary of War, respectfully soliciting his favorable recommendation for its enactment into law?

Respectfully,

GEO. W. GOETHALS,
Governor.

ANCON, CANAL ZONE, April 11, 1916.

Gen. GEO W. GOETHALS,
Governor of the Panama Canal, Balboa Heights, Canal Zone.

SIR: In addition to the explanation contained in the committee's report respecting the proposed amendment to section 10 of the Panama Canal act, I wish to add a few observations to show the necessity of the proposed legislation.

Chinese have been excluded from the Canal Zone heretofore under the provisions of law No. 6 of 1904 of the Republic of Panama, as construed by the decree of the President of Panama, issued on April 15, 1904. This Panamanian legislation was extended to the Canal Zone by the President's order of January 9, 1908.

The above-mentioned law and presidential decree of Panama required considerable administrative machinery, which could not be carried into execution in the Canal Zone, because municipalities had been abolished; and in consequence there were no alcaldes or similar officials in the Canal Zone to carry out the administrative provisions of the Panamanian law.

The Executive order above mentioned made it a penal offense for any ship's master to permit transient persons of the excluded classes to escape from the ship. The courts of the Canal Zone have included Chinese seamen within the meaning of the term "transient persons." I have not been in accord with this ruling, because the Panamanian law clearly indicates that a ship's crew does not come within the term "transient persons."

However, since law No. 6 of 1904 was enacted, the President of Panama has issued a number of decrees materially modifying the provisions of said law No. 6 and enacted new legislation in respect to the exclusion of Chinese and other Asiatics. This new legislation is quite different in many respects from the previous law. It will thus be seen that the Executive order of January 9, 1908, no longer serves the purpose for which it was enacted; that is to say, the enforcing of the provisions of law No. 6 of 1904.

Now that the canal is to be opened to ships of all nations it is my opinion that new rules and regulations should be established respecting the exclusion and deportation of undesirables. The new rules should accord to the shipping interests as liberal treatment as is consistent with the preservation of the best interests of the canal, and this should be so with special reference to ships' crews. While it is proper to prevent persons from using the Canal Zone as a means of violating the exclusion laws of Panama, the assistance rendered to Panama in this matter should not be carried to the extent of unreasonably hampering the ships that traffic with the canal.

The proposed bill, if enacted, will give the President ample authority to deal with the situation at all times, and consequently I hope that the bill will meet with the approval of Congress.

Respectfully,

FRANK FEUILLE, Special Attorney.

ANCON, CANAL ZONE, April 11, 1916.

Gen. GEO. W. GOETHALS,
Governor of the Panama Canal, Balboa Heights, Canal Zone.

SIR: The acting governor on March 23 last appointed the special attorney, marine superintendent, executive secretary, and the chief quarantine officer a committee to consider a proposed bill for submission to Congress relative to the exclusion of Chinese from the Canal Zone and the repeal of the Executive order of January 9, 1908, on that subject, and to render a report thereon. A copy of the proposed bill accompanies this report.

The committee has given the proposed bill full consideration, and they have reached the conclusion that the end sought by that bill could be best obtained by the enactment of an amendment to section 10 of the Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912, which gives to the Governor of the Panama Canal the right to make rules and regulations, subject to the approval of the President, to prohibit any person from remaining on or passing over any part of the Canal Zone. That section of the Panama Canal act is inoperative at present, because it will not become effective until the canal is officially opened. In addition, it does not seem broad enough to authorize the President to require a ship bringing an undesirable to the Canal Zone to return such undesirable to the place whence he came. Therefore the committee is submitting a draft of a proposed act amending the above-mentioned section 10, in lieu of the bill previously proposed and referred by the acting governor to this committee.

It will be noted that the amendment to section 10 now submitted by the committee is comprehensive enough to permit the governor to establish rules of exclusion and deportation against all persons, regardless of nationality, and in consequence Chinese and other Asiatics may be excluded under such rules. That part of the amendment which will authorize the governor to require ships bringing excluded persons to the Canal Zone to return such persons to the countries from whence they came will make the regulations more effective, especially that provision which permits the authorities of the Canal Zone to withhold clearances from any vessel when the fine imposed and the costs of maintenance of the excluded persons are not paid.

The amendment relates only to the first sentence of section 10 of the Panama Canal act, leaving in full force and effect the subsequent provision under which punishments may be imposed for a violation of any of the rules and regulations.

Dr. Guthrie, the chief quarantine officer, one of the members of this committee, is absent on vacation, but the bill here submitted meets with his approval.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK FEUILLE,
C. A. MCILVAINE,
H. I. CONE,
Committee.

DRAFT.

An act to amend section 10 of the Panama Canal act approved August 24, 1912.

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of section 10 of the Panama Canal act approved August 24, 1912, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. The Governor of the Panama Canal is hereby authorized to make rules and regulations, subject to the approval of the President, and in like manner to alter or amend the same from time to time, touching the right of any person to enter or remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone; for the detention of any person entering the Canal Zone in violation of such rules and regulations, and return of such person to the country whence he or she came, on the vessel bringing such person to the Canal Zone, or any other vessel belonging to the same owner or interest, and at the expense of such owner or interest; and in addition to the punishment prescribed by this section for violation of any such rules and regulations, the authorities of the Canal Zone may withhold the clearance of such vessel from any port in the Canal Zone until any fine imposed and the costs of maintenance of such person are paid."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect from and after its passage, but it shall not be construed to alter or amend any portion of said section 10 of the Panama Canal act save and except the first sentence thereof.

SETTLERS ON UNSURVEYED RAILROAD LANDS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1792) for the relief of settlers on unsurveyed railroad lands, a bill which relates entirely to lands located in the State of Washington, and is for the relief of homestead settlers on lands which have been in dispute as to conflicting rights of railroad companies. The matter has been under discussion in the Committee on Public Lands for a long time, and the passage of the bill is recommended by the Land Office and by the Secretary of the Interior. Memorials in behalf of it have been passed by the Legislature of the State of Washington, and I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill at the present time, but I shall object to the consideration of any other bill unless we take up the calendar in order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, bills of serious importance or bills which have received early consideration by committees and have been placed upon the calendar are made to suffer, while later bills which are brought in are considered by unanimous consent in this way. I have no objection to the consideration of any worthy bill—and I am assuming that this is such a measure—but there is on the calendar a bill known by everybody in the Senate as Senate bill 392, providing for the retirement of volunteer officers of the Civil War. That bill is thoroughly understood; it will require no great discussion, unless Senators wish to talk it to death. I am going to object to the consideration of all measures by unanimous consent unless we can fix some time when we can have a vote upon the bill to which I refer. I do not wish to delay matters of importance, which ought to be considered at this time, but I repeat that this bill is such a bill as should require no discussion, unless there be an effort to defeat it by preventing a vote. I think we could dispose of it in a very few minutes if we could get to a vote. If the majority of the Senate does not want to pass the bill at this time, I should very much like to have that majority say so, and I should like to have an opportunity for the Senate to do that very thing.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I sympathize entirely with the interest that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has in the volunteer officers' retirement bill. I have voted with him a large number of times to take it up and hope to have an opportunity to cooperate with him at any time to secure favorable action on the measure. I am sincerely in hopes that the Senator will not object to the consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we can not hear the Senator from Washington on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will endeavor to make myself heard. I was simply appealing to the Senator from Michigan to allow me to dispose of this local matter, for which I have asked consideration. It will only take probably five minutes. I was stating to the Senator that I was in favor of the bill of which he has spoken.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I realize that situation, but I had not finished my sentence.

I wish to say further that I do not care to interpose an objection to this bill of the Senator from Washington or to any other bill that happened to be pending at the time I rose; but I wish to give notice now that I feel it will be absolutely necessary, if I am to secure consideration of the bill to which I have referred, that I shall insist upon the method of procedure which I have indicated. While I shall not object to the Senator's bill being now considered, I shall feel it my duty to object to other bills which are brought up, unless I am convinced they are matters of such immediate necessity that it would not be proper for me to interpose an objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] for the consideration of the bill which he has named?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1792) for the relief of settlers on unsurveyed railroad lands, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to support the position of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], not with reference to the bill to which he refers but with reference to other bills. There are a number of bills on the calendar which are entitled to a hearing. The first bill on the calendar is entitled to a hearing; a little further down on the calendar is the vocational educational bill, that ought to have a hearing; and a little further down is a bill with reference to convict-made goods, which should be considered. There are a number of bills upon the calendar in which I am especially interested.

I think we are entitled to a morning hour every day to take up the calendar under the rule; and if we really wish to dispose of these bills I should be glad to see a 10-minutes' debate limit put on every one of them, although I could not finish what I should like to say in opposition to the bill mentioned by the Senator from Michigan in 10 minutes.

I think we ought to adjourn this evening until to-morrow morning; that we ought to give two hours of every morning to the consideration of bills on the calendar; and that we ought to take up those bills as they come in their order on the calendar. I am not going to object now to the consideration of the bill of the Senator from Washington, but I desired to make this statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments proposed by the Committee on Public Lands to the pending bill will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, on page 1, line 6, after the name "Northern Pacific Railway Co.," to insert "within the State of Washington," so as to read:

That where, prior to July 1, 1913, the whole or any part of an odd-numbered section within the primary limits of the land grant to the Northern Pacific Railway Co., within the State of Washington, to which the right of the grantee or its lawful successor is claimed to have attached by definite location, has been settled upon in good faith while unsurveyed, by any qualified settler, the same shall be subject to all the provisions of the act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. L., pp. 620–622), relating to lands in said primary limits so settled upon prior to January 1, 1898, and said act is hereby amended accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided That upon the relinquishment by said railway company of any of the lands so settled upon the selection of any lieu lands by said company shall be confined to the State of Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF NORTH DAKOTA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further reports of committees?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, during the proceedings of the last legislative day the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was kind enough to report a bill, purely of a local nature, affecting my State. I could not under the parliamentary condition ask for its immediate consideration at that time. I now send the bill to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I know that it will provoke no discussion, and that it will only take a minute or two to pass it. It is House bill 11878.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I shall have to object under the statement I made a while ago. I am sorry the Senator embarrasses me by that request, because I would not want to object to the consideration of a bill in which he is interested; but I made the statement, and I must object.

Mr. GRONNA. I trust the Senator will permit me to make a statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection has been made.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator insist upon his objection?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection to the Senator making a statement, but I feel obliged to object to the consideration of the bill. I made a statement before the Senator rose, not anticipating that he was going to take the action that he has taken, and I can not, without stultifying myself, abandon the position I have assumed.

Mr. GRONNA. I heard the Senator's statement, and the Senator said, as I understood him, that if the bill was of such a nature that it would provoke no discussion and it was necessary to pass it he would not object.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the Senator must have misunderstood me. I did not refer to discussion. I recall the fact that we are now in the midst of preparedness, as we call it, and there are certain supply bills and certain measures of that kind that I regard of prime importance; but I do not consider that any one of these matters is of superior importance to the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I wish to state that this is a bill to subdivide the judicial district of the State of North Dakota. It is important that we should permit the people of that State to have court held at a certain place where it is not now held. The bill will simply facilitate the business of the people of that State. I do not see how there can be any possible objection to it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if objection has been made, as I understand it has been, there is no need of consuming time in discussing it. Mr. President, I desire——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, when the order under the head of resolutions, and so forth, was reached, I had been just called out of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order has not been reached yet. We are on reports of committees.

Mr. STONE. I was told that it had been reached.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the order now is reports of committees.

Mr. STONE. I beg pardon.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 493, House bill 14303, being the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to introduce a bill concerning which there is some urgency?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The Chair will consult the rules.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I think we ought to go on with morning business.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the motion is in order under Rule VII, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. What is the motion?

Mr. BRYAN. To proceed with the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the motion of the Senator from Florida is in order.

Mr. STONE. I think it is in order.

Mr. WALSH. I ask if the Senator from Florida will not allow me opportunity to introduce a bill concerning which there is some considerable urgency?

Mr. BRYAN. I should like to accommodate the Senator, but the appropriation bills must be gotten out of the way.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator ought to have made his motion as against other bills; he ought to have objected to the time being taken up with debate on and passage of bills by unanimous consent, rather than to interpose his motion now, when we might dispose of routine business for which we have waited here for several days.

Mr. BRYAN. I made the motion at the first opportunity under the rules.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator could have saved time by interposing an objection to the consideration of a number of private bills which have been considered.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senate wants to take up time I can not help it. The Committee on Appropriations is very anxious that the fortifications appropriation bill be considered. I happen to be in charge of that bill, and I must insist on the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. STONE. Is that a debatable motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not debatable.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to have the motion stated. What is the motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have a right to know what the motion is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is to proceed to the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply want to suggest to the Senator from Florida that some of us have bills that we want to introduce, and he will make no time by insisting on the motion he has made.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are still in order. [A pause.] The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 6492) to preserve the rights of homestead entrymen who are members of the National Guard or volunteer forces of the United States while in actual service.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I feel justified in saying that I hope speedy consideration will be accorded to this bill. It simply provides that members of the National Guard who go into actual service shall not be subject to forfeiture of their homestead claims while they are in actual service. I trust the bill shall have speedy consideration, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A bill (S. 6493) to provide for the installing of industries in the United States Penitentiary, Atlanta, Ga., for the manufacture of supplies for the use of the Government, for the compensation of prisoners for their labor, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 6494) to provide for the installing of industries in the United States Penitentiary, Leavenworth, Kans., for the manufacture of supplies for the use of the Government, for the compensation of prisoners for their labor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 6495) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to James B. Sample Post, No. 170, Grand Army of the Republic, Fort Madison, Iowa, two brass or bronze cannon or field pieces, with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls; and

A bill (S. 6496) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to Alexander Hamilton Chapter, No. 7, Sons of the American Revolution, Sheldon, Iowa, two brass or bronze cannon or field pieces, with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 6497) for the relief of Oleanne Marie Zahl Branum; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. DU PONT:

A bill (S. 6498) for the relief of First Lieut. Albert K. C. Palmer, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 6499) granting an increase of pension to James Davis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 6500) granting an increase of pension to Ephriam J. Allen (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6501) granting a pension to Richard C. Spaulding (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

Mr. DU PONT submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I introduce a joint resolution and ask to have it printed in the RECORD without reading, and that it lie upon the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 148) to amend section 27 and section 58 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, so as to require the consent of parents or guardians to the enlistment of persons under 21 years of age in the Regular Army and in the National Guard, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 27 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be amended so as to read:

"SEC. 27. Enlistments in the Regular Army: On and after the 1st day of November, 1916, all enlistments in the Regular Army shall be for a term of seven years, the first three years to be in the active service with the organizations of which those enlisted form a part and, except as otherwise provided herein, the last four years in the Regular Army Reserve hereinafter provided for: Provided, That at the expiration of three years' continuous service with such organizations, either under a first or any subsequent enlistment, any soldier may be reenlisted for another period of seven years, as above provided for, in which event he shall receive his final discharge from his prior enlistment: Provided further, That after the expiration of one year's honorable service any enlisted man serving within the continental limits of the United States whose company, troop, battery, or detachment commander shall report him as proficient and sufficiently trained may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be furloughed to the Regular Army Reserve under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, but no man furloughed to the reserve shall be eligible to reenlist in the service until the expiration of his term of seven years: Provided further, That in all enlistments hereafter accomplished under the provisions of this act three years shall be counted as an enlistment period in computing continuous-service pay: Provided further, That any noncommissioned officer discharged with an excellent character shall be permitted, at the expiration of three years in the active service, to reenlist in the organization from which discharged with the rank and grade held by him at the time of his discharge if he reenlists within 20 days after the date of such discharge: Provided further, That no person under the age of 21 years shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States without the written consent of his parents or guardians, provided that such minor has such parents or guardians entitled to his custody and control, and this proviso shall be applicable to all minors enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States on and after June 3, 1916: And provided further, That the President is authorized in his discretion to utilize the services of postmasters of the second, third, and fourth classes in procuring the enlistment of recruits for the Army, and for each recruit accepted for enlistment in the Army the postmaster procuring his enlistment shall receive the sum of $5.

Civilian teachers may be employed to aid the Army officers in giving such instruction, and part of this instruction may consist of vocational education either in agriculture or the mechanic arts. The Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, shall prescribe rules and regulations for conducting the instruction herein provided for, and the Secretary of War shall have the power at all times to suspend, increase, or decrease the amount of such instruction offered as may in his judgment be consistent with the requirements of military instruction and service of the soldiers."

SEC. 2. That section 58 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 58. Composition of the National Guard: The National Guard shall consist of the regularly enlisted militia between the ages of 18 and 45 years, organized, armed, and equipped as hereinafter provided, and of commissioned officers between the ages of 21 and 64 years: Provided, No person under the age of 21 years shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States without the written consent of his parents or guardians: Provided, That such minor has such parents or guardians entitled to his custody and control, and this provision shall be applicable to all minors mustered into the military service of the United States on and after June 3, 1916."

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to give notice that on to-morrow or some subsequent day I shall propose an amendment to Rule XL by adding to the rule the following words:

A two-thirds vote shall be required to suspend, modify, or amend any rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Pursuant to the notice which I gave on the 22d relative to a proposed amendment to the rules, I submit the following resolution. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution (S. Res. 221) was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule X, Special Orders, be amended after the second paragraph of clause 2 of Rule X by inserting the following:

"3. No Senator shall be permitted to give notice in advance that at a time named in the future he will address the Senate, and it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to enforce the provisions of this clause upon his own motion."

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is on the table a bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], which has been read the first time by its title. Without objection, the bill will receive a second reading and will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 6452) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES IN THE MILITARY SERVICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is also a joint resolution introduced a few days ago by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], which has been read the first time by its title. Without objection, the bill will be read the second time and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 146) relative to compensation to be given employees of the Government who enlist in the military service of the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ARTICLES BY JOHN S. PATTERSON AND PIERRE JAY (S. DOC. NO. 478).

Mr. SHEPPARD. On June 3 last I obtained permission of the Senate to have printed as a public document an article entitled "Six Years of the Guaranty Fund." At the same time the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] presented an article entitled "The Country Banker and the Federal Reserve System," and obtained permission to have his article published with the document I presented, being under the impression that they dealt with the same subject. It has since developed that the two pamphlets deal with entirely different matters. Therefore I ask that the order of the Senate of June 3 last be rescinded and that they be printed as separate documents.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if they have already been printed?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They have not been printed. The Senate directed the printing of them as one document. I discovered that they dealt with different subjects, and therefore I now ask that they be printed as separate documents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BUSINESS STATISTICS (S. DOC. NO. 477).

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have here certain statistical data prepared by the Department of Commerce, summarizing the business activity in the United States and in leading foreign countries, giving the imports and exports of merchandise of the United States during the fiscal years June 30, 1871, to June 30, 1915—the imports and exports of gold, receipts of railways, bank clearings, business failures, postal, telegraph, and telephone receipts, production of pig iron, and other indices for the United States. I think this would make a very valuable public document, and I ask that these statistics may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS ON THE LATE SENATOR BRADLEY.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been requested by a number of Senators to ask unanimous consent that an eulogy of the late Senator WILLIAM O. BRADLEY, by his lifelong friend, Mr. C. Lee Cook, be printed in the RECORD. It consists of only a very few pages, and if there is no objection I should like to have it printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

EULOGY OF SENATOR WILLIAM O'CONNELL BRADLEY, BY HIS FRIEND, MR. C. LEE COOK.

"The death of Senator BRADLEY has removed from our midst a distinguished and picturesque man. He was among the last of that heroic type made by the destiny of the Civil War. Although but a boy when the conflict began, the fire of patriotism so burned in his young heart that he ran away from home to enlist, and served on the side of the Union through the war. In the trying days following the end of that strife he was always an ardent adherent of the justice of his country's cause; yet in the full maturity of his brilliant forensic ability, when the Union had no need of vindication, when the bristling armor of her military forces lay rusting beneath the work of peace, he, with a love and loyalty not surpassed, raised his eloquence to heal the wounds of a prostrate South, to revive her broken spirit, and to help build back her system and her enterprise and reclaim the waste of her fields and the ruin of her cities. And, sir, what is more, he did a great work toward readjustment of public sentiment at the North toward, indeed, the true glory of a reunited country.

"Sir, he was well fitted for his course in life; God gave him great gifts: A superior and commanding intellect, a high resolve, an inflexible will, and an eloquence that has not often been surpassed in the forum of our country. This is the more extraordinary since he never received a collegiate training. All the formal instruction he ever had was in the country schools of Kentucky. Neither had he the privilege of the classroom in the study of law. Yet with this handicap he became the equal of most every lawyer of his State, and he had many an occasion to prove that eminence. His fidelity to a client, his recognition of the importance of thoroughly preparing a case, his knowledge of the law, his aptitude in applying the law to intricate circumstances, his adroitness in examining witnesses, his extraordinary powers of analysis in law and fact, his constructive attainments, and his brilliant appeal made him preeminent at the bar. He won a large fortune by his profession, but gave it away in the service of others.

"He was a man of very engaging personality. His spirit seemed to be a flame that lighted all around him, that gave him remarkable capacity for leadership among men. With this unusual qualification, he raised the Republican Party from a secondary place to a majority of the suffrage in Democratic Kentucky, and was thus elected governor in 1895.

"Though he was not in the strictest sense a scholar, for neither chance nor his rugged nature fitted him for that quiet eminence of the inner school, he had yet a fine regard for the refinements of scholarship. He was a man fully conscious of his great talents, yet he never insulted Providence by disdaining the mental limitations of any man. If though first one cast contempt upon him, his tongue became a Damascus blade that seldom met a conqueror. No one ever entertained a nobler view of the office of friendship than did Senator BRADLEY. When once he found in an acquaintance the acceptable virtues of manhood, neither race, religion, nor politics could assail in the feeblest voice a just estimation nor prevent the raising of the true spirit of fellowship toward such a one. His heart was as tender as that of a mother to her infant. His sympathies were as broad as life's field of hope, of joy, of misery, and of strife; worthily he did what he could to secure its happiness, brighten its shadows, assuage its pangs, and ameliorate its conditions.

"While Senator BRADLEY was not a close adherent to religious formalism, in his heart was a profound reverence for the infinite and divine. He was an intense and pious student of the Bible, and on one occasion when I called upon him unannounced I found him, with tears in his eyes, deep in the pages of that sacred book.

"Knowing as I did this great departed man, being honored by him with a most intimate relationship, and enjoying the inner privileges of confidence, though on most every political question our opinions differed, I can say that richly he deserved the tribute, 'His life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him that Nature might stand up to all the world and say, "This was a man."'

"Sir, 'twill be some time before we shall see his like again."

THE MILITIAMAN AND HIS FAMILY.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, an editorial from yesterday's Philadelphia Inquirer. I merely wish to say that the editorial was written in an apparently sane, apparently rational, and apparently lucid interval, however fleeting and transient, and, in view of that encouraging symptom no one would be disposed, and I certainly should not be ill-natured enough, to say, to paraphrase the Inquirer's own classical language, that newspapers of the Inquirer kidney are a disgrace to the State in which they are published and to the distinguished profession of which they are festering members.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if the editorial has any reference whatever to legislation that is being now considered by Congress?

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that it relates to an incident which occurred in the State with reference to a national guardsman being excused from service on account of the necessity of supporting his family.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let it be read.

Mr. GORE. I have no objection to its being read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire which editorial it is the Senator has sent to the desk?

Mr. GORE. I think it is marked; it is in regard to the National Guard.

Mr. STONE. How long is the article?

Mr. GORE. It is very brief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it the article about Mr. Ford or the one headed "The militiaman and his family"?

Mr. GORE. "The militiaman and his family."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. OLIVER. I ask——

Mr. STONE. I want to ask the length of it.

Mr. OLIVER. I insist that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can not be done. If there is any objection to the reading of the editorial, the Chair——

Mr. STONE. The request was to have it printed without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The Chair is answering the Senator from Pennsylvania, who suggested that it be sent to the Committee on Printing. The Chair said that the rule is, when there is a request for the reading of anything in the Senate, that it does not go to the Committee on Printing if there is an objection, but the Chair is bound to put the question whether it shall or shall not be read. The inquiry of the Senator from Missouri, as the Chair understands, is as to the length of it.

Mr. STONE. I did ask as to the length of it, Mr. President, and the Senator who offered it asked that it might be printed without reading. In the pressure of time I can not see the need of reading a long editorial, or a communication, or whatever it is, printed in a newspaper, when the Senator himself does not ask to have it done, but merely asks that it may be printed in the RECORD. There are Senators here who have some business they wish to transact in the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to its going into the RECORD without reading?

Mr. GORE. It merely relates to the excusing of a National Guardsman from service on account of being required to support his mother.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to it. The editorial will be placed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE MILITIAMAN AND HIS FAMILY.

A story of the human interest sort comes from Mount Gretna. A member of the National Guard was torn by a conflict of emotions. He had gone to camp and he wanted, above all things, to accompany his companions to the Mexican border. But he was the sole support of an old mother. What should he do? Wherein lay his duty? Was it to go down to the international line and protect that line from invasion, or was it to protect his mother from starvation or from becoming a burden upon the community?

Mind you, there was nothing for the aged mother to fall back upon. Governments are not generous. She had her son—and nothing more. To abandon her was to hand her over to charity. And yet this man was a member of the National Guard and he had been summoned to the colors.

Reader, what would you have done in the circumstances?

This militiaman was in a quandary. He placed his case before his captain. And that captain did not hesitate. "The country can get soldiers," that officer is reported as saying, "but your mother has only one son. You stick to her."

And who shall say that that captain was not right? He was right. He was absolutely right. All praise be to him! And all praise to the militiaman who had the courage to do as he did! For it required courage.

If this country were menaced by a great power it would be required of every man that he should do his best and sacrifice his dependent wife, his dependent child, his dependent mother for the good of all. But there is no such menace. War with Mexico may be a long war, but there are men enough to fight it out—men who are not the solitary supports of families—and to such men the task should be given.

PROPOSED PROHIBITION LEGISLATION.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

As I understood the ruling of the Chair yesterday with reference to the notice I gave to suspend the rules in order to permit me to offer an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill, it was that if a sufficient notice had been given to comply with the rule my motion at that time would have been in order in the consideration of the Post Office bill. I think the Chair was correct in that ruling; but some Senators have suggested that the proposition should be taken up and considered in the morning hour. Now, I do not want to take the time of the morning hour to do it if it is in order for me to offer it when the Post Office appropriation bill is up. I think it is in order then; but I want to submit to the Chair the parliamentary inquiry whether this motion should be called up in the morning hour or whether it would be in order during the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill. If it should be brought up in the morning hour, of course I want to do it. I do not want to lose any rights.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that it is in order at either time now.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Is it not the pending question when we reach the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no doubt of it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Chair has already ruled that the notice was sufficient and that the motion was in order, and we were debating it——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no doubt about it.

Mr. CLARKE or Arkansas. Then it is not necessary to bring it up in the morning hour.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about it now, because we have had an adjournment.

Mr. GORE. The question has settled itself.

TRADE AGREEMENTS ABROAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further resolutions to be offered?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, under that head I desire to call up Senate resolution 220, which I presented yesterday morning and which was read, and at my request is lying on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 220, introduced by Mr. STONE on the calendar day of June 28, 1916, as follows:

Whereas it has been widely stated in the public press that a conference was recently held in Paris, France, by authorized representatives of several of the Governments of leading industrial and commercial nations of Europe, now engaged in the European war as allies of France, with the object and purpose of arriving at an agreement between them with respect to their future joint and several industrial and commercial interests; and

Whereas it is also similarly stated that a commercial treaty was entered into at said conference between France, Great Britain, and other allied countries, which treaty it is alleged is now being drafted and is to become operative after the end of said war, with the declared object and purpose of establishing a boycott against the enemies of the high contracting parties to said treaty, both during the war and after the war, and also to promote commercial independence from the central powers; and

Whereas in a statement relating to said treaty, issued by the British Board of Trade, published in the American press, it is stated, among other things, that "The allies declare their common determination to insure the reestablishment of countries suffering from acts of destruction, spoliation, and unjust requisition, and decide to join in devising means to secure the restoration of those countries by giving to them a prior claim on raw materials, industrial and agricultural plants and stock and mercantile fleets, or by assisting them in reequipping themselves in these respects"; * * * that "The allies are to conserve all their natural resources during the period of reconstruction after the war for common use"; that "In order to defend their commerce against economic aggression resulting from dumping or any other mode of unfair competition, the allies decide to fix by agreement a period during which the commerce of the enemy powers will be submitted to special treatment and the goods originating in their countries will be subjected to prohibition or to a special régime of an effective character"; * * * that "The allies' mutual trade is to be fostered in every possible way"; and that "The above steps are to be put into operation immediately": Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, requested to ascertain and send to the Senate at the earliest practicable moment exact information, so far as that may be possible, as to the precise character, form, and full purpose of this agreement or treaty, especially with the view of disclosing to the Senate whether and to what extent neutral nations, especially the United States, may be affected thereby.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, just a word.

The Congress has now under consideration measures for raising revenue for the support of the Government. That matter is before the House. It will soon come to the Senate. It seems to me that this conference, held in Paris recently, and the reputed treaty entered into at that conference, the general nature of which is set forth in the resolution, raise questions that are of interest to the United States. At least it may be said that the situation presents considerations that are possibly of interest—of great interest—to the United States; and it seems to me that when the Committee on Finance comes to consider revenue legislation, that committee ought to be informed, as far as that is possible, of the exact character of that conference and of the treaty said to have been entered into. The Senate and the House of Representatives especially ought likewise to know, as far as it is possible to know, what the terms of that agreement or treaty are. The resolution merely requests the President of the United States to obtain these facts, so far as he can, and report them to the Senate.

That is all I care to say. I ask that the resolution may be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the Post Office appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10484) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended in order to enable the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to introduce his amendment?

Mr. HARDWICK obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to suggest that I had the floor upon that motion when the point of order was raised.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator does not hold it over an adjournment, though.

Mr. JONES. Well, probably not.

Mr. HARDWICK. As I understand, there is no question of order left.

Mr. JONES. That is correct; but I was discussing my motion when the point of order was made.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the Senator does not hold it over an adjournment.

Mr. JONES. I suppose not, but I merely wanted to suggest——

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Senator prefer to proceed at this time?

Mr. JONES. I should like to do so. I will be through in five minutes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I understand the motion to suspend the rule in order to offer the amendment which I have proposed is the question now before the Senate. I had nearly completed my remarks when the point of order was interposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], and I shall take but a very few moments now.

I want to refer to one or two suggestions made by the senior Senator from Missouri. He states that he is in favor of the matter of prohibition being taken care of by the States or the localities; that he thinks these questions should be left to the States. So far as that goes, I am in hearty sympathy with him, and I was feeling very much elated that he had come upon our side of this proposition, and felt that he was heartily in favor of the motion; but before he got through he took a position against this motion, which it seems to me is really inconsistent with that position.

My recollection is that the Senator supported the Webb-Kenyon law, and that he made a speech in favor of it. With that I was in hearty accord. It seems to me that the motion now before the Senate has in it exactly the same proposition as the Webb-Kenyon law, and is in line with the suggestion of the Senator that the States ought to be able to control in these matters.

Several of the States have passed laws prohibiting these advertisements. The United States mails are being used to nullify, in effect, those laws; and the only purpose of this amendment is to prevent that being done. It would not prevent the Senator from getting his St. Louis papers, so far as that is concerned, and I would not desire to do it. A good many of those papers do not desire to print these advertisements at all; but it would not be a very difficult matter for them to take care of that situation. What we do desire is that when the State of Washington and other States in the Union do not desire these advertisements to come into their families, to come before their people, and where the people themselves have declared by positive law that they do not want this done, we do not want the United States mails used for the purpose of nullifying those laws.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am quite in sympathy with the Senator's proposition, but I want to ask him if he can tell us what States have passed laws similar to that passed in Washington?

Mr. JONES. The State of Washington has passed such a law, the State of Alabama, and three or four more that I am not just sure of. I think Georgia has, and I am not sure but that North Carolina has.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Some five or six States would be affected?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And, as I understand, it has already to some extent become the practice on the part of newspapers which print these advertisements to blot them out before sending the papers to some of these States.

Mr. JONES. I am informed by some of the Senators from these States that that is true.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is already done?

Mr. JONES. Yes; they tell me that that is already done; that some of the papers are respecting the laws of those States, and I suppose they get out what might be called a special edition with those advertisements eliminated from the papers that go to those States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So that in the case of some great metropolitan paper, all that it would be necessary to do would be to blot out such advertisements as are printed in the edition which goes to those particular States?

Mr. JONES. Yes. It would not be a difficult matter. Some have suggested that it might work a hardship on the newspapers. It would not; and it would not be a difficult matter to take care of that, so far as they are concerned.

But what I wanted to call attention to more than anything else was the situation with reference to the great newspapers of the country. They are not really desirous of these advertisements. They are not opposing this legislation. Many of them are voluntarily dropping out these advertisements, leaving them out, even in territory where it is not unlawful to circulate them, so far as that is concerned.

I have here a statement to which I desire to call attention with reference to that matter. This is prepared by the same organization from which I got the information with reference to magazines which I submitted yesterday. They state:

The present attitude of the daily newspapers of the United States toward liquor advertising and prohibition as revealed by an inquiry of the temperance society of the Methodist Episcopal Church is inspiring. The investigation conducted by the temperance society was made on January 1, 1915, and reached every daily newspaper in the United States. Six hundred and seventy-nine replies were received to 2,160 letters. Five hundred and twenty of the daily newspapers replying reported that they accept no liquor advertising.

Five hundred and twenty out of 679 replying state that they accept no liquor advertisements.

Three hundred and sixty of them announced that they advocate national prohibition in their editorial columns, while of the remainder only 200 are willing—

That I do not care about. All I want to get at is with reference to the advertising.

Ten years ago no one could name a half dozen daily newspapers in the United States which favored national prohibition. * * * To-day such great dailies as the Republican, of Springfield, Mass.; the Philadelphia North American; the Chicago Herald; the Tennesseean and Banner, of Nashville; the Times, of Detroit; the Times, of Indianapolis; the Journal, of Lincoln; the Gazette-Times, of Pittsburgh; the Intelligencer, of Wheeling; and scores of other papers that are representative of power and influence absolutely decline liquor advertising on any terms.

The letters to the society contain some most interesting statements. One New York paper says:

We are constantly being offered liquor propaganda matter to be run as straight editorial or news stuff, but we always decline it.

The Grand Rapids Press declares:

There is an erroneous impression on the part of temperance people regarding the amount of money the newspapers receive for liquor advertisements. The total amount of money received by this paper for the year 1914 from all liquor advertisements was six-tenths of 1 per cent of the whole amount received for advertising.

The Press further says:

If the immediate monetary gain were the only consideration in accepting beer advertising, we would wipe out the whole business without a qualm. Taken altogether, it does not represent the value to us of the advertising for one year of one good retail dry goods house. But if the Press were a prohibition organ, its standing and influence would be curtailed. In following the course that it believes to be fair and sane on the liquor problem its influence for good on all other questions is better than it would be otherwise.

Several of the other notices are with reference to the proposition as to prohibition, which I will not take the time to read, because I do not consider that that is the issue at this time. I just call attention to the fact that out of 679 replies from these daily papers, 520 of them do not now accept liquor advertisements. So that the newspapers of the country are not really interested one way or the other in this matter.

I want to call attention also to the fact that on January 1, 1916, all advertisements of liquor will be eliminated from the billboards of the United States and Canada. That is, all over the country, no matter whether it is contrary to law in a State or not, the company that posts the billboards all over this country and Canada is not going to put up these advertisements.

On January 1, 1916, all advertisements of liquor will be eliminated from the billboards of the United States and Canada. The board of directors of the Poster Advertising Association, which controls the boards in 4,000 towns, has so decided. No liquor contracts will be accepted after May 1, 1915, and all contracts now in existence must terminate by December 31, 1915.

Now, Mr. President, that is about all I am going to say at this time with reference to this amendment. I wish to summarize briefly what it is.

Mr. President, the amendment that I intend to offer, if the rules be suspended and I am permitted to do so, is simply and solely to protect the States in the enforcement of the laws which they have passed for the welfare of their own citizens. It does not attempt to regulate this matter in the States where they have not acted upon it at all. It is the principle of the Webb-Kenyon law which Congress passed over the veto of the President. It simply takes out of the situation as it now is the influence of the United States Government in carrying its mails to nullify the local laws passed by the different States in the Union for the protection of their own citizens, and that, in my judgment, is the sole issue raised with reference to this amendment. Whether I were for prohibition or against prohibition, it seems to me that I could very consistently vote for this amendment. The States have the right to pass those laws. They have passed them for the protection of their own citizens, and the United States Government should assist in every way that it legitimately can in carrying out the policy of those States. By allowing these advertisements and circulars and all that sort of thing to be sent through the mails of the United States we are overcoming the declared policy of those localities.

Some one raised the question as to whether a person ought not to have a right to write a letter to some dealer in intoxicating liquors and ask the purchase price. There is nothing in this amendment which prevents that from being done. The amendment simply prevents the use of the mails for doing what the local laws say can not be done there, and that is all there is to it; and there is nothing, I think, in those laws that prevents a man from writing a letter to some organization and asking for the prices. While the word "letter" is not mentioned in the amendment, it must be taken in connection with the other language of the amendment, which is as follows:

> That no letter, postal card, etc., containing any advertisement, etc., or containing a solicitation of an order.

That would not prevent a person from writing a private letter and receiving an answer to that letter stating what they could sell. But those are matters which can be considered when the amendment is up for consideration. The only question now is whether we will consent to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering an amendment of this character to take the United States Government out of the business, I might say, of nullifying the laws of the different States which they have passed for the protection of their own people.

That, Mr. President, is all I care to submit at this time for consideration.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has moved, under the provision of Rule XL, to suspend the rules of the Senate so that the Senate may consider as in order a proposition submitted by himself as an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill. I regret, Mr. President, that the motion comes in this form. For weeks and months we have struggled in an effort to finish the Post Office appropriation bill and to get it enacted as soon as possible. We are facing what appear to be stubborn differences in conference. This question could well be brought up at any time by the action of the Senate committee to which bills of this nature have been referred in a proper way under the existing rules and without suspending the rules. It seems to me there is no more inopportune time than the present, with only a few hours left before the appropriations lapse for many departments of the Government, to burden the annual supply bills with the consideration and determination of such extraneous issue as this.

Of course, Mr. President, entertaining that view and therefore intending to oppose the motion of the Senator from Washington it will be necessary for me to do more than make an argument of that character, because back of the Senator's motion and behind it lie the merits of his proposition. Coming from a constituency which has determined upon the policy of State-wide prohibition, and which has enacted laws to which reference has been made on this floor, it would not be justice to myself if I did not undertake to give with some detail the reasons for my opposition to this proposition, and I must therefore consume more time than I like to consume at this stage of the proceedings.

Personally, Mr. President, during my entire life I have been a consistent local optionist. I have always believed that on sumptuary questions, where it is so difficult to enforce laws setting up standards of personal habits and individual conduct, the wisest and safest policy for any Commonwealth to adopt is the policy of making the unit of enactment the exact equivalent of the unit of enforcement. In other words, I have doubted whether in any Commonwealth of this Republic it were wise to put on the statute books provisions of this character that might be popular in a great majority of the counties of that Commonwealth and yet might be difficult if not impossible of enforcement in some of the counties of that Commonwealth.

In reference to laws of this peculiar character it seems to me that the old-fashioned Democratic plan of letting the people of each locality, in the exercise of local self-government, determine what sort of laws they want to live under and what manner of laws they are prepared to enforce is the wisest and the best plan, and I have yet to change my mind on that question.

The people of Georgia have never voted on it. We have State-wide prohibition by statutory enactment, by action of the general assembly. But I am prepared to concede, because I believe it is the case, that the majority of our people favor State-wide prohibition, and I have no issue with them on that question. I have always thought it was far better for the people of any State to determine for themselves what their policies should be and what their laws should be upon this question, which is essentially and exclusively local in its nature.

I have therefore taken no issue with the law which is now written on our statute books. Since it is written there, I hope it will be enforced to its very letter and to the very limit. No Commonwealth can grow in greatness, in honor, and in real prosperity unless it enforces righteously the laws that its legislatures enact.

If the laws in question are bad laws, enforcement will soon operate to bring about a repeal. If they are good laws, of course, they ought to be enforced because it will be for the good of the people to have them enforced. In any event, respect for the law itself absolutely requires that whatever is written upon the statute books of any Commonwealth of this Republic shall be enforced by its executive and judicial officers.

Mr. President, I am a State-rights Democrat of an old-fashioned if not almost obsolete school. I believe in the absolute and exclusive right of every State in this Union to settle according to its own wishes, according to its own will, every domestic and local question that affects the lives and conduct of its people. For that reason I have always opposed nation-wide prohibition. The question as to what liquor laws or license laws or prohibition laws we shall have in Georgia is a question exclusively for the people of Georgia. My own belief about it is that the people of Georgia have a right to have whatever sort of laws they want on that question and to enforce those laws. In other words, I think the people of Georgia have a right to prohibit within the limits and borders of the Commonwealth of Georgia the sale of liquor even if all the 47 other American States want to permit its sale within their limits.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield for a question.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator object to the Congress of the United States in the proper discharge of its functions helping Georgia to make Georgia's law effective?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will bear with me and listen to my argument as I develop it, he will see what I think about this entire question. I utterly repudiate the proposition laid down by the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Washington. There is no question of enforcing a State policy involved in this proposition when it is clearly understood and carefully analyzed. If so, then I would be persuaded, not unwillingly, either, to support the proposition advocated by the Senator.

But let us see now what sort of an argument is advanced on that question and what it is worth. When the Senator from Mississippi interrupted me I was saying that being a State-rights Democrat I believe that this and every other local question ought to be settled exclusively according to the will and desire of the people of each State. In the manner provided by law the people of my State have decided that they want State-wide prohibition, and I acquiesce in that result. I bow to that verdict, although I had no part in the decision of the question.

But the same legislation that ordained State-wide prohibition in my State, that ordained a prohibition against the circulation of newspapers within its borders containing liquor advertisements, also provided that every citizen in the State should be allowed to purchase, and of course that meant to purchase in any jurisdiction where its sale was lawful, a certain quantity of intoxicating liquor, 2 quarts I think it is, and a certain amount of beers and wines per month. Evidently the Legislature of Georgia was unwilling, without a popular referendum, to completely abolish, or even to attempt to abolish, the use of liquor in the State or to make the use of liquor in Georgia a crime. On the contrary, it expressly provided, whether wisely or not it is no business of mine, that every citizen of Georgia should have a right to purchase a certain quantity of intoxicating liquor per month and a certain amount of beers and wines and other liquors.

Of course, there may be a serious question raised as to whether or not, considering all three of these enactments of the General Assembly of Georgia, the policy of that State is that nobody shall be permitted to advertise from another State where the sale of liquor is lawful, the liquor that the people of Georgia are permitted by our State law to buy. If the policy of the general assembly of the State had been to completely abolish the manufacture and sale of liquor and to prescribe that no man might drink it without its being a crime and that no man could keep any quantity of it on hand, then probably the Senator from Washington might be right when he asserts that legislation of the kind he proposes ought to be enacted in order to carry out the State policy of such States as those which have taken action like Georgia.

But my understanding is that each one of these States, and I hope a Senator from any other State will correct me if I am in error about that, when they have passed these prohibition laws, have usually allowed a limited amount of liquor to be lawfully kept and consumed by its people. These States did not intend that their people should not be allowed to buy it in New York or in Pennsylvania or in Missouri or in any other locality where its sale is lawful. On the contrary, they did intend to provide that their people should be allowed to buy it in any such State, and they did so provide in my State, and I believe in every one of these other States.

Now, I understand the force of the argument, and it has appealed to me, that is made to the effect that the general assembly of these States having provided by statute that their own newspapers, those published within their borders, and possibly in some cases those circulated within their borders, shall not carry liquor advertisements, therefore it could be fairly contended that it was the purpose of these legislatures to go as far as they could to prevent the circulation of liquor advertisements within their limits. But, Senators, there is another side and an entirely different side to this question. This is a Federal question, and a Federal question exclusively. It can be made nothing else.

I want to say to the Senate there are no stouter upholders of Federal power when clearly given or necessarily implied in the grant than the old-fashioned State-rights Democrats. The necessary corollary to our proposition of local self-government on all local questions is that Federal power on all Federal questions is committed to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government. How can you contend that the question of what shall go into the mails of the United States is a question that ought to be determined according to the policy of the 48 different States that compose this Union? If that principle be once established, if it be once conceded, there may be 48 different policies not only on this question but on many other questions connected with the transportation and delivery of the United States mails.

So the question of what shall go into the mails of the United States, or what shall be excluded from them, is not a question of State law or policy, and can not possibly be made one. It is a question of Federal power and Federal policy, and nothing else can be made of it. We can not operate the Post Office Department one way in one-half of the country and another way in the other half. We can not have rules and regulations and laws that apply in one part of the country and do not apply in the other. We can not and ought not to make it a crime to put something in the mail in one State and not make it a crime to put that same thing in the mail in every other State of the Republic. So our policy with reference to the Post Office Department and to the mails of the United States is essentially, necessarily, and exclusively a national policy. It can not be modeled on State policies. Otherwise we should be in inextricable confusion; otherwise we would face innumerable contradictions.

The laws of the United States on a question committed to the Congress must be uniform in their operation throughout the Republic. The regulations of the Post Office Department must be as wide as the boundaries of the Republic. Talk about enforcing a State policy in connection with the United States mails! Ah, Senators, those of you who profess to be anxious to do something on this line have not yet proposed the real remedy. If you want to do something effectual and something that you can defend logically and consistently on this floor or anywhere else, what should you do? What could you do that would be a real remedy on this question? If you can procure from the Congress of the United States a ban on liquor, if you can classify it with the lottery ticket or with the dangerous explosive, you can not only exclude advertisements relating to it from the mails but you can exclude the liquor itself from the channels of interstate commerce and you can absolutely stop its sale as a business in this country. There is not one of you but knows that. Why not take the real remedy, if you want to make a real fight on this question? When, however, you do it, when you act on it, when you accomplish this reform, you must do it just as it was done in the lottery case. You must make it uniform throughout the Republic and you must make your law applicable to every State in the Union. You must make your national policy, your Federal policy, as well as your Federal law, exactly the same in every State in this Republic.

Not only that, but consider the inconsistency of the position you occupy. You take intoxicating liquor, the sale of which is legalized under restrictions in most of the States of the Union; you take intoxicating liquor, the sale of which is taxed, except where prohibited by local law, by the Federal Government itself; and from the liquor taxes collected by this Government you derive the most considerable revenue that you derive from any other one item; and yet you propose to say to these people, "We will not outlaw you, because we want to tax you; we will not stamp you out, because we want to milk you; we will not put you out of business, because we want to profit by your being in the business." Ah, Senators, we must have a national policy if we are going to deal with this question as a national question, and we should adopt a consistent national policy.

If we are going to require these people to pay many millions into the Federal Treasury and are going to accept it from them, then we have no right to deny to them, as if they were criminals and outlaws, the agencies of the Federal Government for the transaction of a business we class as legitimate and which we heavily tax. We ought to do one thing or the other. We ought to treat whisky just as we treated the lottery tickets and forbid it the use of the mails of the United States or the agencies of interstate commerce in its transportation and quit taxing it, or we ought give it, as an interest that we recognize and tax, the use of all the agencies of the Government that are given to all citizens except criminals.

I did not intend to say quite so much, and I regret to say that I realize that the position I am taking on this floor this morning is one on which many warm and valued friends at home may differ with me; but it is one which I know is absolutely right; hence I must take it. I know, if I know anything, that we ought to do this thing in a frank, candid, uniform way, one way or the other.

I will tell you another thing. The legislatures of those States that are passing so-called prohibition laws, and at the same time permitting citizens to use enough liquor to keep them drunk throughout the year, have not, in my opinion, handled the question as skillfully as it might have been handled. They profess a desire to abolish the sale of liquor. Well, why not try to entirely prohibit its purchase, its sale, and its use, as far as it can be prohibited by law, instead of undertaking to give, on one hand, the prohibitionists just as radical and drastic a law as they want, and, on the other hand, to give to people who want to drink liquor just as much as they can consume without landing either in the grave or in a madhouse?

The State of Georgia has no law or policy, and can have none, with reference to what shall go in the United States mails. I say we can not deal with this question on any such basis. It is essentially and exclusively a national question. We can not run the Post Office Department as though it were a local institution. Its operations, its rules, and its regulations must be uniform throughout the Republic.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I am the owner of two papers which are published in the city of Pittsburgh, which for many years have been strong advocates of the principle of local option. Some years ago, after carefully considering the subject from all its aspects, both of those newspapers announced that from that time forward, in order to bring their advertising columns into harmony with their editorial policy, they would exclude liquor advertisements from their columns. I therefore feel a deep sympathy with the object of the legislation proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and if it were proposed as a separate bill I would hesitate long before opposing it.

I am, however, opposed to suspending the rules of the Senate for the purpose of having the amendment considered, because I think that the rule which excludes general legislation from appropriation bills, except in cases of extreme urgency, and then only practically by unanimous consent of the Senate, is a wise one; and this is not a case where it should be departed from. I shall therefore vote against suspending the rules.

Upon the merits of this proposition, while, as I have said, I am in sympathy with its object, I would be very slow about voting for any proposition to increase the right of espionage on the part of the Post Office Department over private correspondence; and, so far as it applies to letters and circulars, I do not think the legislation should be enacted under any circumstances.

With regard to the circulation of newspapers, the newspapers to which I have alluded have a large circulation in the neighboring State of West Virginia, in which an extremely stringent prohibitory law is in force. I do not know whether that law prohibits the circulation of liquor advertising within the State, but I have little doubt that it does, because if any means of preventing the citizens of West Virginia from obtaining liquor have been neglected by the authorities of that State it has been on account of an oversight on their part, for I think it is the most stringent law in force in any State of the Union.

There are other reputable newspapers published in the city of Pittsburgh, the owners of which have not seen fit to follow my example; and in so acting they are entirely within their rights. I think it would hardly be fair for me to vote for legislation that would enable my newspapers to be circulated within that State and would exclude theirs. They may in certain cases publish special editions, but a great many newspapers are circulated through the mails in such a manner that it would be impossible for the publishers of those papers to publish special editions for special localities. Take the great New York newspapers, for instance; they circulate all over the country, and it would be absolutely impossible for the publishers to so arrange their affairs as to furnish one edition of the paper to prohibition States and another edition to what may be called "wet States."

While, therefore, I sympathize, as I have stated, with the objects of this proposed legislation, I can not bring myself to advocate a policy that will enable the Post Office Department to adopt one system for one State and another system for another. It is a revolutionary proposition, and, while in these revolutionary times, we may eventually come to it, I for my part do not feel ready for it at this time. I, therefore, feel constrained to vote against suspending the rules, and if the rules are suspended I will, with considerable reluctance, vote against the proposition itself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah will state it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was suggested yesterday during the debate that the rule which provides for the suspension of any rule of the Senate required a day's notice, and that that was a substitute for the ordinary provision which required a two-thirds vote. I inquire of the Chair whether or not it will require, in the opinion of the Chair, a two-thirds vote to suspend this rule?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so announced on yesterday. In the Senate of the United States, while the present occupant of the chair has been here, on a former occasion when there was a motion to suspend the rule, the Chair submitted the question to the Senate, and the Senate decided that general parliamentary procedure should be taken into consideration, and that it required a two-thirds vote of the Senate to suspend the rules. The Chair will, in the first instance, so decide; and then nobody knows what the Senate will do on an appeal from the decision of the Chair on that question; but the ruling of the Chair is that it takes a two-thirds vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no doubt that the ruling of the Chair is correct and that the suspension does require a two-thirds vote.

Mr. President, on yesterday I interrupted the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to suggest to him that the legislation which is proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Washington was not different in principle from legislation already upon the statute books, particularly that with reference to lotteries. I have before me now the statute upon that subject, which I desire to read into the RECORD. Section 3894 of the Revised Statutes as amended in 1890 provides as follows:

SEC. 3894. No letter, postal card, or circular concerning any lottery, so-called gift concert, or other similar enterprise offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance, or concerning schemes devised for the purpose of obtaining money or property under false pretenses, and no list of the drawings at any lottery or similar scheme, and no lottery ticket or part thereof, and no check, draft, bill, money postal note, or money order for the purchase of any ticket, tickets, or part thereof, or of any share or any chance in any such lottery or gift enterprise, shall be carried in the mail or delivered at or through any post office or branch thereof, or by any letter carrier; nor shall any newspaper, circular, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of any lottery or gift enterprise of any kind offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance, or containing any list of prizes awarded at the drawings of any such lottery or gift enterprise, whether said list is of any part or of all of the drawing, be carried in the mail or delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier.

Then follows the clause prescribing the penalty for a violation of those provisions, a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Mr. President, I personally can see no difference in principle between the law which I have just read and the proposition which is made by the Senator from Washington in this amendment. In the case of the lottery or the gift enterprise we have laws which have forbidden their existence and forbidden their being carried on. Therefore the lottery and the gift enterprise are outlawed things. There was a day when they were not, when the lottery was regarded as a legitimate enterprise; but the policy of the people has changed in recent years, and they have declared that enterprises of that character henceforth shall be outlawed.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.
